Modalist's Claim: Jesus Christ, He alone is Yahweh Elohim, the God of Israel, the one God revealed in the Hebrew Scriptures, apart from Whom there is none else.

My Reply: Of course "Jesus Christ, He alone is Yahweh Elohim, the God of Israel, the one God revealed in the Hebrew Scriptures, apart from Whom there is none else." But it does not follow from this that Christ is identificationally Yahweh Elohim, that thus He is the one God of the Hebrew Scriptures.

Modalist's Claim: If Jesus Christ is not the one God of Scripture, then there is Another Who is the one God instead. But this is contradictory to what you already have claimed to believe, that Jesus Christ is the one God. You worship not one God but two, and do not really believe that there is one God but two Gods. You teach that there are two Gods; that is idolatry, and you are an idolater.

My Reply: Your argument involves the fallacy of equivocation, and is therefore invalid. Hence your bold claim as well that we are idolaters, is quite unfounded. That is, since we do not affirm that, in addition to the sense in which the Father is God, Christ as well is God in this same sense, it is pointless for you to appeal to what in itself is true, the fact that there is some sense in which we believe that there are "many gods" (1 Cor.8:5), and, in certain respects, believe that the title "God" applies to Christ.

When we use an expression in one sense in one place and in another sense in another place, and yet you argue as if we used it in the same sense in both places, you are committing a fallacy of equivocation by failing to note what we actually have done, while arguing as if we did what we did not do. Anyone who is convinced by such a claim is guilty of this fallacy, and has been convicted not by truth but merely by a specious argument. The entire notion is simply an illogical inference, not a corollary, and is therefore completely invalid.

The fallacy of equivocation is involved as well in the false conclusion, commonly entertained both by Modalists and Trinitarians, that if there is one Being Who is unoriginated and supreme to Whom the title "God" applies, since this title applies to Christ (e.g., Heb.1:8; Titus 2:13; 1 John 5:20), He is therefore unoriginated and supreme.

May we be graciously granted to be believing that "the only true God" is the One Whom the Lord Jesus Christ Himself addressed as "Holy Father" (John 17:11). In praying to His Father, Christ declared, "Now it is eonian life that they may know Thee, the only true God, and Him Whom Thou dost commission, Jesus Christ" (John 17:3).

The only true God is "the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory" (Eph.1:17). Hence, "for us there is one God, the Father, out of Whom all is . . . and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through Whom all is" (1 Cor.8:6). Though indeed, "not in all is there this knowledge" (1 Cor.8:7), may this knowledge be in us so that we may rejoice in our Lord and glorify our God in truth. J.R.C.

BLESSED IN CHRIST

We may read through the accounts of our Lord's life and the Acts without ever encountering the phrase "in Christ"; it is almost exclusively a Pauline thought. Its first occurrence is in Romans 3:24, where our deliverance is said to be "in Christ Jesus." Paul's epistles are full of it, but Hebrews and James do not contain it. In Peter and John, James and Jude it is limited to His earthly glories (1 Peter 3:16; 5:10,14; 1 John 5:20; Jude 1).

All that is ours by grace is "in Christ." Indeed we may say that, by grace, all is ours in Him, even though the blessings are confined to realms celestial. In Him there is deliverance (Rom.3:24), justification (Gal.2:17), no condemnation (Rom.8:1), freedom (Gal.2:3), holiness (1 Cor.1:2), eonian life (Rom.6:11,23), a new creation (2 Cor.5:17), and all our expectation (1 Cor.15:19). It is only as we become acquainted with His worth and high deserts that we can grasp what God has given us, for it is to be lavished upon us, not according to what we are in ourselves, but in harmony with our place in Christ.

Let us exult that our blessings are "in Christ." Were they in us, even in an infinitesimal degree, they would not be sure or satisfactory. Indeed, they would not be blessings worthy of the name. There is nothing in us to deserve them. We have not the power to preserve them. They would have no more value than an unsigned check for many millions. When tempted to doubt our possession of every spiritual blessing among the celestials, all we need to do is to remember that these are in Christ. We cannot doubt His deserts. He is entitled to all that God will give Him, and to all that we will share with Him. Outside of Christ we are mean and miserable. In Him we are rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and blessed beyond all human thoughts of bliss.

BELIEVING THE EVANGEL

THE MESSAGE of Christ crucified was a snare to the Jews (1 Cor.1:23). It by no means met their approval that God's Anointed should fail to remove the Roman yoke of bondage which lay so heavily upon the people. And that He should suffer and die, stumbled them altogether (1 Peter 2:8). To the Greeks, in their perpetual quest for "wisdom" and fondness of intellectual splendor, the heralding of Christ crucified was extremely stupid (1 Cor.1:23). For to them our Lord was merely a dead man hanging on a cross. He was not what men expected the Christ to be. Such a One as He was not acceptable to them, for He did not meet their preconceived standards.

Similarly, that our present salvation in Christ and resultant eonian life and glory should be entirely a gracious gift, and therefore a blessing which is only given to those of God's own choosing, is an altogether unacceptable concept to the great majority of those who are naming the name of the Lord. It is not what they expected the gospel to be, and, in their conceit, many consider it very significant insofar as truth is concerned that they should disapprove of it.

Nonetheless, the evangel of our salvation is that Christ died for our sins, was entombed and roused the third day according to the scriptures (1 Cor.15:3,4); that, in God's reckoning, we were crucified together with Christ, and died together with Him (Rom.6:3,8). The evangel reveals to us that before the disruption of the world, in accord with His will, for the laud of the glory of His grace, God had already chosen us in Christ, to be holy and flawless in His sight, and designated us beforehand for the place of a son for Him through Christ Jesus (Eph.1:3-6).

A HOLY CALLING

How wonderful it is to know that God saves us and calls us with a holy calling, a calling which is to be distinguished from others in which requirements are a factor, for we are saved and called not in accord with our acts, but in accord with His own purpose and the grace which is given to us in Christ Jesus before times eonian (2 Tim.1:9). What good news this is!

We are called according to the purpose that, those whom God foreknew, He designated beforehand also, to be conformed to the image of His Son, for Him to be Firstborn among many brethren. Now the truth is, those whom He designates beforehand, these He calls also, and whom He calls, these He justifies also; now whom He justifies, these He glorifies also (Rom.8:29,30). This is God's message of grace to us, we who are His chosen ones, according to Paul's evangel (Rom.8:32,33; 16:25).

Therefore, evangelization is not to be conceived as an offer of how one may qualify for glory and escape wrath, for it is not an offer at all. Instead, it is simply an announcement, a heralding of these great truths which constitute the evangel of our salvation. They are all fully true entirely apart from our faith in them and acceptance of them.

ABRAHAM, FATHER OF US ALL

Abraham is the father of us all in this very respect: God had already chosen Abraham before He made Himself known to him, and had already decided as well just what He would do for him and through him. He informed him of His plans: "A father of many nations have I appointed you" (Rom.4:17; Gen.17:5); "Thus shall be your seed" (Rom.4:18; Gen.15:5); "At I this season' I shall come 'and there will be for Sarah a son'" (Rom.9:9; Gen.18:10).

When Abraham believed God's declarations concerning himself, he did not make them true, nor did he thus qualify himself to be the object of His promises (Rom. 4:16-22). He faced the truth, and believed it of the God Who is vivifying the dead and calling what is not as if it were (Rom.4:17). For the word of God was already sure. Therefore, it was impossible for Abraham either to qualify or disqualify himself for those things which God had already decided to give him.

Abraham's faith gave him conviction and expectation; it afforded him assurance. For God had already determined what He would bring to pass with regard to Abraham and his seed prior to the time in which He revealed this to Abraham, and quite apart from any of his own opinions in the matter. Indeed, if he had failed to believe God's word to him, while it is true that he thereby would have lost all the power and joy of faith, nevertheless, he would not have nullified God's promises: "For what if some disbelieve? Will not their unbelief nullify the faithfulness of God? May it not be coming to that!" (Rom.3:3,4). The same would be true in our case, were we to disbelieve. In fact, beyond the message that Christ died for their sins, most believers seem to be full of unbelief concerning the evangel of their salvation. Yet its glorious message remains true on their behalf nonetheless.

According to His will, God graciously grants at least a small measure of faith concerning the work of Christ and His victory over death to all who are His (cf 1 Cor.15:10,11; 1 Thess.4:14; Rom.12:3). But whatever faith each one may have as a result, does not make the evangel of his salvation become applicable to him, for it was already applicable to him long before he was born, and certainly long before he first believed. One may possess great riches of which he is ignorant. As with the slaves during the American civil war who heard and believed the news of their emancipation, we do not make the gospel of our salvation true by believing it. When we believe, we only enter into a realization and appreciation of what is already true.

THE EVANGEL OF THE CIRCUMCISION

In the evangel of the Circumcision (Gal.2:7), in itself, the privilege of life in the terrestrial kingdom in the coming eon is a reward for obedience, and God is a Rewarder therein. It is not a gracious gift, or an unmerited provision. While it is quite true that the obedience of the elect in Christ under the evangel of the Circumcision is due solely to the grace of God, that is another matter.

Those who are worthy to happen upon that eon and the resurrection from among the dead (Luke 20:35), will be requited, or repaid, with the consummation of their faith, the salvation of their souls (1 Peter 1:9). On the other hand, the lawless will be requited with the wages of injustice (2 Peter 2:13). Even those who once fled from the defilements of the world by a recognition of Christ, would find their last state worse than the first if they should again be involved in these. It were better for them not to have recognized the way of righteousness, than, recognizing it, to go back to what was behind, from the holy precept given over to them (2 Peter 2:20,21). In all such cases, due to one's having disqualified himself for eonian life, such a course can only lead to eonian death (Heb.6:4-8).

Personal righteousness is a prerequisite for entrance into the kingdom of the heavens (Matt.5:17-20); the workers of lawlessness will be told to depart; only the one who does God's will may enter into life in the coming eon (Matt.7: 21-23; 1 John 2:17). In that calling, the Lord's counsel, even to the disciples, was, "If your hand should ever be snaring you, strike it off. It is ideal for you to be entering into life maimed, rather than, having two hands, to come away into Gehenna, into the unextinguished fire" (Mark 9:43).

The "wreath of life" is given to the Circumcision believers who endure trial and become qualified (James 1:1,12). In essence, the Lord informs them, "Become faithful unto death, and I shall be giving you the wreath of life" (Rev. 2:10). There is an abundance of testimony, all to this same end, throughout all of the Greek scriptures—except within the epistles of Paul in his presentation of the evangel which is for the members of Christ's body.

In Paul's evangel, with respect to one's being in Christ and receiving eonian life, personal righteousness has no place at all, and is to be deemed as refuse (Phil.3:7-9). In his evangel of grace, insofar as life eonian is concerned, "where sin increases, grace superexceeds" (Rom.5:20,21). This is not true under the evangel of the Circumcision. But it is true according to Paul's evangel for the nations, the evangel of the Uncircumcision (Gal.2:7).

REQUIREMENT, REQUITAL AND REWARD

We need to understand just what it is that constitutes one a merchant, employer or rewarder. Then, if we should find that God exhibits these characteristics with respect to our salvation in Christ, we should freely acknowledge that He is such a one, and not a dispenser of gracious gratuities.

It is a deception to reject or deny terminology which describes one's true position in an accurate way and to claim to believe the scriptural words of the evangel, when, in fact, this is not the case. We do not change the nature of our position by giving it a name which describes something else.

Men will be rewarded, or compensated, for their work, for the deeds that they do (Heb.10:35; Col.3:24). The same is true concerning one's pay or wages: "Lo! I am coming swiftly, and My wage is with Me, to pay each one as his work is" (Rev.22:12). Wages are given to the worker; they are a debt owed to him, not a gracious gift or favor (Rom.4:4). For ourselves, our own practices, both good and bad, will "fetch" (komizō, FETCH) their own "requital," or repayment (2 Cor.5:10; Eph.6:8).

An employer requires that his employee do certain work in order to receive his pay. A rewarder only grants his reward to one who qualifies himself for it by meeting the conditions of the offer. The idea is that of an exchange: this for that. One who meets the conditions or stipulations attending such an agreement obligates the one making the offer to give it to him in return. By definition, such a relationship between two parties is that of a contract or covenant.

The essential element in all such relationships is that the first party requires the second party to do or furnish to him something which upon receipt, obligates the first party to reciprocate, and thus "meet his part of the bargain."

A merchant will say to a customer, "In return for your money, I will give you my goods"; or, "Except you give me your money, I will not give you my goods." It is merely incidental that the merchant's requirement, in this example, is that of money. For it is not the nature of his requirements that makes him a merchant, but the sheer fact that he imposes requirements upon the dispensing of his goods, and will not give them out unless the requirements are met.

There is nothing at all dishonorable as to one's being a merchant, if this should be the case. But if anyone, according to his own policies, is indeed a merchant, neither he, nor we, should try to deny this.

It must be understood that in all such instances as we have illustrated, one does act as a merchant (or, as an employer or rewarder), and not at all as a dispenser of gracious gifts. He by no means gives his goods away gratuitously; for he insists that all who would acquire them meet the established conditions.

FAITH MAKES THE EVANGEL KNOWN

Therefore, it is not at all proper to attempt to represent

God in our salvation even as a man who presents a gift (such as a valuable watch) to an associate for his acceptance. In this example it is only true merely in the nature of the case that if the man would enjoy his benefactor's gift he must accept it. For the benefactor does not at all require the man to accept it, nor does he promise to kill him if he should fail to do so! And yet it is insisted that God does require our acceptance of His supposed offer, and that He will at least kill us for a time, if not torment us in fire for all eternity, if we should fail to accept it.

Besides, in this matter of the evangel of our salvation—unlike in the example of the watch—our being endowed with the graces thereof does not even involve our acceptance of the message! For Christ died for our sins whether we think so or not. In God's sight, we died to sin when He died for our sakes, even if we should deny this to be true. And, the fact is, God long ago had already chosen those of us who are now in Christ, according to His pre-eonian grace and purpose, designating us beforehand to be conformed to the image of His Son, having set His hand to call us, justify us and glorify us, all in His time.

This is the evangel of our salvation—whether we think so or not! If we are believers at all, we are included, but not because we believe. Our faith affords us assurance of our salvation in Christ; it makes the truth known to us. Indeed our being saved out of unbelief is in itself a great saving work of God (cf Eph.1:19,20; cp Col.1:13).

The evangel of our salvation (cf Eph.1:13) is fully true in itself, and entirely apart from whether we should believe some of it, all of it, or none of it. Therefore, let us stop all our ill-disguised proud boastings as to how it is that we, unlike other men, have been good enough to "accept Christ," and thus have saved ourselves from wrath while obligating God to bless us. Such concepts are present, whether expressed or not, whenever salvation is conceived in a conditional way, whenever such "steps" are believed finally to occur because of man's actions rather than God's.

Such inner pride—though in most cases it exhibits itself outwardly as well—may well pass for humility, but only among those of a similar disposition. However pleasantly it may be manifested, it is still a boasting in man, for it adds to the work of Christ. Consequently, the advocates of all such views are following a course that is destructive to faithful service in the Lord, and one's appreciation of the truth of the evangel. For, however unintentionally, in denying the full significance and purpose of the cross of Christ, they have thus become its enemies (Phil. 3:19; cp Gal.5:11b).

"Now I am making known to you, brethren, the evangel which I bring to you, which also you accepted, in which also you stand, through which also you are [being] saved, if you are retaining what I said in bringing the evangel to you, outside and except you believe feignedly" (1 Cor.15:1,2). Paul made the evangel known—the evangel that Christ died for our sins, was entombed, and that He has now been roused! If we are retaining this evangel in unfeigned faith, being attentive to it, then it is having some measure of practical saving influence upon us, cleansing and keeping us in many ways.

Yet if the evangel's significance has become clouded to us through a mistaken belief that it is finally by our own obedience—the cross of Christ notwithstanding—that we fend off God's indignation, we will lose much precious truth of great practical value. For, with such an outlook, our life of faith will necessarily become self-centered, instead of Christ-centered. "Yet God is commending this love of His to us, seeing that, while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sakes. Much rather then, justified now in His blood, we shall be saved from indignation through Him" (Rom. 5:8,9). The Problem of Evil
the Judgments of God

How can we explain the presence of evil? Is there a purpose for evil, and will it come to an end? Can there be two independent opposing forces in the universe? If God alone is supreme, what is the purpose of judgment? Surely there are answers to these troubling questions in the Word of God.

As one of its subjects, it probes and takes issue with the commonly accepted explanation that Satan, and not God, is responsible for evil. To quote the book's author: "Almost all of us are shortsighted. We see the judgments, but fail to recognize that they are only part of God's way with mankind, that they are definitely not an end. We confuse the going with the goal. Judgment is God's strange work. He uses it as a preparation toward a glorious consummation."

The message in this book is especially valuable to us in these days of doubt and distress, to lead men to rely on and rest in God alone.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, THIRD QUARTER 2021
BEING THE THIRD NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED TWELVE

EDITORIAL

We are privileged to begin this issue with A. E. Knoch's classic writing, "Among the Celestials." We find this work not only to be full of interest but most insightful as well concerning its theme—in respect both to realm and inhabitants:

For us ". . . the highest blessing does not consist in being in a place, however glorious it may be, but rather in a position of beneficence toward others. Our blessings among the celestials will correspond with the exalted opening strain of this epistle [Ephesians]. We will be blessed because we will bless. We do not look for languorous luxury or magnificent mansions, but to be the means of making others happy" (p.101).

In the article, "Whose Faith?" (p.111), Dean Hough responds to this question, saying: "The faith of Ephesians 2:8 is Christ Jesus's faith. This passage stands as the solid foundation of the transcendent riches of God's grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus just expounded in the preceding verses. These have been expressed in fact verbs: God loves us in that He vivifies us together in Christ and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials in Christ Jesus. We are to see these as settled facts, made certain because they are established and settled in Christ Jesus."

In the exposition, "Faith Accords with Grace," I explain, "With regard to God's declarations and promises concerning ourselves, as with Abraham, God has made them matters 'of faith' that they may accord with grace (Rom.4:16). The very purpose in their being matters which are of faith, is that they should already be true prior to the time in which we first believe them" (p.122).

In the next article of our current number, "Yahweh is the Only Elohim" (p.127), I consider both the meaning and usage of the title, "ELOHIM": "In the overwhelming majority of the occurrences of ELOHIM . . . this term is not used in reference to certain creatures who, in a relative sense, may also bear this title together with the Supreme, but in an absolute sense in reference to Yahweh Himself alone, Who is the supreme and only true God. For example, '. . . Yahweh, He is the only Elohim. There is no one else aside from Him' (Deut.4:35). 'So you know today, and you recall it to your heart that Yahweh, He is the only Elohim in the heavens above and on the earth beneath; there is no one else' (Deut.4:39)."

Even so, it is fallacious to suppose "that either supremacy or unoriginatedness is entailed by the word 'God' "—in itself, as such. "It is a fallacy as well that wherever the word appears it speaks of the same being. And finally, it is a fallacy that if the word is used in a certain sense in one place, it is used in the same sense in another place" (p.135).

We conclude our current issue with Brother Hough's writing, "Justified" (p.137). "When Jesus our Lord was roused from among the dead the great work of justification had been achieved, not applied to sinners, but achieved for them. He was roused because of our justifying (Rom.4:25). When He was roused, the justifying work had occurred already, and thus His rousing became the evidence that our sins have been dealt with (cp 1 Cor.15:17) . . . .

"It is out of the faith of Jesus Christ that we are justified. Justification in this literal sense is not merely a declaration of God, decreed on the basis of divine authority for the benefit of certain individuals who have taken the right steps of faith. It is a work that manifests the righteousness of God (Rom.3:21)" (p.142). J.R.C.

AMONG THE CELESTIALS

Who blesses us with every spiritual blessing, among the celestials, in Christ. (Eph.1:3)

THE Word of God opens with a significant division of the universe into two distinct spheres—the heavens and the earth. Apart from a special purpose in this distinction and a desire to emphasize the celestial sphere, the natural introduction would have embraced all in one term, and we would have read of the creation of the universe as a whole. As the account of creation proceeds, we soon see that it is practically confined to the earth. The sun, moon and stars are mentioned, but only as they are related to the main theme of the passage.

Throughout subsequent revelation, apart from occasional glimpses, such as the celestial session at the commencement of the book of Job, the Scriptures to the Circumcision are concerned with the earth. Only as celestial beings visit, or Satan and his hosts invade, the lower sphere, are we apprized of their existence. Prophets and apostles are all concerned with the restoration of the earth and anticipate a place in the millennial kingdom and the new creation. None of them hint at a celestial destiny; they know nothing of "going to heaven." David did not and will not ascend above, but will have his allotment in the land (Acts 2:34).

The blessings promised to the earth are, to a large degree, physical and soulish. The climate will be made comfortable and salubrious, the soil will be fertile, so that the vine, the fig and the olive will flourish and food will be plentiful. Disease will be banished and death almost unknown. The land will be allotted to the saints of the Circumcision, and Israel will rule the nations for God and bring them to God. They will be a Kingdom of priests. No blessing will come to the nations direct. All will flow through redeemed Israel.

Inasmuch as the rendering "among the celestials" is different from that usually given, it behooves us to examine the evidence on which it is based. The Authorized Version has "heavenly places," which Newberry changes to "heavenlies" in the margin. There is nothing to indicate that places are intended. The gender is usually given as neuter, but both the article the and the adjective have this form in the masculine as well. It may refer to celestial people as readily as to celestial places, so far as the grammar of the Greek is concerned.

In Greek a single connective, en, does duty for in and among. As a rule it should be rendered in with the singular and among with the plural. The Authorized Version recognizes this by rendering it among quite frequently in such phrases "among the people" (Matt.4:23, etc.), and "among the soldiers" (Acts 12:18), for the essential meaning of in and among is the same. The difference is entirely a matter of usage.

I suppose that all translators are agreed that ouranios, the adjective of ouranos, heaven, is correctly rendered heavenly. Four times it is applied to God as the heavenly Father (Matt.6:14,26,32; 15:13), once to the heavenly host at the birth of our Lord (Luke 2:13), and once to the apparition on the road to Damascus (Acts 26:19). This evidence is sufficient to prove that "heavenly" or even "heavenly places" is inadequate in our text, for there the word has the prefix ep- (ON-) before it. What can be meant by the ON-heavenlies?

In three contexts ON-heavenly is set in contrast to ONearthly (John 3:12; 1 Cor.15:40; Phil.2:10). It is evident that, in every case, that which is ON-earthly is actually on the earth, so that the prefix may be taken literally, and means terrestrial, as it is rendered in the fifteenth of first Corinthians. So, likewise, ON-heavenly may be taken quite literally, as that which is on the heavenly bodies. There is no English word with this precise thought, so the best we can do is to use celestial in this sense. In the singular it is little more than an alternative for heavenly, but in its plural form it comes very close to the meaning and usage of the Greek.

Our blessings, then, are indeed in heavenly places, but far more than that, they are among celestial beings, that is, those who are on the heavenly bodies as we are on the earth. This is most suggestive, for the highest blessing does not consist in being in a place, however glorious it may be, but rather in a position of beneficence toward others. Our blessings among the celestials will correspond with the exalted opening strain of this epistle. We will be blessed because we will bless. We do not look for languorous luxury or magnificent "mansions," but to be the means of making others happy.

If, then, our blessings do not consist in a selfish enjoyment of our riches in Christ, but in dispensing our wealth to others among the celestials, we are confronted with a consideration of the problem which science still seeks to solve, that is, the habitability of the planets of the solar system, or, indeed, of any of the stellar systems which are scattered over the heavens. Science is limited to the sphere of human sensation. It seeks physical evidence of the existence of beings in the heavens.

Reverent students of the Scriptures are quick to question the teachings of science, especially when its tenets seem to conflict with the Bible. So many of the theories of science, such as evolution, the geological ages and uni-formitarianism (which rejects the great cataclysmic crises of the disruption and the deluge, which have disturbed the earth's crust), clash with God's Word, that it should lead us to be careful in accepting anything not in close accord with what is written in the Scriptures of truth.

But not all science is theory. Not all is false. Not all is contrary to God's revelation. The practical benefits derived from it during the past century give evidence that man is actually becoming acquainted with the physical universe. Indeed, more progress has been made in the realm of nature than in the investigation of Scripture. Let us not reject anything simply because it is called science. Above all, let us make sure what the Scriptures actually teach before proclaiming their conflict with the knowledge of nature.

Many different cosmological theories have been presented to me for confirmation from the Scriptures, and I have examined the evidence presented with much care. I can only state my present conviction that God "is hanging the earth upon nothingness" (Job 26:7). This is the only explanation which needs no further elucidation. It is more scientific than anything science has to offer. It corresponds with every test which our senses can apply. It is the only cosmology which seems to harmonize with the celestial destiny set before us. Heaven is not a small enclosure, shut off from all else. It includes the whole universe, apart from the earth.

It is not in the least likely that mankind, as at present constituted, could live anywhere else in the universe. But God is not limited in His creation to the making of men. Even on earth we have a vast variety of forms of animal life very different from man, though they also are flesh. Birds can fly in the air and fishes can live in the depths of the sea. Why cannot God create for each sphere a creature suited to its environment? We have His definite statement that there are bodies celestial as well as terrestrial, and that these are different (1 Cor.15:40,41).

Judging from the few celestial beings who have come to visit us, the difference between a celestial and a terrestrial body consists largely in the lack of the very limitations which confine us to the earth. How can a messenger or angel, such as Gabriel, fly across the void of interstellar space without being able to overcome the force of gravitation? The larger planets or still larger stars could easily be peopled by creatures not in the least hampered by weight which would glue us to their surface.

The same is true of temperature. Few human beings could long endure exposure to the chill of an Arctic or Antarctic winter. But we are told that there is nothing else so severe as the cold of interstellar space. How could these celestial visitors withstand this, to us, unendurable frigidity? They have celestial bodies, which are like the stars, to which they are often compared. They are independent reservoirs of light and heat and power. We are absolutely dependent on the sun for life and all its factors. They are diminutive suns themselves, and do not need its ministrations.

Again, how could a human being survive the absence of all those elements which sustain his bodily frame, such as air, water and food? At present we could not. But it is not at all impossible that celestial bodies could dispense with these essentials. They are only a form of that power or energy which comes to us from the sun. So the ultimate source of physical life and activity is not the earth, but the sun, whose rays pervade the whole solar system. Even if a celestial body is dependent on the sun as ours is, it is not difficult to imagine that power could be absorbed directly, instead of through the ingestion of physical substance as at present.

Among the interesting, physical experiments of the co-founder of this magazine, V. Gelesnoff, was one by means of which he managed to extract electrical energy directly from sunlight. It was, in effect, an electric battery, consisting of certain chemicals, which could be charged by merely exposing it to sunshine. Such solar cells are now in use on the Tel Aviv-Jerusalem highway. They are absorbing solar energy by day and powering a flashing amber traffic light by night. This illustrates the point before us. There exist, in all parts of the solar system, and probably in all the universe, sufficient stores of power for the use of any body equipped to utilize it.

But it is by no means proven that the power of celestial bodies is dependent on the sun or stars. If something similar to atomic energy could be made available it would supply all the power needed to transform us all into celestial beings capable of overcoming all the forces of gravitation and able to endure any extreme of temperature and sustain life without the air or the products of the soil. The power is already provided. All that is needed is a body so changed that it can utilize it.

The greatest and grandest exhibition of the powers of a celestial body is seen in the ascension of Christ. More than that, it shows how a human body, once weary with a few hours' walk (John 4:6), once hungry for a few figs (Matt.21:18), once too weak to carry the cross to Golgotha (Luke 23:26), can be gloriously changed so as to rise without effort from the earth to vanish in the sky, and, to all appearances, leave behind it every opportunity of nourishment or repose. Cannot such a body be at home in any part of God's universe?

We may conclude then, that both nature and revelation demand the presence of celestial creatures and that these are to be found on the heavenly bodies which gleam above us in the vault of heaven. Furthermore, though now we are tied to earth, weak, inglorious vassals of the ground, wearing the image of the soilish, we shall wear the image of the celestial, and, with bodies changed, we shall rise to meet our Lord in the air, and henceforth be released from the thralldom of earth to wend our way at will among the starry hosts.

Once we realize that the universe is not a barren waste, created only to afford material for human speculation, but was formed to be inhabited by creatures made by God for His own glory, there is much we would like to know about them. Are there many or few? What are they like? Why are we not given a complete account of them in the Scriptures? These and many other questions press for answers.

It is evident that very little, indeed, is said concerning the celestials in the Scriptures. There are several good reasons which suggest themselves. First, there is our innate inability to understand what is not human. The language of mankind is not a fit vehicle for celestial things. Our Lord gave voice to this in His interview with Nicodemus. "If I tell you of the terrestrial and you are not believing, how shall you be believing if I should tell you of the celestial?" (John 3:12). This is often exemplified by those who seek to define the earth's relation to the heavens by earthborn phraseology. They do not realize its inadequacy.

It is not God's plan at present that we should know much of the affairs of the celestials, but rather that they should learn the lessons of His dealings with us. The earth is the stage on which the tragedy of the eons is enacted. No other place can claim a Golgotha. No other sphere has sunk so low in sin or has received such rich grants of grace. The apostle claims that he is a theater, not only to men, but to messengers (1 Cor.4:9). Peter tells us that they are yearning to peer into the salvation of the Circumcision (1 Pet. 1:12). Paul makes it evident that the sovereignties and authorities among the celestials are even now aware of the grace which is ours in Christ Jesus (Eph.3:10).

The fact that most of the celestial beings who have visited the earth are called messengers has led to the idea that all of the celestial host are "angels." They are only the couriers between the earth and the heavens. Those who were gazing at Paul certainly brought him no message, so we may rest assured that their message was about Paul, and was delivered to those who sent them. It seems as though the heavenly hosts took a livelier interest in Paul and his experiences than did his fellow men on earth.

The significance of human events is better known in the heavens than on the earth. Until the heavenly host apprized the shepherds, men paid no heed to the birth of the Saviour. Such prophecies as are found in Daniel were mostly communicated through the medium of messengers. The "messenger of Yahweh" was the regular channel through which He sent word to His people.

In the Hebrew Scriptures we may learn quite a little concerning messengers or "angels," and their superhuman powers. Often they appear in the form of men and do nothing out of the ordinary. At other times they are invisible, or manifest themselves in miraculous ways. A quaint and curious example comes before us at the time of Israel's wilderness journey. Balaam is confronted by the messenger of Yahweh in invisible form, but so real and substantial was his sword and the arm that wielded it, that he assured Balaam if his jenny had not interfered, he would have slain him (Num.22).

Matter is not necessarily visible to human eyes. Many hard substances not only transmit light, but are so nearly invisible to creatures such as we are that they deceive us. Many a bird has lost its life by flying full force against a pane of glass. Even living creatures, as some jellyfish, are practically invisible, especially in water. Celestial messengers are normally invisible to human eyes. Elisha was guarded by an invisible army which appeared as fire to the opened eyes of his servant (2 Kings 6:17). But transparent substances have not the power of becoming opaque at will. Another illustration will show this.

We may not be able to explain this invisibility, but even our present restricted knowledge of nature supplies evidence as to its possibility and may even give a clue as to the manner in which it may be accomplished. We may learn a lesson from the propeller of an airplane. When at rest or turning slowly it is easily seen, but as it turns faster and faster the eye refuses to follow. When in flight the propellers can seldom be discerned; they move too swiftly for human sight.

It takes power, speed, to elude the human eye. This is probably the secret of angelic invisibility. They can apply the power they possess to their bodily frames in such a way as to become unseen at will. Our Lord's resurrection body possessed this power. To become seen He did not need to "materialize," as some have suggested, for He had the same body which had suffered death. He did not vanish by going away or dematerializing, but by simply becoming unapparent to them (Luke 24:31). He was there, but invisible to the human eve.

The messenger of Yahweh did another wonderful thing when he came to Manoah and his wife (Judges 13:19-20). He ascended in the flame of the altar, thus demonstrating his defiance of the force of gravitation and his ability to bear with extremes of temperature which would end the life of one such as we are now. The same is evident in the army that hovered about Elisha, for their chariots were of fire.

To be told that our blessings are among the celestials without any previous preparation would invite incredulity and skepticism, as the idea of the resurrection did in Corinth (1 Cor.15:35). In answering the question, "With what body are they coming?" the apostle prepares us for the heavenly destiny now revealed. He does not content himself with making the resurrection body incorruptible, glorious, powerful and spiritual, but insists on a still greater change than these words suggest. It will no longer be soilish, but celestial. It is no longer to be a terrestrial body. We are to wear the image of the celestial (1 Cor.15:39-52). This much he made known to the Corinthians long before the secret of Ephesians was revealed.

Even earlier in his ministry he wrote to the Thessalonians in a similar strain. The Lord's descent from heaven for us will not bring Him down to earth. That will occur later when He comes to the Circumcision. He will call us up to meet Him in the air (1 Thess.4:16-18). And, henceforth we are to be with Him thus. Such an ascent demands powers far superior to those which we now have. It practically involves the possession of a celestial frame such as the Circumcision do not enjoy.

With these two premises—that we shall receive a celestial body in the resurrection, and shall rise to meet the Lord and always be with Him—we might easily reason out the celestial destiny which accords with the revelation of the mystery. Of what use would celestial bodies be on the earth? And surely the Lord Himself, since He does not even come down to earth to receive us, is not coming to set us back on the earth after a brief sojourn in the air, for the earth is about to be the scene of awful judgments from which His presence rescues us.

Since we have such a destiny it is natural that we should wish to learn as much as possible of the celestial beings and even gain all the information we can concerning the heavenly bodies. For this we are still largely dependent on the telescope. For the former we have recourse to a microscopic examination of the Scriptures.

As we are to rule in the celestial realms, they are introduced to us in terms which describe various forms of government. There are sovereignties, authorities, powers and lordships (Eph.1:21). In this regard the celestial realms are like the earth. The same terms can be applied to both. Government so highly specialized as these words indicate, assures us of the presence of rational, intelligent, yet insubordinate creatures, with a capacity for the enjoyment of God, but evidently not sufficiently acquainted with Him to be left without creature restraint.

Like those of earth, the celestial rule and influence is apportioned to various grades. The highest are called sovereignties. These are first-rate powers or empires. The term "principality," if taken in its literal sense of principal, would be a good English equivalent, but it is now used of small or subordinate princedoms. Thus, Wales is a principality, but Great Britain is a sovereign power. The sovereignty is the highest form of celestial government.

The celestial domains, like those of earth, are divided into lesser jurisdictions. The authorities at the head of these dependencies possess delegated power similar to the governor of a province. Pilate is an apt example of such power exercised in behalf of Caesar.

The companion terms, power and lordship, seem to be close synonyms of the first pair, sovereignty and authority. Power, or ability to enforce its will, is characteristic of sovereign states, so that they are frequently called "powers." The Greek word for lordship is similarly related to authority. It comes from a root meaning SANCTION. So that an authority is such, not because of its power, but because it has the sanction of its superior sovereignty.

These celestial beings must never be confused with the messengers or "angels." It is certainly a crude conception of heaven which peoples it with nothing but messengers. Earthly courts have their couriers, to keep them in contact with distant realms. But no one ever imagines that whole kingdoms are composed of couriers because one has come on a visit. The fact that a celestial visits the earth in itself constitutes him an "angel." No other would be sent.

No one would presume to tell us the number of the stars. Only a very few, comparatively, are visible to the unaided eye. Even the observer at the most powerful telescope sees only a small fraction of those known to exist. The photographic lens reveals millions invisible to human gaze. But it is most wholesome to know that their number is so vast, for the great God Who made them all is greatly magnified by His handiwork.

Neither can anyone presume to take a census of the starry realm. But enough is told us to show that their number is beyond all human computation. We are given a hint as to the number of messengers. In the last book of the Bible (Rev.5:11) we are told that ten thousands of ten thousands and thousands of thousands surround the throne. There are evidently more than a hundred million of them. Each one could readily represent the same number of celestials, so that there may easily be billions on billions in the celestial spheres. Let it suffice us to know that we are not to be the channel of blessing to a few angels, but to numbers of celestials so vast that, even if we knew the figures, they would be beyond our mental comprehension.

Let us revel in our privileges and prospect. The heavens are higher than the earth and we are highest in the heavens. The lowest in this celestial exaltation would not exchange with John should he be granted the seat at the right hand of Christ in the Kingdom. Messengers, whose majesty and might would make us quail and quake at present, will be beneath our sway in the celestial realms. The highest dignitaries in the universe will gladly bow before the members of Christ's body, which will have the place supreme, not only in rule, but in the dispensation of God's favor and in the reconciliation of the celestial hosts to Him. We who were last have become first. Such is the potency of grace!

WHOSE FAITH?

THE FAITH of Ephesians 2:8 is Christ Jesus's faith. This passage stands as the solid foundation of the transcendent riches of God's grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus just expounded in the preceding verses. These have been expressed in fact verbs: God loves us in that He vivifies us together in Christ and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials in Christ Jesus. We are to see these as settled facts, made certain because they are established and settled in Christ Jesus.

How important is it that these acts of God are carried out in Christ Jesus? The phrase itself appears so often in Ephesians that we might call the epistle the "In-Christ Epistle"—in Christ, in the Beloved, in Him, in Whom, in the Christ, in the Lord Jesus, in Christ Jesus, in Christ Jesus, our Lord, in the Lord, in Jesus. Each designation points to Him in a certain way in accord with its context. Ephesians 2:5 has "in the Christ" and verse 6 and 7 both have "in Christ Jesus," and this is repeated in verse 10, "For His [God's] achievement are we in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready [readies] beforehand, that we should walk in them." We see, then, that the context here lays emphasis on Him as God's Anointed One, His Title of glory, and adds His Name of humiliation and obedience as the Saviour, Jesus, Who makes the grace of God known.

But where is He in verse 8? God is there, for the grace is His grace as established in verse 7. And we are there as the ones having been saved. Is it also, as widely understood, that we are there as the ones through whose faith we have been saved? The "you" here are believers, but our faith is not coupled with God's grace in this completed work of salvation which is not out of ourselves. The salvation is in God's grace through Christ Jesus's faith.

THE PREPOSITION "THROUGH"

The preposition "through" does not appear so often in Ephesians as the preposition "in." But in certain key cases it is used with Christ or His death as its object. God designates us for the place of a son "through Christ Jesus" (Eph.1:5). And we are having the deliverance in Christ Jesus "through His blood" (Eph.1:7). In accord with this we learn that God reconciles those termed "Uncircumcision" who were once far off with those termed "Circumcision" in one body "through the cross," for "through Him" [Christ], we both have had the access in one spirit to the Father[1] (Eph.2:11-18). This matter of access to God as our Father comes before us again in Ephesians 3:12 where we read: "In Him [Christ Jesus, our Lord] we are having boldness and access with confidence, through His faith." This is definitely not our faith. It is the faith of Christ Jesus, our Lord, His faith that God's will must be done and that it was the right way even when, in the case of the cross, it was not His own will (cf Matt.26:38-44).

With this in view we are ready to return to Ephesians 2:8. But one more passage beckons. Surely (it will be thought) Ephesians 3:17 speaks of the faith of believers, through which Christ's dwelling in our hearts may be grasped. Yet we need to note the definite article shown by the raised dot before "faith." Paul speaks of "the faith," that is, a definite faith, which would seem to point back to verse 12 where he refers to (as the Greek puts it literally) "the faith of Him," that is the faith of Christ Jesus, our Lord.

1. Note the connection with the place of a son and our access to the Father.

His dwelling in our hearts is a matter of God's grace and blessing which comes about through Christ's faith and love, which is expressed later in Ephesians 5:2 as His giving up of Himself for us as an approach present and a sacrifice to God, for a fragrant odor.

To review: the blessing of sonship with which we are blessed by God (blessed is He as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ) is channeled to us through Christ Jesus (Eph.1:5), that is, through His faith in dying for us, His love indeed that He dies for all, and thus all die proleptically (2 Cor.5:14). We are having deliverance from what we are in Adam, the old humanity—deliverance which comes through Christ Jesus's blood, His faithful suffering and death in accord with God's purpose (Eph.1:7). The reconciliation of us who once are far off with those near is an evangel of peace which comes about through Christ, that is, by His blood (Eph.2:13,18). This peace involves access in one spirit to God as our Father, which is elaborated in Ephesians 3:12 as a matter of boldness and confidence through the faith of Christ Jesus our Lord. Finally, the prayer that we may be strong to grasp the breadth and length and depth and height of God's love revealed in the secret of the joint body and our celestial expectation includes the dwelling of Christ in our hearts through the channel of His faith and love (Eph.3:14-18).

All of these blessings are channeled through Christ Jesus's faith. And this is for our faith.

With this in view we can now return to Ephesians 2:8, which, may be arranged as a hymn along with verses 9 and 10.

EPHESIANS 2:8-10

8 For in ·grace ¦are =you ones having been saved through His faith,
And this is not out of =you;

It is God's ·approach present,
9 Not out of works, lest anyone should boast°.
10 For His achievement ˡare we,
Created in Christ Jesus on for good works,
Which ·God makes ready beforehand,
That we should walk in them.

Even as God will display the riches of His grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus, so God has saved us in grace through the Same One's faith. This is the pattern of Ephesians 1:5 and 1:7 and 2:16,18, and 3:12 and 3:17, and only this harmonizes fully with the rest of this hymn.

If we have been saved through our faith, how does this fit in with the "this is not out of you"? If it is our faith then God's approach present is limited in its effect. If it is not of our works, but still of our faith, boasting is not entirely excluded. What we are is therefore not wholly God's achievement, for our faith has thus entered into the process. We are ones having been saved, and this is God's achievement. God has created us in Christ Jesus as saved ones who are created for good works which God makes ready for us to walk in. The salvation and the achievement are God's, in His grace, through Christ Jesus Whose faith is shown in His becoming God's approach present.

ON BELIEVING

Yet of course Ephesians directs attention in its opening prayer to "this faith" of ours (Eph.1:15), which is "the word of truth" that we are believing (Eph.1:13). The faith that accords to us is the message that centers on the faith of Christ Jesus and brings us of the nations who once are far off near (with boldness and access) to God. This is by His blood (Eph.2:13) which is to say by His faith through great suffering in His obedience to the death of the cross. Even as, in Romans, where God's evangel is a message of salvation revealing God's righteousness "out of [Christ's] faith, for [our] faith" (Rom.1:17), so the evangel of our salvation in Ephesians is the message opening up transcendent glories in Christ, channeled through His faith. Our faith is in His faith. The message of His faith is for our faith.

Consequently, we are told that "on believing" this evangel we are sealed with the holy spirit of promise—sealed to the deliverance of that which has been procured (Eph. 1:13,14).

To be sure, we can call this sealing a "salvation" which begins when we believe this message of the completed salvation which is in God's grace and through Christ Jesus's faith. Indeed that is how Paul puts it in 1 Corinthians 15:1,2. We are presently being saved through our acceptance and believing and retaining of the evangel Paul brings. But the evangel which we are believing is an announcement of a completed salvation. It tells us of Christ's faith (not ours), His faith in dying for our sins and being entombed, and that He has been roused (1 Cor.15:3,4).

Ephesians 1:13,14 speaks of our believing of the evangel of our salvation. Ephesians 2:8-10 is the evangel of our salvation which we have heard and accept and believe in accord with the measure of faith God graciously gives us. And this evangel is an announcement of God's grace channeled through Christ Jesus's faith. It tells us we have been saved. We have been saved in God's grace, through Christ Jesus's faith, and this (this whole operation of God's grace channeled through Christ Jesus's faith) is not out of us. It is God's approach present. It is not out of our works, but through our Lord's faith (which indeed speaks of a most tremendous and meritorious work).

This distinction must be kept in view. The sealing and the being saved from much irreverence and from much ignorance and much that presses down on us in this life is associated with our believing of the evangel. But the salvation completed at the cross (we cannot believe we have been saved unless it is true that we have been saved) is completed through Christ Jesus's faith.

This is verified by parallel passages elsewhere such as the following:

Ephesians 2:8 opens with the word "grace" (literally, "the grace") in the dative case, which the CV translates as "in grace."[2] This usage of "grace" in the dative case occurs also in Romans 3:24 with the addition of the pronoun, "His," referring to God, which the CV renders "in His grace." There also it is followed by a "through" phrase: "through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus." That phrase corresponds with the highly significant phrase in Romans 3:22, "through Jesus Christ's faith." "Jesus Christ's faith" refers to His death, and "the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus" refers to one of its results, that is, God's achievement (that which has been procured) by means of the faithful obedience of our Lord in dying for our sins.

Furthermore, where Romans 3:24 has "being justified gratuitously," Ephesians 2:8 has "having been saved, and this is not out of you." Justification is a specific aspect of salvation which is gratuitous, not out of us, but rather channeled to us through the death of Christ as the Saviour.

In addition the Romans passage is followed in 3:27 with the logical and fully appropriate questions and answers: "Where, then, is boasting? It is debarred! Through what law? Of works? No! But through faith's law." Likewise

2. This could be rendered "to grace" or "by grace," but using what is called the dative of location, the CV takes Paul to speak of grace as the environment in which we have been saved; see the article by A. E. Knoch entitled "In Grace and Out" in Unsearchable Riches, First Quarter, 2021, especially pages 44-46.

Ephesians 2:9 declares that God's approach present, which is the means of our salvation in His grace through the faith of Christ Jesus, that is, His death, is "not of works lest anyone should boast," glorying in their own acts. Salvation as a completed blessing is not of ourselves! It is gratuitous in God's grace through Christ Jesus's faith! The pattern of God's evangel set forth in Romans 3:21-26 is the pattern of the evangel of our salvation set forth in Ephesians 2:8.

GALATIANS 2:16

Galatians 2:16 which refers explicitly first to "Christ Jesus's faith" and then to "Christ's faith" is also a telling parallel to Ephesians 2:8. Justification is not out of works except through [the "law" of] Christ Jesus's faith. Here Paul indulges in wordplay giving a double meaning to the term "law," first, literally in reference to works imposed on Jews as human beings by the law given at Sinai, and then viewing Christ Jesus's faith figuratively as a law work ("faith's law") which He maintained fully and successfully—the one exception to the failure of law works to result in justification. We see the same "law" in Galatians 6:2 where Paul directs us to be bearing one another's burdens and thus "fill up" in our present behaviour, "the law of Christ," that is, His law of faith in His bearing of the burdens of humanity in His death. So in Ephesians 2:8 our completed salvation is to be seen as channeled through [the law of] Christ Jesus's faith. It is out of [sourced in] Christ's faith and not out of human law works.

Traditionally these passages have been understood as contrasting human works of law with the believers' faith. There is certainly a contrast there, but our believing is an act,[3] although a mental one. Yet even where human faith is as great and pure as Abraham's, it is not perfect, but only in accord with the measure graciously granted by God (Rom.12:3; Phil.1:29). Indeed the contrast between Christ's faith and human works is much more relevant and impressive to our understanding of the evangel of our salvation in God's grace than the traditional understanding where Christ is left out of the contrast.

3. "act" and "work" are translations of the same Greek word.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Thus Ephesians 2:8 can be clearly seen (as it truly is) to be an announcement of God's grace through Christ's faith in obedience unto the death of the cross. It is not a contract where God's grace is dependent on our faith. The evangel of our salvation is an announcement of what God has done through the faith and love of Christ Jesus, Who gives Himself up for us, an approach present and a sacrifice to God.

Now we can appreciate God's grace of salvation more clearly and begin to grow in realization of it more surely. It is not out of ourselves. What we are is God's achievement in and through His Son.

All of this is in delightful harmony with those passages which speak explicitly of Christ's faith: God's righteousness manifested through Jesus Christ's faith (Rom.3:21,22); His righteousness displayed out of Jesus's faith (Rom.3:26); the human being justified through Christ Jesus's faith we also believe in Christ Jesus that we may be justified out of Christ's faith (Gal.2:16); Paul living in the faith of the Son of God (Gal.2:20); the promise out of Jesus Christ's faith given to those who are believing (Gal.3:22); we are having boldness and access with confidence, through His faith (Eph. 3:12); and Paul not having his righteousness, which is out of law, but that which is through Christ's faith (Phil.3:9).

FAITH ACCORDS WITH GRACE

IN THIS ERA of great withdrawal from the faith, it is nearly always claimed that salvation in Christ is conditional. Those who express interest in meeting God's supposed requirements are considered "candidates" for salvation. Of course in such an environment words like "free" and "grace" will almost surely be present as well. Many will acknowledge that men cannot come to Christ apart from God's call and that salvation is of the Lord. But in the presence of a basic representation of salvation as a thing of reward, all claims about "free grace" necessarily become nominal, mere "empty words" through which many are seduced (Eph. 5:6). It is dishonest to attempt to deny this, or to cloud the issues. Yet it is the work of the Adversary to do this very thing, and he does it well (cf 2 Cor.11:3,4; 11:13-15).

ANNOUNCING THE EVANGEL

Rather than presenting the unbeliever with an offer, the announcement to him should be that Jesus the Nazarene is indeed the Christ of God, and that He died for the sins of the unbeliever as well as those of the believer, in the grace of God having tasted death for the sake of everyone. If he genuinely believes, having done so apart from all threatenings and inducements merely to profess that which is not his own, he should in due time be taught the counsels of God. It is especially important for the believer to learn of those things with which he is personally concerned as a member of the body of Christ. Apart from either frantic hurry or undue delay, he should be taught basic truths such as our election in Christ before the disruption of the world, and God's great goal, to become All in all at the consummation.

At no time should the salvation which we have in Christ be presented as a reward, and certainly not as a mere refusable offer that depends upon man as the key to its success.

SUFFERING EVIL WITH THE EVANGEL

If it must be that some cannot agree, let us all, above all else, seek to be walking worthily of the calling with which we were called, with all humility and meekness, with patience, "bearing with one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit with the tie of peace" (Eph.4:1-3). Let us rejoice that the infirm one in the faith, whoever he may be, will be made to stand, "for the Lord is able to make him stand" (Rom.14:4).

To those who are able to perceive the true graciousness of the evangel (cf Col.1:6), we would say, Be prepared to "suffer evil with the evangel" (2 Tim.1:8). For men love the darkness rather than the light (John 3:19). They may follow error out of ignorance, but this is no indication that they will turn from it when it is exposed in its true character. To the contrary, it may be that at such times they will contend for it all the more zealously. We once did the same, and are by no means superior to others.

If we should find that God has graciously enlightened us concerning the faith, and yet would avoid being puffed up, let us always seek to think and act in ways that accord with this glorious evangel. "Now may the God of expectation be filling you with all joy and peace in believing, for you to be superabounding in expectation, in the power of holy spirit" (Rom.15:13).

RECEIVING AND ACCEPTING CHRIST

When we believe the evangel, we believe Christ. Upon believing, having heard the word of truth, the evangel of our salvation, we are sealed with the holy spirit of promise (Eph.1:13). Thus we first "accept" (or "take along," paralambanō) Christ, as well as the evangel that He died for our sins according to the scriptures (Col.2:6; 1 Cor. 15:3). One should never put a contractual connotation upon the word "accept" when speaking of our initial acceptance of Christ. There is nothing contractual in the evangel of grace, nor can there be.

The Greek term for "accept" is a compound expression, para and lambanō. The first part means "beside"; the second part means "come into possession of" (KEYWORD CONCORDANCE, entry "get," p.121). When lambanō is used actively it is translated in the CV by "take"; when it is used passively, it is rendered "obtain" (in many cases, the AV gives the sense well by the rendering "receive"). Often it is translated in the CV simply as "get." The compound, BESIDE-GET, in addition to being rendered "accept," is often translated "take along" (e.g., Matt.2:13,14). These English variants are required because of the differences between Greek and English idiom. In all cases, the reference is to that which one somehow comes to have, or possess.

However, popular misuse of these words has caused much confusion. This is true both of the word "receive" (as in the emotional appeals made to the unbeliever to "receive" Christ), and with the term "accept" as well (as in, "If you would avoid eternal burnings, 'accept' Him today"). That is, the connotations and inflections foisted upon these words by preachers, are strictly their own. They find no support whatever in the Scriptures.

The apostle Paul makes it plain that all that we have—whether riches, health, success, understanding, self-discipline, willingness or faith—is that which we have received from God. Everything we possess is given to us by God, even those things which we "take" to ourselves through much time and effort. "He Himself gives to all life and breath and all" (Acts 17:25).

PRIDEFUL EXALTATION

The inveterate pride of man is exemplified in all its horror in the person of the Pharisee who prayed—and yet "prayed this toward himself," (Luke 18:11) saying—"'God, I am thanking you that I am not even as the rest of men, rapacious, unjust, adulterers, or even as this tribute collector. I am fasting twice of a sabbath. I am taking tithes from all whatever I am acquiring.' Now the tribute collector, standing afar off, would not even lift up his eyes to heaven, but beat his chest, saying, 'God, make a propitiatory shelter for me,[1] the sinner!' I am saying to you, this man descended to his home justified, rather than that one, for everyone who is exalting himself shall be humbled, yet he who is humbling himself shall be exalted.'"

When noting the differences between ourselves and others, do we ever stop to think, and then face the fact that all these things have their own cause? They are all caused to be as they are. Do we realize that it is therefore altogether foolish to be "puffed up" about our own virtues while looking down upon others in their weaknesses? To the proud Corinthians the apostle Paul says, "For who is making you to discriminate [that is, to 'differ']? Now what are you having which you do not obtain [or, "receive"]? Now if you obtain it also [even as others], why are you boasting as though you do not obtain?" (1 Cor.4:7). May God grace us all, as those who have received and accepted Christ, to stop thanking ourselves for this, and recognize that this was "neither of the will of the flesh, neither of the will of a man, but of God" (cf John 1:12,13).

1. Literally, "be being propitiated to me," that is, favorably inclined.

JUSTIFIED BY FAITH

When we believe, our faith is reckoned, or accounted, for ("into," eis) righteousness (Rom.4:5). God considers our faith in His declarations to be a righteous faith; for it is always right to believe what He says. However, salvation from sin is only to be found in the work of Christ, not in one's faith in the work of Christ.

Paul does not say that to him who is not working, yet is believing (Rom.4:5), his faith qualifies him for salvation! He does not say that we are justified because we believe or in return for believing. This is not the case. Our Lord "was roused," not merely to make it possible for us to be justified, but "because of our justifying" (Rom.4:25). "Justified, then, out of His faith, we may be having peace toward God, through our Lord, Jesus Christ" (Rom.5:1). We are justified out of Christ's own personal faith (Rom.3:22,26). It is not through our faulty faith, but through the matchless faith of our Lord Jesus Christ that we have peace toward God. His work of faith affords this to us. Our faith only makes this known to us.

With regard to God's declarations and promises concerning ourselves, as with Abraham, God has made them matters "of faith" that they may accord with grace (Rom. 4:16). The very purpose in their being matters which are of faith, is that they should already be true prior to the time in which we first believe them.

God "is justifying the irreverent" (Rom.4:5), doing so gratuitously, in His grace (Rom.3:24). In the very nature of things, when acting in grace, God must act purposefully, according to His choice and apart from any obligation to requite His creatures for their actions (cf Rom.9:11; 11:6).

It is fitting that those chosen ones who are called in this current era of the display of God's righteousness (Rom. 3:26) should have faith. Their faith points to Christ, in Whom, through His sacrificial death, God's righteousness is manifested. It is manifested, not through our faith, but "through Jesus Christ's faith" (Rom.3:22). God unveils (cf Rom.1:17) His righteousness to men by justifying them gratuitously in His grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:24). This glorious gratuity is "for all," "for all sin and are wanting of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). It has been bestowed upon God's chosen ones at present (it is "on all who are believing"; Rom.3:22). God has done this in order that we might constitute a special display, or example, of this great blessing which He has purposed for all. Through the obedience of Christ, this and related glorious benefits will actually be given to all mankind (cf Rom.5:15,16,18,19).

NOT WORKING, YET BELIEVING

Many eagerly seek to point out to us that faith is not work. However, they only do this in the interest of making faith—though technically not work—a "condition of salvation" nonetheless. If they cannot qualify by their good deeds, they hope to at least be able to do so by their faith. They would not have God save them solely because of His love and grace, according to His own will, power and purpose. Besides, "if that were true" all the glory would be His!

What they fail to realize is that while faith, in itself, is not an act, one's possession of it is nonetheless the product of mental activity. Indeed, when one is actively engaged in believing, he is involved in much mental work.

Many are more persuaded by a single inference of their own—no matter how poor—than by all the plain declarations of Scripture to the contrary. For example, many attempt to validate the idea of conditional salvation by citing Paul's statement in Romans 4:5 concerning one who is "not working, yet is believing." The usual assertion concerning these words is to the effect that one may believe and yet still avoid all work. From this it is inferred that while one cannot qualify for salvation by "working," he must qualify for it by believing. It is supposed that if one should be found believing, doubtlessly his believing constitutes the fulfillment of a requirement! Thus conditional salvation is "proved" to be true, and all else in the Word of God twisted in order to conform to this false idea.

THE EVANGEL DEBARS BOASTING

It needs to be recognized that any issues concerning the nature of human choice simply have no bearing on the theme of the saving work of Christ. This is because, considered at its deepest level, salvation is without fail a matter of gratuitous grace, not of qualification or reward. Boasting in man, then, is debarred; to God alone be the glory. Since we are justified gratuitously—without any warrant, insofar as anything we may have done is concerned—we cannot boast in ourselves that we are justified (Rom.3:27).

The truth of the evangel—the grace of God in truth—debars all boasting in man (Rom.3:27). The evangel of grace precludes boasting; this is to say that it is afforded no place in which it might even possibly be exercised. It is not merely that we should not boast, but that, in ourselves, we cannot boast! "Now may it not be mine to be boasting, except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Gal.6:14).

Since we are believers, we are to recognize that God has called and justified us at this time. But we are not to imagine that inasmuch as most men persist in unbelief, He therefore intends to damn them for all eternity.

GOD'S GOODNESS TOWARD ALL

Our faith is evidence of our calling (1 Cor.1:23,24), of our having been chosen (1 Cor.1:26-29) for membership in the body of Christ and for life eonian. If others do not believe, they will not enjoy the life of the coming eons. But this is only because, according to God's wise counsels and purpose, they have not been chosen for this particular allotment.

We ourselves have not been chosen to have a part among those who will be vivified at the consummation, which will doubtlessly be an inexpressibly glorious experience for all concerned. We will never know the experience of having been brought from under the rod of God's indignation in severe chastening judging, only to be embraced in the arms of His love at the consummation. Let us not underestimate the preciousness of this blessing for those for whom it is intended.

It is true that we will have been vivified already, long before this time. Unlike the unbeliever, we are saved from indignation, and will enjoy life in the eons of the eons. But let us never glory in our own blessings in ways that lead us to doubt the goodness of God's counsels concerning the rest of men.

Since God is so exceedingly good, all will receive whatever is best for Him and best for them. This is true even if this should include the experience of a temporary enlistment as a vessel of indignation in order that man's unrighteousness might commend God's righteousness (cf Rom.3:5; 9:22).

When we believe God in these matters, our faith accords with His operations in grace, and is centered in His gracious promises. Thus we are enabled to believe, and to rejoice in our happy expectation. Let us be invigorated by the grace which is in Christ Jesus (cf 2 Tim.2:1)!

J.R.C.

YAHWEH IS THE ONLY ELOHIM

"GOD IS SPIRIT" (John 4:24). "God no one has ever seen" (John 1:18a). Since God is spirit, He is therefore invisible, intangible, imperceptible. He is all-sufficient; He is omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient. While such, indeed, are among God's attributes, it is not inherent in this title (i.e., "the Subjector," or "God") that this is so. God alone is unoriginated and supreme; but it is neither entailed in nor does it follow from the fact that the Almighty is "God" that He is unoriginated and supreme.

It is true that in certain of its occurrences, the primary divine title, ELOHIM, does not refer to the supreme and only true God, but to a plurality of certain of His creatures. Clearly, in such cases, reference is made to a plural number of such beings, each one of whom, in some capacity, is a "subjector."

In the overwhelming majority of the occurrences of ELOHIM, however, this term is not used in reference to certain creatures who, in a relative sense, may also bear this title together with the Supreme, but in an absolute sense in reference to Yahweh Himself alone, Who is the supreme and only true God. For example, ". . . Yahweh, He is the only Elohim. There is no one else aside from Him" (Deut.4:35). "So you know today, and you recall it to your heart that Yahweh, He is the only Elohim in the heavens above and on the earth beneath; there is no one else" (Deut.4:39).

There are not only those both in heaven and on earth who are termed "GODS" (or "ELOHIM"), but there are also those who are "GODS" ("there are many gods and many lords"; 1 Cor.8:5). "Nevertheless," declares the apostle Paul, "for us there is one God, the Father, out of Whom all is . . . ."(1 Cor.8:6).

Just as Paul identifies to us Who the one true God is, saying that He is "the Father, out of Whom all is:" Moses identified the one true God to Israel, declaring that He is the One Whose name is Yahweh.[1]

Indeed, this is Israel's great confession: "Hear, Israel! Yahweh [is] our Elohim; Yahweh [the only] One" (Deut.6:4).

"The first Hebrew sentence that a Jewish child learns is [this very verse]:

SH'MA YISRAEL YAHWEH ELOHENU YAHWEH ECHAD
Hear, Israel! Yahweh our-Elohim, Yahweh One

"The observant Jew is required to recite it twice daily, in the morning and at nightfall, together with three related passages. He may add verse 5 ("So you will love Yahweh your Elohim with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your intensity"), sometimes including the following verses 6-9; also Deuteronomy 11:13-21 and Numbers 15:37-41"[2]

1. The Divine Name, Yahweh, is composed of the elements of the verb "to become." Yahweh is "I am that I am:" or literally, "I am becoming Who I am becoming" (Ex.3:14). In Revelation 1:8 John seems to give the meaning of the Name for His Greek readers: Who is and Who was and Who is coming (cf 1:4; 4:8 and 11:17; 16:5 where the future is omitted). Though these passages in Revelation speak directly of God Himself in contrast to Jesus Christ (cp 1:5), it is important to remember that while, absolutely speaking, Christ is not God Himself ("Yahweh," in the Old Testament), representatively speaking, Christ indeed is Yahweh, Who alone is God Himself (cp Zech.14:3,4).

2. Herman H. Rocke, Unsearchable Riches, vol.78, p.280.

The sense is that not two (or more) are Israel's "elohim," but only one is their Elohim. That one is Yahweh alone. To express the ellipsis inherent in the second clause, we would say, "Yahweh is our Elohim; Yahweh—One—[is our Elohim]."[3]

The title of this Jewish key prayer, "Shema," is taken from the first word of Deuteronomy 6:4, Sh'ma (Hear!). Most Jewish translators and commentators give the sense the same as that which appears in the Concordant Version. "The belief that God [Elohim] is made up of several personalities, such as the Christian belief in the Trinity, is a departure from the pure conception of the Unity of God. Israel has throughout the ages rejected everything that marred or obscured the conception of pure monotheism it had given the world, and rather than abandon that pure monotheism, rather than admit any weakening of it, Jews were prepared to wander, to suffer, to die."[4]

"Yahweh" is the name of the divine Being Himself, Whose chief title is "Elohim." The literal significance of the word ELOHIM is "TOward-SUBJECTORS."

The shortest form of the divine title, El, which is singular, is the same in form as the connective to and the pronoun these. To and these indicate the direction, disposition, or subjection of that which is in view. For example, "The water from under the heavens shall flow together to one place" (Gen.1:9), disposes or subjects the waters. "These are the genealogical annals" (Gen.2:4), places the generations before the mind of the reader. This is the underlying thought in accord with the true proverb, "Man proposes but [God] disposes."[5] It would seem, then, that the essential thought of the divine title (which appears in three forms, El, Eloah, and Elohim) is Subjector, Disposer, or Placer.

3. The Authorized Version rendering of Deuteronomy 6:4, ". . . the LORD our God is one LORD," is confusing and misleading. The Revised Version (1901) is to be commended for including the correct sense in its margin (". . . Jehovah is our God, Jehovah alone"). The Revised rendering, however, which appears in its main text, ". . . Jehovah our God is one Jehovah," is even more perplexing than the AV translation.

We may be certain that this assumption is correct since the Greek equivalent, Theos, which is derived from the-, PLACE, signifies the Placer. This may be confirmed from many words which share this common stem such as tithêmi, place, lay, appoint, assign, or atheteō, which means "repudiate" or have no place for. The meaning of the- may be seen as well in such English words as theme, thesis, and theater, in which a certain entity (whether a topic, proposition, or drama) is placed before an audience.

The intermediate form of the divine title is Eloah, which is also singular. 41 of its 58 occurrences appear in the book of Job. In order to express motion or direction, the ending -ah is occasionally postfixed to a noun, such as west*ward* (Num.2:18). This same ending, which means -ward (i.e., "[to]ward"), appears in Elo*ah* as well. This calls to mind John 1:1 where we read that "the WORD was toward God." We are mindful that Christ's name is called the "Word" (or "Expression") of God in Revelation 19:13. Surely all that Christ is and does directs us toward God.

It is conceivable that the title Eloah, in an ideal sense, was especially intended to reflect the general direction of Christ's activity, which is God*wards, toward*-the-Deity, toward-the Subjector, toward-El. Perhaps certain of its usages even entail this thought though we cannot be certain. That the word indentifies the one so termed as Christ however, is not something that these morphological considerations themselves can prove. Indeed, in certain instances, we may be sure that ELOAH does not in any respect speak of the true God, Eloah of Israel, but of a foreign eloah or god (e.g., Dan.11:37,39). The main point to note, however, is that whatever the original reason may have been (which may be lost to antiquity) for the employment of this special singular form which incorporates a suffix signifying -ward, this form as well, when used of the Eloah of Israel, ultimately directs us to the only true God.

The longest form of the divine title, Elohim, which contains the plural ending im, occurs much more frequently than either of the other forms. In a number of its occurrences it speaks of a plurality of beings, of various creatures, whether righteous or unrighteous, whether in heaven or on earth, of whom all are in some respect "subjectors," working toward the accomplishment of their own purposes, which, in the highest sense, all direct us toward God and the accomplishment of His purpose (cp Isa.10:5-15). All such "subjecting ones," in one way or another, are engaged in subjecting others, in the disposition of their affairs, in placing them under a certain authority. And, all such ones, in so acting, are the agents of the Supreme Subjector; thus they are included among "the men of His counsel" (cp Isa.46:11).

Many of the passages in which "elohim" appears merely speak of the idolatrous "elohim" the gods of the nations which Israel was prone to worship. Aaron declared to Moses: "The anger of my lord must not grow hot. You know the people that they are unbridled, for they said to me: Make elohim for us who shall go before us, for this Moses, the man who brought us up from the land of Egypt we know not what has become of him" (Ex.32:22,23; cit. Acts 7:40; cp Acts 7:43; Amos 5:25-27; Ex.22:20; Deut.7:25).

It is with such "elohim" in mind that Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "that which the nations are sacrificing, they are [actually] sacrificing to demons . . ." (1 Cor.10:20). This was so, by whatever name these "gods" of the nations may have been known. Such deceiving spirits actually are not worthy of the title "subjectors," for their subjection was unto evil ends and was not in the faithful service of the true God.

In the Song of Moses, in Deuteronomy 32:21, Yahweh speaks of Israel having followed such unclean spirits, ones which were called "elohim" yet were only so in an evil sense, unworthy of the name: "As for them, they make Me jealous with a non-el. They provoke Me to vexation with their idols of vanity. As for Me, I shall make them jealous with a non-people; with a decadent nation shall I cause them vexation." Paul speaks of the time when the Galatians once, like the Thessalonians, had turned about "to God from idols, to be slaving for the living and true God" (cf 1 Thess.1:9). Until that time, however, and in a similar sense to that of Israel in her idolatrous worship of a "non-el," the Galatians had been "slaves of those who, by nature, are not gods" (Gal.4:8). These demons, however, were quite real, and certainly subjected the natives of Galatia to much evil. Therefore, it is only with a faithful sense in view that these wicked spirits were deemed "not gods."[6]

It is certain that Galatians 4:8 should be understood in such a sense as is suggested here, for there are a considerable number of scripture passages which speak of both men and messengers as being "elohim" (i.e., "subjectors"), each one, under God, working in his own faithful capacity toward the achievement of his own respective service.

6. Some, in an effort to "prove" Trinitarianism, have found support for their claim in Galatians 4:8. Their notion is, based upon their own pre-supposition that the Galatians' erstwhile idols were in no sense whatsoever actually "gods," therefore "ELOHIM" is a term descriptive of nature, one which entails both supremacy and unoriginatedness. Hence it can legitimately only be used of the "Triune God" of their creeds. This illogical claim is simply contrary to the facts, and fails to note the sense and corollaries of Deuteronomy 32:21, to which Paul alludes.

Note the following texts: "You shall not maledict the elohim [i.e., the arbiters or judges; cf Ex.21:6], and a prince among your people you shall not curse" (Ex.22:28). "Then the sheiks of Edom are flustered; the arbiters [elohim; i.e., judges, or disposers] of Moab, quivering took hold of them. All the dwellers of Canaan are dissolved" (Ex.15:15).

"If the thief is not found then the possessor of the house will be brought near to the elohim [or "judges"] to show whether or not he has put forth his hand on the work of his associate. In every matter of transgression over a bull, over a donkey, over a flockling, over raiment or over every lost thing which one says that this is it, unto the elohim shall come the word of the two of them. Whom the elohim shall condemn, he shall repay double to his associate" (Ex.22:8,9).

YOU ARE ELOHIM

Of the sons of Israel, collectively, it is written, "I Myself have said: you are elohim, and sons of the Supreme are all of you" (Psa.82:6). How glorious to know that these words will find a fulfillment in the kingdom of the heavens. Then, Israel will be the head and not the tail; then, in the kingdom, the chosen race will indeed be a "royal priesthood," a "holy nation" (1 Peter 2:9). Citing the very words of Psalm 82:6, Jesus declared to the Jews, "Is it not written in your law that: 'I say you are gods'? If He says those were gods, to whom the word of God comes (and the scripture can not be annulled), are you saying to Him Whom the Father hallows and dispatches into the world that: You are blaspheming, seeing that I say: Son of God am I?" (John 10:34-36).

The words of Psalm 97:7, in reference to Yahweh, "bow down to Him, all you elohim," are interpreted in Hebrews 1:6 as "worship Him, all the messengers of God!" In speaking of Christ, Hebrews 1:9 (citing Psalm 45:7) declares, "You love righteousness and hate unrighteousness; therefore God Your God anoints You with the oil of exultation beyond Your partners." Though there are others, whether celestial or terrestrial, who are themselves "anointed ones" of God (i.e., "christs"), who thus are our Lord's "partners" (metochon, WITH-HAVer) in divine service, Christ's own anointing and corresponding divine service is certainly beyond that of any others.

In Hebrews 1, verses 8 and 9 (citing Psalm 45:6,7), God declares to the Son, "Your throne, O God, is for the eon of the eon," and "God Your God anoints You." The text of Psalm 45:6,7 itself reads: "Your throne, O Elohim, is for the eon and further . . . .Elohim Your Elohim anoints You."

In these verses of Psalm 45, not only is God termed "Elohim" but the Son is also termed "Elohim." While it is true that the mere form of this word is plural, it is just as true that each of the two Beings Whom it herein represents are singular Beings.[7] One is God Himself, "the Majesty in the heights" (Heb.1:3), at Whose "right hand" the other One so addressed, termed "the Son," is seated. As is the case as well in the vast majority of the texts in which ELOHIM appears in which it is used in reference to God Himself ("Yahweh Elohim"), this form is used here not of a plurality of beings but, respectively, of Two individual beings, God and His Son.

It follows, then, the claims of Mormonism, among others, notwithstanding, that the plural form ELOHIM does not mean a "company" or "family" of beings. That it is used of a plurality of beings in certain passages and that certain of these are, under divine inspiration, interpreted accordingly in the New Testament[8] no one doubts. That however,

7. It should be noted that the plural form, "elohim," is used as well of individual gods of the nations (cf 1 Sam.5:7; Judges 11:24; 1 Kings 18:24).

8. cf John 10:34,35; Acts 7:40,14:11,19:26; 1 Cor.8:5; Gal.4:8.

is not the issue. Indeed, it is just as true, and far more to the point that in many places and in all cases in the Greek New Testament God always used the Greek singular for Elohim whenever referring either to Himself or His Son.[9]

Perhaps, as many scholars have suggested, when "ELOHIM" is used of Yahweh Himself, the plural form "Elohim" is an idiom termed plural amplitudinus or plural of majesty, which originally had in view the plenitude of God's operations in which He acts through others who are energized by His holy spirit. Some such explanation must account for the mere plural form. This is because in the vast number of passages which speak of Yahweh Himself as "Elohim"' even as where, under God, Christ as well is denominated by this same title, a single Being alone is addressed or is in view.

It is a fallacy that either supremacy or unoriginatedness is entailed by the word "God." It is a fallacy as well that wherever the word appears it speaks of the same being. And finally, it is a fallacy that if the word is used in a certain sense in one place, it is used in the same sense in another place. Each of these errors has been the source of much confusion. Collectively, the volume of deception which they have wrought is simply incalculable. If we are not snared by these errors ourselves, this can only be attributed to the grace of God.

We are often praying for a realization of God's purpose of the eons which He makes in Christ Jesus our Lord (Eph. 3:11), even as for discernment concerning His allotment

9. For example, in Exodus 3:16 when God spoke to Moses out of the flaming thornbush, He revealed Himself as the Elohim of Abraham, and the Elohim of Isaac, and the Elohim of Jacob. Yet when our Lord cites this passage in proving the necessity of resurrection (Matt.22:32), and Steven brings it before the Sanhedrin (Acts 7:32), neither translates Elohim as plural. Thus we may be certain concerning Yahweh, that He is the Subjector and Placer (not "subjectors" or "placers" of Abraham, or Isaac, and of Jacob).

among the saints, in which we have a part. May we complement such prayers by a request for the most fundamental realization of all, which is simply a realization of Him (Col.1:10). Truly, may the eyes of our heart be enlightened, in a realization of the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory (cf Eph.1:15-19). J.R.C.

THE TITLE, "GOD"

The word "God" (or "god"), like all titles, concerns itself with office or service. In Greek, its stem, the-, signifies PLACE; hence, the complete form, theos (GOD), means PLACer. This idea fits all the contexts in which theos is used. Theos is not only the original Greek word for the English "GOD," but is also the inspired translation of the Hebrew "ELOHIM," in all corresponding New Testament citations of Old Testament texts which refer to God Himself.

Any references to those lesser beings to whom the title GOD ("placer" or "subjector") also applies notwithstanding, then, we say, Nevertheless, there is only one God. He alone is the Supreme, the Almighty One. He is the God, and Father, of our Lord Jesus Christ, and He is "the only true God" (John 17:3).

It is Christ Himself Who insists that this is so. The adjective, alêtheia (TRUE), speaks of that which is in accord with the facts. In accord with the actual, literal facts, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ alone is God. He is the only Placer Who is not Himself placed by another. He alone is self-existent and self-sufficient. All others to whom this title is ascribed, including Christ, possess it in a derived sense, not in accord with the facts absolute, but relatively speaking, or, in some figurative way.

Supremely speaking, there is only one true God, even though, speaking relatively, and even in a righteous sense, "there are many gods" (1 Cor.8:5). For, indeed, "there are those being termed gods, whether in heaven or on earth" (1 Cor.8:5; cp Ex.22:8,9; Psa.82:6). Consequently, we should hardly be surprised that, in certain passages, Christ also is so termed (cf Titus 2:13; Heb.1:8; 1 John 5:20b). Except for God Himself, Christ certainly has a right to this title in a way unspeakably above that of all others, to whom it is also properly applied. Yet conversely, we must also realize that the ascription of the title "God" to Christ—in certain senses and in various connections—is no more indication that He is the Deity than that any others to whom this title is also ascribed are the Deity. JUSTIFIED

WHEN Jesus our Lord was roused from among the dead the great work of justification had been achieved, not applied to sinners, but achieved for them. He was roused because of our justifying (Rom.4:25). When He was roused, the justifying work had occurred already, and thus His rousing became the evidence that our sins have been dealt with (cp 1 Cor.15:17). Therefore, we read (Rom.5:1):

A. Justified, then,
  B. out of His faith,
A. we may be having peace toward God,
  B. through our Lord, Jesus Christ . . . .

Here we see a twofold pattern where God's gracious gratuity of justification (A) is based on the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ Who is given up to death because of our offenses (B). We, who are believing, are even now living in a state of justification in God's sight, and because of this extraordinary favor we may be enjoying peace toward God. The justification is out of the faith of Jesus Christ, and the peace comes through Him as our Lord and Saviour. The "A" sections speak of what we receive, and the "B" sections speak of Christ, Who gains what we receive. This wording of the evangel is repeated in strikingly similar correspondence a few verses later, in Romans 5:9:

A. justified now
  B. in His blood,
A. we shall be saved from indignation,
  B. through Him.

It is the shedding of Christ's blood—it is the faith-obedience of Jesus Christ to the death of the cross (Rom. 3:21; Phil.2:8) that is the source of our justification and the resultant enjoyment of peace toward God. This pattern of the evangel where righteousness and peace are solidly based on the faithfulness of our Lord in dying for sinners, is introduced in Romans 3:24,25 where we read, in accord with the twofold pattern noted above:

A. being justified gratuitously in [God's] grace,
  B. through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus
A. (Whom God purposes for a Propitiatory,
  B. through [His] faith in His blood . . . .

The gratuity of righteousness is out of Jesus Christ's faith (cp Gal.3:22). The "faith" of Romans 5:1 is His faith in obedience to God's will, and His faithfulness in His suffering and death. This is the faith that justifies. Our faith comes into the picture as it rests on His faith and as the provision through which God reckons to us the righteousness established by Christ. So also, in Romans 3:24,25, justification is through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus, not in us, but in Him; and "the faith" which brings about propitiation is our Lord's faith expressed in the shedding of His blood. Justification and peace are the accomplishments of God through the faith of His Son Who dies for us while we are still sinners.[1] Such a work of justification has become the manifestation of God's own righteousness (Rom.1:17; 3:21,25,26). It is a work of justification, in God's grace, that is without flaw. It is ironclad—no, it is gold-clad and wholly indestructible. It is righteous in every way, and it will result in the enjoyment of life's justifying by all mankind, so that the many sinners from Adam on downward will be constituted righteous (Rom.5:18,19). There is no way this will not occur.

1. Paul uses fact verbs here: we are sinners; Christ dies.

And thus we who are believing this evangel may already be enjoying peace toward God. Later, writing to us who are of the Uncircumcision, according to flesh, Paul reveals that we are brought near to God by the blood of Christ Who is our Peace (Eph.2:13,14). Once again, in accord with the pattern of Romans 5:1,2, Paul writes that it is by means of the blood of Christ Jesus, indeed through His faith, that we have boldness and access before God (Eph.3:12).

THEN

The fifth chapter of Romans does not stand by itself. It develops from all that has been laid down in the epistle from the beginning, but most directly and vitally from Romans 4:25. This is the force of the word "then" in Romans 5:1. Jesus our Lord is given up because of our offenses and is roused because of our justifying. Justified, then, out of such faith as this, we may be having peace toward God, through our Lord, Jesus Christ.

It is because our offenses have been successfully dealt with in God's giving up of His Son to the death of the cross and the entombment, as made evident in the fact that He is then roused from among the dead, that the apostle now speaks of peace in connection with justification. What God does in giving up His Son, and what His Son does in faith and faithfulness—this is the basis of our justification, and this, in turn, opens the way to peace toward God.

JUSTIFIED

In that Jesus our Lord is given up because of our offenses, and in that He is roused because of our justifying, we now are standing before God, in His sight, holy and flawless (cf Eph.1:4). This is a dramatic reversal of the situation earlier described by our apostle: "Out of law works, no flesh at all shall be justified in [God's] sight" (Rom.3:20). Yet now God's righteousness is made manifest "for Him to be righteous and a Justifier of the human out of Jesus's faith" (Rom.3:21,26).

Consequently God righteously reckons the righteousness established by the death of Christ to us even now while we still live in the flesh. Our position before God is described by an aorist passive participle, "Justified," simply stating the fact. This cannot be taken away because it is not based on what we do or how we feel, but rather on what our Lord has done, and what God has put to our account.

Justification has occurred on the basis of Christ's faith. That is the first point being made in Romans 5:1. Moment by moment, we are living in a state of justification in the sight of God, Who is not pretending or resting on mere forensic judgment, but is seeing accurately and truly what has been gained through the death of His Son. It is a work of gratuitous grace as far as we are concerned, but it is righteously founded on what Christ has done.

THE END OF ADAM'S LINE

How did it happen? How did the crucifixion and entombment of Jesus Christ bring justification to us who are sinners, and conciliation to us who are enemies in our offensiveness before God?

When Christ dies, all of us human beings die (2 Cor. 5:14) in the sense that the old humanity is decisively and unconditionally put to an end. Eventually this will take the form of full experience, when no one at all will be found as a sinner and everyone will be vivified and constituted righteous (Rom.5:18). What is accomplished will become a reality in full realization. The old state of sin under the power of death that started with Adam is doomed.

Paul will repeat this exultant word of truth in speaking of us who are believing the evangel and are viewed by God as we shall be when we are glorified (cf Rom.8:30). In spirit, we are baptized into the death of Christ Jesus (Rom.6:3).

We are entombed together with Him (Rom.6:4). Our old humanity is crucified together with Him (Rom.6:6). We die together with Christ (Rom.6:8).

One who dies has been justified from sin (Rom.6:7).

Christ does not suffer in our place. We are crucified together with Him. He does not die as our Substitute, but the sinner dies in Him in Whom all of us are created (cf Col.1:16).[2] He suffers and endures the cross (cf Heb. 12:2), and we do not, but nevertheless we die. He is given up because of our offenses. He also dies for the sake of our sins (1 Cor.15:3), that is, He dies so that our sins might be put away to a finality (cp 2 Cor.5:17; Heb.10:1-14). He dies so that the sinner, the old creation, might be put to death, and all might ultimately be vivified in Him (cf 1 Cor.15:22), blessings now applied to us in spirit.

OUT OF FAITH

Romans 5:1 does not speak of actual justification coming out of our faith. The word "faith" in Romans 5:1 must be understood in reference to Christ's faith, as we have noted above. To be sure, the believer's faith is given much attention in Romans 4, and in verse 24 Paul has just spoken of us "who are believing on Him Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead." But our believing is not the source of justification but the occasion upon which God reckons righteousness to us in this present era while we are still in the flesh. Only in a figurative way, in reference to the way in which justification is applied to us in this era, can we relate justification to our faith. And even then there is no place for boasting in ourselves. Literal justification as a righteous work of God, in its essential sense of being caused to be righteous, does not rest on our faulty faith.

2. See the article, "Substitution or Inclusion?" in Unsearchable Riches, vol.22, pp.549-573; reprinted in vol.106, pp.51-75.

If justification as a display of God's righteousness requires human faithfulness in addition to Christ's, there would be no solid basis, indeed no hope for peace. If such justification could, in some cases, be somehow partly earned by such a measure of faith even as exhibited by Abraham in Genesis 15 or Paul on the Damascus road the whole matter of peace toward God would best be set aside from our considerations.

NOT OUR FAITH, BUT HIS

Hence it is out of the faith of Jesus Christ that we are justified. Justification in this literal sense is not merely a declaration of God, decreed on the basis of divine authority for the benefit of certain individuals who have taken the right steps of faith. It is a work that manifests the righteousness of God (Rom.3:21). If, then, justification manifests God's righteousness, it must have a solid basis in righteousness, one that bypasses human requirements and lies outside of human efforts. Every wrong must be righted. Every sin and every sinner must be dealt with in such a way that all mankind may be brought into the profound and glorious state of "life's justifying" (Rom.5:18).

At the very beginning of Romans, the apostle writes that the evangel of God concerning His Son reveals God's righteousness "out of [the Righteous One's] faith." It is "for [our] faith," but the revelation of God's righteousness is sourced entirely in the faith of Jesus Christ, in His obedience to the death of the cross. It comes out of His faith.

If we are to grasp the reality of the peace which God has set before us, we must come to appreciate the righteousness of justification as it is announced in the evangel Paul is bringing in Romans. In their deepest significance, the words "out of faith" here in Romans 5:1 as well as in Romans 1:17 refer to the faith of Jesus Christ as presented explicitly in Romans 3:22-26, where "through Jesus Christ's faith" is used.

MAY BE HAVING

Much has been written about the correct grammatical form of the verb "have" in Romans 5:1. Brother Knoch observed: "The Authorized Version says 'we have peace.' Yet the two leading manuscripts read 'we may be having peace.' The difference is very slight in the original, only the length of the letter o, but the same sound. But the fact is, that those who are justified, have so little conception of what this implies that they . . . are not at peace with God. It is only as we fully grasp the force of justification, that it excludes all possibility of condemnation (Rom.8:1) and is not dependent on our acts or feelings, that we have settled peace, and are really reconciled with God."[3]

Our faith does come into the picture here, however, but not in the word "faith," but rather in the pronoun "we." The antecedent of this pronoun is the phrase "[those] who are believing" in Romans 4:24. Justification comes out of Jesus Christ's faith; the enjoyment of peace toward God is for those who are believing this evangel. Hence, in context, Romans 5:1 declares: "Justified, then, out of [Jesus Christ's] faith,, we [who are believing this evangel] may be having peace toward God."

But even here, Paul puts the spotlight on the faith of Christ, for not only is justification sourced in His faith, the peace that believers may be having is to be recognized as coming through our Lord, Jesus Christ. We are conciliated to God through the death of His Son (Rom.5:10). The emphasis in Romans 5 continues to be on the message we are believing concerning God's Son. The value of our faith is fully dependent on His faith.

3. Unsearchable Riches, vol.47, p.193.

The physical fact is that we are still in the flesh, and in focusing on our own faith without appreciating the centrality of Christ's faith, we tend, on one hand, to get depressed and discouraged, or on the other hand become proud and self-righteous, both evils arising from comparisons with the faith of others. These bring about the very opposite of a state of peace and drive us away from enjoyment of peace toward God. Paul would have us focus our believing on the faith of Jesus Christ which is the source of justification. That is the pathway to peace toward God because it brings us to the awareness of what He has done in and through His Beloved.

PEACE TOWARD GOD

What is this peace we may be having toward God? It is the enjoyment of the access and standing in grace which we have before God because of being justified through the faith of Jesus Christ. But this is more than standing before Him apart from His indignation. Indeed, propitiation has been achieved through Christ's faith as it involved the shedding of His blood (Rom.3:25), but the term Paul is about to use in defining this peace is not propitiation, but conciliation (Rom.5:10,11; cp 2 Cor.5:18.19). There is no condemnation for us (Rom.8:1), and that speaks of peace. But also from a positive standpoint, the peace we may be enjoying is built on God's love (Rom.5:8) and brings us into the position of sons to God, in which the spirit of sonship in us cries out to Him, "Abba, Father!" (Rom.8:15).

Justification comes out of the faith of Christ. With this One, Who dies for us, and thus establishes our justification—with this One as the Conveyer of peace, we may be sure that all estrangement between us and God is gone, and in its place is the peace of a son, a peace built upon God's righteousness and love.

and
the Judgments of God

How can we explain the presence of evil? Is there a purpose for evil, and will it come to an end? Can there be two independent opposing forces in the universe? If God alone is supreme, what is the purpose of judgment? Surely there are answers to these troubling questions in the Word of God.

As one of its subjects, it probes and takes issue with the commonly accepted explanation that Satan, and not God, is responsible for evil. To quote the book's author: "Almost all of us are shortsighted. We see the judgments, but fail to recognize that they are only part of God's way with mankind, that they are definitely not an end. We confuse the going with the goal. Judgment is God's strange work. He uses it as a preparation toward a glorious consummation."

The message in this book is especially valuable to us in these days of doubt and distress, to lead men to rely on and rest in God alone.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, FOURTH QUARTER 2021
BEING THE FOURTH NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED TWELVE

EDITORIAL

WHAT is going on? That is a question many are asking today. We begin this issue of Unsearchable Riches with a good answer: "Love longs for love responsive" (p.146). This has been going on since creation. God longs for us to know His love and respond with love for Him.

Yet in order for this to be, there must be the experience of evil. "Creatures of Adam's race cannot appreciate good apart from evil" (p.161). This brings us directly to a deeper and truer wording of our question: What is God doing? "Ephesians 1:11 declares that God . . . is operating . . . all. Romans 8:28 reveals that He is doing so for good" (p.167).

It is within this purpose of God, Who is operating all for good, that He chooses us, and does so in Christ (see pages 146-169). Further with regard to God's grace to us, who are believing His evangel concerning His Son, I contribute two brief suggestions, the first on page 176 on 1 Thessalonians 1:3, and the second on page 180 concerning 2 Thessalonians 2:6,7. So also there are future matters such as our Lord's descent for us described in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 (p.174). This is discussed in the article entitled, "The Trumpet of God" (pp.181-192). The central figure in God's operation for good is His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, and the central and vital fact concerning Him is: "Christ dies and He rises" (1 Thess.4:14, p.174). And Christ's death and resurrection does not concern us only, who are believing it now, but all humanity, and all creation, and all that is going on. "Now may the Lord of peace Himself give you peace continually by every means" (2 Thess.3:16).

OUR BLESSINGS ARE IN CHRIST

Blessed is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,
Who blesses us with every spiritual blessing
among the celestials,
in Christ. (Eph.1:3)

LOVE longs for love responsive. It has one aim: to kindle a kindred fire from its flame. We share our heart's secrets with those we love. God is not a man, but He too, reserves His secrets for His own.

To Abraham, His friend, Yahweh unbosoms Himself with regard to Sodom's awful doom. To us, His beloved ones, He has revealed the secret of God, which can only be consummated by the fiery judgments which usher in Yahweh's day (Col.2:2; Rev.10:7).

Prophet after prophet inquired as to the periods of time connected with Messiah's suffering and His glories. But it is to His disciples that the Master reveals the secrets of the Kingdom (Matt.13:11). The nations that sought not after Him are told the secret, as to the duration of Israel's blindness, which Isaiah longed to know (Rom.11:25).

But from all these He had concealed His latest, choicest secret, now at length revealed. If Israel spurns the love He lavishes upon her, it must needs find outlet in another channel. The present secret administration of the grace of God—of which the patriarchs and prophets, disciples and apostles, never dreamed—leads His own into the hidden treasuries of His heart (Eph.3:3,6,9).

In this balmy spirit we desire to inquire into God's secrets. With the apostle we are convinced that, should we be perceiving all secrets, yet have no love, we are nothing (1 Cor.13:2). We know, too, that He Who bids us do everything in love is the first to fulfill His own request (1 Cor.16:14). All His actions are done in love, but some of His words excel in displaying His affection. Chiefest among these fond tokens are the secrets He has confided to His own. Indeed, it is only as we grasp the breadth and length and depth and height of the administration of the secret that we are enabled to appreciate the dimensions of Divine love and to respond to the affection from which this secret springs (Eph.3:18,19).

And, since it has pleased Him to tell us these secrets, shall we turn a deaf ear to the heart beats that only those who lie in His bosom can detect? Shall we spurn His confidence and count His words as idle tales, profitless and vain?

The Secret of the Evangel speaks of favor shown to those without. The secret administration, however, deals with the relationship of those within.

When Messiah's heavenly glories are revealed, a remnant of His earthly people are chosen to share His celestial honors. Their allotment is transferred from earth to heaven. The aliens who believed did not have even an earthly allotment. What place, then, shall be given them, in the heavenly realms? Shall they, like those upon the millennial earth, be subordinate to the chosen nation?

No! They share equally in this high and overwhelming glory! This is the secret, till then unknown and unknowable. This is the climax of God's grace and love, the finishing touch that rounds out the moral universe. By it sin is dethroned from the heavens, whence it sprang. Heaven, and not earth, is the scene of our coming glory, and there, unlike the future glorious earth, Jew and gentile are of equal exaltation. Paul and others of the chosen nation will partake of the celestial allotment, but they will have no preeminence over us poor sinners of the gentiles. We rank equally with them in this supernal glory! This we commonly term "The Mystery," or The Secret Administration.

GOD'S ANOINTED

"Christ" is the title of our Lord which gives us His official standing as God's Executive. He is the One Whom God has anointed to fulfill all His will. It is not His personal Name, but an official designation which He shares with others. It is only because of the preeminence of His anointing that He is the Christ, Who needs no added name or appellation to distinguish Him from His inferiors.

"Christ" is the anglicized form of the Greek christos (which comes from the element chri), meaning ANOINTED. We should call Him God's ANOINTED. Thus it always is in the sublinear of the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT, and so it would be in the Version had the usual designation not become so universal, or had it not such an unbreakable hold on the life and literature of the believers. While we call Him Christ, therefore, let us always connect this title with that sacred rite which alone endues God's representatives. The Christ is God's Anointed.

We should also identify it with the Hebrew title Messiah. It is so translated only twice (Dan.9:25,26), but it occurs often in the Hebrew Scriptures. As perhaps nothing else will so instill in us the import of this title as a consideration of these occurrences, we will give the most instructive, grouping them as connected with priests, kings, and prophets. Let us note that all three of these were anointed. The Messiah is not merely a King, as is usually supposed, but also a Priest and a Prophet. So He is set forth in His unveiling (Rev.1:1).

ANOINTED PRIESTS

All of the ministering priests in Israel were anointed with the holy anointing ointment (Ex.28:41). This is a type of that holy spirit which Christ shares with all who are in Him. The ingredients, therefore, must bring before us the attributes or qualities which it confers. It is a mingling of the bitter and the sweet. Many of the saints imagine that the spirit bring's no bitterness, no suffering. This is denied by the very first and most abundant of its ingredients.

The principal spice used in compounding the holy ointment used for the induction of priests into office was myrrh. It is the usual word for BITTER in Hebrew. This is its chief characteristic. It is obtained from a low, thorny, scraggly tree which grows chiefly in Arabia. A puncture or incision of the bark produces a white, viscid liquid, which soon hardens into a gum. It has an acrid taste, with peculiar aromatic flavor. Its odor alone is not disagreeable. This we take as indicating the spirit of humility and suffering which made Him a Man of Sorrows. This was not acceptable to those who had not received the spirit.

The second ingredient was a special quality of the well-known cinnamon. It was not bitter, but sweet. It was the inner rind of the tree of the same name found chiefly in Ceylon. Some have suggested that sweet cinnamon was obtained from the roots rather than the branches. The adjective is certainly in striking contrast to the preceding myrrh, bitter.

The third ingredient, called sweet calamus, seems to have been a sort of aromatic reed or grass, such as are found in India, like the lemon grass. No aromatic grasses are found in Palestine. It also is sweet, in contrast to the bitter myrrh.

The fourth ingredient, called cassia in the Authorized Version, should be distinguished from the spice which has this name in Hebrew (Psa.45:8). It is probably the cinnamon cassia, which is coarser and more pungent than ordinary cinnamon. It also comes from afar, for it is not native in Palestine.

These latter three spices suggest those sweet graces, such as love, joy, and peace, which are imparted by the spirit and which should characterize those who have received its anointing. All of these were blended into one aromatic ointment in a base of olive oil. The latter is itself an emblem of holy spirit, hence we may take the aromatic compound as suggesting the effect of its application and the fragrance of its operation. All of the spices were imported. They were not natives of the land. Is not this a striking feature of the graces of the spirit? They are strange to this world. The bitter and the sweet come from some other clime.

ANOINTED KINGS

The first king to be the Lord's anointed was Saul. Samuel anointed him king over Israel at the request of the people (1 Sam.9:16). At Gilgal he is recognized as Yahweh's anointed (1 Sam.12:3,5). When Samuel went to anoint David (1 Sam.16:3) he first supposed that it was to be Eliab, Jesse's kingly-looking son (1 Sam.16:6). David himself recognized Saul as Yahweh's anointed (1 Sam.24:6, 6,10) on two occasions when Saul's life was in his hand, so that he refused to kill him (1 Sam.26:9,11,16,23). Not only that, but when a young Amalekite brought him Saul's crown and told how he had killed the king, David had him slain for destroying Saul, because he was Yahweh's anointed (2 Sam.1:14, 16).

David was the next king to receive the anointing (1 Sam. 16:12). The house of Judah anointed him (2 Sam.2:4,7) and later his rule extended to Israel (2 Sam.5:3,17; 12:7). Absalom began his rebellion by being anointed (2 Sam. 19:10). Solomon was first anointed when David was old (1 Kings 1:30,39; 1 Chron.23:1). He received a second anointing (1 Chron.29:22). The later kings, such as Jehu (1 Kings 19:16) were all anointed. Even foreign rulers, such as Hazael, king of Assyria, received the rite.

ANOINTED PROPHETS

Elijah anointed Elisha to be prophet in his place (1 Kings 19:16). Little is said of such anointings. Perhaps the reason is that the actual application of the symbolic ointment, which was legally essential for the public functions of priesthood and rule, did not necessarily include a portion of the spirit which it symbolized. Priests were often unspiritual and kings stubborn. Saul had received the outward anointing, but lacked the inward graces of which it spoke. A prophet, however, must have the spirit in its actual power, for he is God's man who steps in when priests and kings, who have the symbol but not the reality, have failed.

All of these were christs. This is not irreverence, but the very opposite, for they were anointed in order to teach men beforehand concerning THE Christ. There were priests, but He is the chief Priest. There were kings, but He is the great King. There were prophets, but He is THE Prophet. It would be a vast gain if we could either drop the Greek form "Christ," or use it of the types which foretold Him. As it is, let us always remember that Messiah is the Hebrew and Christ the Greek expression for the Anointed.

It is not good for us to constantly differentiate between Him and those who are called the same. The names Joshua and Jesus should be alike. The title Lord, in the Greek, is applied to men who are masters of slaves, hence it should always be Master. And Christ should either be applied to all who are anointed, or changed to Anointed. In this way we would preserve the links God has made between His Son and those who help to make His glories known. As our language and customs do not allow these things to be done, we can obtain nearly the same benefit by means of literal renderings and sublinears.

Thus briefly we have sketched the background of that simple yet stupendous statement which introduces Him to us in Matthew's account (1:16): "Who is termed 'Christ'." Only one fully saturated with the significance of previous anointings will perceive the magnificent majesty and solitary supremacy with which this title invests Him. The glory and power of all kingship and priesthood and prophecy find their focus in Him. All phases of the divine activities are centered in the Anointed.

We are apt to confuse the various operations of the spirit of God. The anointing is sometimes taken for the coming on of the spirit. That they are distinct is evident from the fact that most of them on whom the spirit came never had been anointed. Balaam and Othniel and Gideon and Amasai and Azariah probably never knew what it was to be anointed. It is clearer still in the experience of David and Saul. After the young son of Jesse had received the rite, "the spirit of Yahweh came upon David from that day forward." "But the spirit of Yahweh departed from Saul and an evil spirit from Yahweh troubled him" (1 Sam.16: 13-15). Both were anointed, yet the spirit came on one and avoided the other.

CHRIST

Our Lord was born as the Christ. John the Baptist was filled with holy spirit before his birth, but His very generation was by the holy spirit. He was never subjected to the rite after His coming in flesh. He was the Christ at His birth. We read of "Jesus Christ's birth" (Matt.1:18), "where the Christ is born" (Matt.2:4). The messenger told the shepherds that "today was brought forth to you a Saviour, Who is Christ, the Lord" (Luke 2:11). The great truth is that Jesus is the Christ, not that He became such when He entered His active ministry.

As a preparation to empower Him for His ministry, the spirit came upon Him at His baptism, in appearance as if it were a dove (Matt.3:16; Luke 3:22). There is no reason for making this His anointing. It is never so called. He is termed Christ not only from His birth but even before. When the apostle speaks of Him subsisting in the form of God, he calls Him by this title (Phil.2:5,6). He Himself proclaimed His anointing in Nazareth (Luke 4:18). But long before this He was anointed with the oil of exultation beyond His partners (Heb.1:9). The holy anointing oil was but a suggestion of those exultant spiritual graces which empowered Him to fulfill the offices which His partners only prefigured.

While a few faithful Israelites, like Simeon (Luke 2:26), may have recognized His anointing in His infancy, few, even of His disciples, seemed to grasp it fully. When the great crisis in His ministry came, and His rejection was assured, then it was that Peter confessed that He was the Christ, the Son of the living God. Yet even he would not have known this apart from a special revelation (Matt.16: 16,17). It was not until after His resurrection that He is fully and freely accorded the title Christ by His disciples. And the fullness of its force does not dawn upon us until Paul, in His epistles, expatiates upon the universality of His power and dominion.

The Christ of the Circumcision is the Messiah of the Hebrew Scriptures. Only Peter seems to gain a furtive glance of His celestial glory. He writes of "Jesus Christ, Who is at God's right hand, being gone into heaven, messengers and authorities and powers being made subject to Him" (1 Peter 3:21,22). Otherwise He is the great King Who will rule the earth through the sons of Israel; as well as the chief Priest and the Prophet, like Moses, on Whom all the bliss of the millennium is based.

IN CHRIST

The universal headship of Christ is first revealed in Ephesians (1:10). The heavens, as well as the earth, are to be subject to His direction. Only as we know Him as God's Executive in all the vast concerns of redemption and salvation throughout the universe, in order to bring all back to Himself in reconciliation, can we realize in some measure the force and fullness of what it means to be IN CHRIST.

We may read through the accounts of our Lord's life and the Acts without ever encountering the phrase "in Christ"; it is almost exclusively a Pauline thought. Its first occurrence is in Romans 3:24, where our deliverance is said to be "in Christ Jesus." Paul's epistles are full of it, but Hebrews and James do not contain it. In Peter and John, James, and Jude it is limited to His earthly glories (1 Peter 3:16; 5:10,14; 1 John 5:20; Jude 1).

All that is ours by grace is "in Christ." Indeed we may say that, by grace, all is ours in Him, even though the blessings are confined to realms celestial. In Him there is deliverance (Rom. 3:24), justification (Gal.2:17), no condemnation (Rom.8:1), freedom (Gal.2:4), holiness (1 Cor.1:2), eonian life (Rom.6: 23), a new creation (2 Cor.5:17), and all our expectation (1 Cor.15:19). It is only as we become acquainted with His worth and high deserts that we can grasp what God has given us, for it is to be lavished upon us, not according to what we are in ourselves, but in harmony with our place in Christ.

It is a false humility which denies our right to such high deserts, or seeks to sully the splendor of such grace by intruding some merit of our own. This is overwhelmingly true of our spiritual celestial honors, which would be altogether beyond our reach even if we were as innocent as Adam before he sinned, or as righteous as Daniel, who will not attain to them. There is service and reward, but this is "in the Lord," not "in Christ."

The lordship of Christ is a truth sorely needed by the saints, for there is much service which does not recognize Him as the only One Who has the wisdom and the right to direct the activities of those who are His slaves. He alone will reward those who please Him, and that which is done without His direction and authority is worse than wasted. But there is still sorer need to distinguish His lordship and our slavery and its rewards, from our place in Him as the Anointed, in Whom we are free, and are the objects of undiluted, unmerited, overwhelming grace.

THE JUST DESERTS OF CHRIST

This distinction is intensely practical. In Christ all differences vanish, for they would limit the outflow of grace. There is no Circumcision and Uncircumcision, no male or female, no slave or freeman. The Jew can claim no precedence over the gentile in this secret economy. A man has no more in Christ than a woman. A slave is as free and as rich as his master. But this is not true "in the Lord." This is not the basis of conduct. The slave must obey his master in the Lord. The wife should be subject to her husband "in the Lord." Conduct is regulated by our relation to Him as Lord. But this does not affect our position "in Christ."

Let us exult that our blessings are "in Christ." Were they in us, even in an infinitesimal degree, they would not be sure or satisfactory. Indeed, they would not be blessings worthy of the name. There is nothing in us to deserve them. We have not the power to preserve them. They would have no more value than an unsigned check for many millions. When tempted to doubt our possession of every spiritual blessing among the celestials, all we need to do is to remember that these are in Christ. We cannot doubt His deserts. He is entitled to all that God will give Him, and to all that we will share with Him. Outside of Christ we are mean and miserable. In Him we are rich beyond the dreams of avarice, and blessed beyond all human thoughts of bliss.

GOD CHOOSES US IN CHRIST

> Blessed is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who blesses us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials, in Christ, according as He chooses us in Him before world disruption, we to be holy and flawless in His sight. (Eph.1:3,4)

GOD'S GLORY is the universal goal. From the tiniest insect in its aimless-seeming way, to the most sovereign sun star in its parabolic path, all have one common aim, one pure purpose to perform. Men may deem the one a foolish, fruitless wandering; they cannot see the star's objective; but God has harnessed both to His chariot of glory. The earth is His most fruitful field. Mankind is the creature fittest to display His varied excellence.

God's goal is not gained until He receives the heartfelt adoration of all His creatures. Great as are His efforts on our behalf, they are but the means to make Him known. Ephesians does not find its climax in the mystery itself, but in a prayer for its appreciation (3:18,19). Even before the secret was made known the apostle could say, "If I . . . should be perceiving all secrets . . . yet have no love, I am nothing" (1 Cor.13:2). Nothing has any vital value unless it leads to love. It is the glory of God's wisdom that all things in the universe, including sin and hate, shall be lured into the livery of love. Hence a knowledge of the secret is not sufficient or satisfactory to God unless it includes a heart-hungry occupation and enjoyment of the surpassing love of Christ, which transcends all knowledge.

CHOSEN BEFORE THE DISRUPTION

Christ is the Chosen of God (Luke 23:35). He is God's Elect. In this sense, all others belong to the non-elect. This does not by any means imply that all but Him are damned. On the contrary, if Christ had not been chosen, no one would be saved. Election is never an end in itself. It should not be made a means of condemnation, for it is always an avenue of blessing. One is chosen and anointed to save all. Some are chosen in Him to reach the rest. God's great purpose to clasp all creation to His heart is carried out by a series of elections. Christ is chosen as Mediator, and, in Him, some are called out to convey His blessings to the earth, others to channel them to the celestials.

Let us rid our hearts of the destructive delusion that election is the only portal to salvation. Let us purge our spirits of the insane reasoning which deduces the eternal damnation of the non-elect from the fact that they are not chosen. The alternative of election is not eternal perdition. Christ was chosen to save, not to condemn. Others are selected for a like purpose, for fellowship in worldwide blessing.

He who, with Pharisaic pride, plumes himself that he belongs to the elect, who looks down from his superior station upon the non-elect, who calmly surveys their luckless state and consigns them all without a pang to eternal torment, may well beware lest he has been selected by himself. God's elect have no place for pride, but are submerged in humility by the operation of His grace. A sense of his own sin and insufficiency constrains the believer and softens his attitude toward the sinner. The true attitude of God's elect is an exultant consciousness that their blessing is to be the means of blessing to others. Associated with Christ, they have their part in God's great purpose, until creation reaches its predestined goal.

Election is a dignity and an honor. It places Christ at the head of all creation. It sets His saints at the summit of all God's works. It is far more than salvation. Indeed, in Christ, its chief exponent, salvation is not for Himself at all, but for others. He needed none. This is the true connection of salvation with election. It is not that the elect are merely saved, but that they have the exultant privilege of association with God's Chosen One in making known His salvation to His creatures.

The wide divergence between salvation and election is strikingly evident in the case of Judas. He was one of the twelve. These were selected from the disciples, so, in a superior sense, they were the elect (Luke 6:13). Our Lord did not blunder in His choice of Judas. Long before His betrayal, He asked them pointedly, "Do not I choose you, the twelve, and one of you is an adversary?" (John 6:70). It was necessary that He should be betrayed by a friend, hence it was essential that one should be chosen to act the part. For a time this choice gave him the high honor of close communion with Christ and His apostles. But it was not, in this case, accompanied by salvation.

THE DISRUPTION

We have already seen something of the scope in space occupied by the Ephesian epistle (Eph.1:3). It is not confined to the earth, as previous revelation, but explores the limits of the universe. It also breaks all bounds as to time. All of God's previous dealings were connected with the eonian times and the scenes of sin. Paul alone takes us back before the eons and leads us on beyond their close. He alone deals with God's activities before the disruption and beyond the consummation (Eph.1:4; 1 Cor.15:24).

The word "disruption" is usually translated "foundation." As there is another word, themelios, for foundation, the vocabulary method demands that we distinguish between them. In the sublinear of the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT we have the elements of this word. Its literal meaning is DOWN-CASTING. Kata means DOWN, bolê, CAST. We have almost the same word in English in catabolism, the series of changes by which living matter breaks down within an organism. Moreover, the verb, kataballō, is translated cast down twice in the Authorized Version (2 Cor.4:9; Rev. 12:10). In the former passage the meaning is fixed by the contrast. We can hardly say "founded, but not destroyed." It means to cast down, not found.

This term is not connected with creation, but redemption. It is the earliest date on the calendar of sin. Adam's offense in Eden is by no means the beginning of evil in the world. Long before the restoration of the earth for his habitation, there had been a catastrophe which can only be accounted for by a disruption of some sort. Perhaps we have a record of it in the second sentence of Genesis, which should read, "and the earth became a chaos and vacant." It certainly was not so in the beginning. God did not create it a chaos (Isa.45:18). It became so because of the entrance of sin and evil.

It may be profitable to pause here to point out the tendency of our translators to bow to the accepted dicta of science. There is every effort in the opening verses of Genesis to countenance the idea that creation began in chaos. Not only is it suggested that the creation originally was waste and barren, despite the definite denial of Isaiah (Isa.45:18), but the words tohu va-bohu, rendered without form and void, are utterly misleading. How can the earth be "without form"? As a material substance it must have some shape. Why translate the same word (tohu) vain in Isaiah 45:18? It always refers to a chaos. And how can the earth be void? If it were it would not be! This word (bohu) refers to vacantness. The earth became a chaos and vacant, not without form and void.

This is most suggestive. There must have been a time anterior to this when it was not a chaos and vacant, but fertile and productive. All of God's creations are perfect and mature. Adam was not created an infant. He was full-grown, with every faculty developed when he rose from the ground. So the earth was created for habitation, but the even course of events was shattered by the entrance of sin and the consequent disruption, which called for the restoration recorded in the succeeding verses of the first of Genesis.

That the disruption has to do with sin, and not with creation or foundation, is apparent from the passages in which it appears. The Lamb was foreknown before (1 Pet. 1:20) and slain from the disruption (Rev.13:8). Now there is nothing sinful in founding a world. There is no need for a sacrifice. The disruption is the signal for the reign of sin and, in God's purpose, doomed to death the sacrificial lamb. Even before, in anticipation of this catastrophe, the Lamb was foreknown, for God provides for all apparent emergencies before they appear.

The disruption is put in opposition to the repudiation of sin at the conclusion of the eons (Heb.9:26). The necessity for the suffering of Christ began with the entrance of sin. To connect it with God's work in founding the earth borders on blasphemy. A sacrifice has been needed ever since the disruption. The power of the blood of Christ will prevail until sin is repudiated. This is at the conclusion of the eons. Without being dogmatic, we infer from this that these are the two boundary monuments of the eonian times. Sin's entrance at the disruption and its exit at its repudiation, mark the commencement and consummation of the eons. The eonian times are in the service of sin. Before the eons sin was absent, beyond them, it will be repudiated.

With this background we should be able to extract some of the sweet preciousness of being chosen in Christ before the disruption of the world. Not merely a long while ago. Not merely when His purpose was freshly formed. It was before sin entered. God's love and election were ours, not merely before we had offended Him, but before there was any barrier between Him and His creatures. Now we are enmeshed in sin. How marvelous it is to look back to God's choice of us in Christ, before a single failure or offense could come between! God's love and choice of us is not only superior, but anterior to sin! We are found in His heart before evil had invaded the universe!

If we were chosen before sin came on the scene, why then did God allow its intrusion, and why did we need to be drawn into its terrible toils? In order that His love would not be wasted with its own outflow, but receive an affectionate response. Creatures of Adam's race cannot appreciate good apart from evil. All that God's love could lavish on them would fail to reveal His heart unless it be displayed on a black background. But sin is not first or last in God's purpose. It is only a brief parenthesis in His dealings with creation. Through it the Creator is transfigured into the Saviour, the Redeemer, the Reconciler.

HOLY AND FLAWLESS

We were chosen, not to be innocent merely, but to be holy and flawless. Holiness repels sin and flawlessness displaces imperfection. One who has never known a scratch cannot begin to realize the joyous satisfaction of perfect freedom from every flaw. Only those seared by sin can exult in holiness. So we can readily read between the lines and see that our election by God before sin's disruption involved far more than the creation perfectness of Adam. It calls for a knowledge of good which can come only through the perception of evil. It demands deliverance from sin. It destines us to dominance over sin. In this sense, the elect only are holy, for they alone repudiate sin during the eons and repel it while in its presence.

What a blessed prospect is ours! Sick of sin, full of flaws, all that we do tainted, all that we are blighted, our very best unsatisfactory in the light of God's presence—how awful and terrible if we must continue forever in such a plight without hope! Many of us are calloused by continual contact with evil, and sensitive spirits find surcease in God's grace, but what a relief will come to all in that happy day when His primeval purpose concerning us is realized! We shall not be afraid of sin. It will flee from us! We will not be ashamed of our imperfections. All our blemishes will have disappeared, our flaws will all have vanished!

The supreme sweetness of God's choice does not lie alone in likeness to Him. It is blessedness, indeed, to get, yet it is far more blessed to give. God gives, and so do those whom He selects. Christ is the supreme example. He chose twelve to aid in dispensing blessing in the Kingdom. Many more are selected in Israel, who will deal out blessing in the future. Paul was chosen to reach the members of His body, and these, as we have seen, had been chosen before the disruption, for the most glorious and far-reaching beneficence it is possible to conceive.

And then—how comforting it is even now!—then we shall look back and thank our God, not only for His choice before the disruption, but for sin and evil, and for our sorrow and shame, which will give flavor to our flawlessness, and beauty to our holiness. Without the night we would not enjoy the day. Without the darkness there is no light visible. The disruption will enable God's creatures to enjoy His beneficence and love. And, above all, it will bring Him the praise, the adoration, the overflowing love from surcharged hearts, which would have lain dormant and dead without its provocation. Let us thank God for the disruption and His choice of us before it came about!

FOREKNOWN AND CHOSEN OF GOD

THE MEMBERS of Christ's body were "foreknown" by God (cp Rom.8:29). God's holy nation, the people of Israel, are also among those "whom He foreknows" (Rom.11:2). Thus "the purpose of God may be remaining as His choice, not out of our acts, but of Him Who is calling" (cf Rom.9:11).

We are "called according to the purpose that whom He foreknows He designates beforehand also to be conformed to the image of His Son" (Rom.8:29). The thought here is not that He knows something about us, but that He "knows" us. This speaks not of His ignorance of others, but of His special "knowledge" of us.

God's literal prescience or foreknowledge of our faith or works cannot be in view, for membership in the body of Christ is a matter of grace, not reward. Since salvation is not a matter of qualification, it is surely mistaken to assert that foreknowledge is merely knowing ahead of time who will qualify to be saved. Besides, "free will" faith and acts could never be foreknown. Since there is always a "chance" they might never occur, their future existence could not be an object of knowledge. On the other hand, where faith and acts are foreknown, their occurrence is inevitable, and thus it becomes impossible but that they should occur.

In such cases as this, in which God's "foreknowledge" of us is in view, foreknowledge is a figure of speech. It is not only—wonderful as it is—that we are "known" by Him today, but that we *were fore*known by Him long ago as well. "Now if anyone is loving God, this one is known by Him" (1 Cor.8:3). And, as those "whom He foreknows," our calling itself is founded upon God's predesignated purpose to conform us to the image of His Son. The same is true concerning those in Christ among the Circumcision. In writing to the believing expatriates of the dispersion, Peter reveals that they were "chosen . . . according to the foreknowledge of God" (1 Peter 1:1,2).

Literally, we know facts, for example, "knowing this before" (2 Peter 3:17). Figuratively, we "know," or have a certain relationship with persons. In making his defense before Agrippa, Paul declared, "My life indeed then, from youth, which coming to be from the beginning among my nation, besides in Jerusalem, all the Jews are acquainted with, knowing me before, from the very first" (Acts 26:4,5). "Know" is continually used in ordinary speech in just this way, as well as in many passages throughout the Scriptures (e.g., Jer.1:5; Hosea 13:5; Amos 3:2; Matt.7:22,23; John 10:14,15; Gal.4:9; 2 Tim.2:19).

In Romans 8:29, God's *fore*knowledge of us has in view gracious gifts and a glorious relationship with Him. In His own counsels, God had already established these things on our behalf long ago, long before we were born. Thus we were "foreknown" by God, having already been chosen by Him, according to His purpose, and "His vast love with which He loves us" (cf Eph.2:4).

This is not a matter of partiality at all, but of purposeful choice—"according as He chooses us" (cf Eph.1:4). Its motive is the accomplishment of a glorious goal; it is not born out of prejudice. Yet purposefulness, even as partiality, involves the choosing of some and not others (in any purpose that is less than universal in scope). This is so concerning God's choice of us, even as in an orchestra director's choice of the members of his orchestra. He chooses those whom he judges to be best suited to his purpose. The act of choosing need not involve the slightest taint of partiality. Furthermore, God does not choose us simply that we might be blessed, but in order to make a display of His grace in us (Eph.2:7), and that we should become a blessing to others, serving in His work, "to have an administration of the complement of the eras to head up all in the Christ" (Eph.1:10) and "to reconcile all to Him (making peace through the blood of His cross), through Him, whether those on the earth or those in the heavens" (Col. 1:20). Our calling involves "the multifarious wisdom of God" being "made known to the sovereignties and the authorities among the celestials, through the ecclesia" (Eph.3:10).

Among the Corinthians (and we are hardly any different), it was "the stupid things of the world God chooses, that He may be disgracing the wise ones," even as the weak, ignoble and contemptible, and "the things which are not," He chooses, "that He may be disgracing the strong things"—and, "that He should discard the things which are, so that no flesh at all should boast in God's sight" (1 Cor. 1:27-29). Not many wise, powerful or noble, "according to the flesh," are even called: Thus "you are observing your calling, brethren" (1 Cor.1:26).

TWO CALLINGS

God's calling of the nation of Israel into the kingdom of the heavens, in which "many are the called, yet few are the chosen" (Matt.22:14), is an entirely different calling than the calling which Paul presents here for the members of the body of Christ, according to his evangel.

In our holy calling, God's choice precedes His call, and that by a vast expanse of time (2 Tim.1:9; Eph.1:4). God's call is of His chosen ones, and they will respond. In Paul's evangel, election is first. Subsequently, all these chosen ones are called; then they are all justified and finally all glorified. All who are called were first all chosen.

But in the calling concerning the kingdom of the heavens, the opposite is the case. Many who were called are finally not chosen. Their election is last. Only a few of the vast number who are called are finally chosen (cf Matt.22:14).

Worthiness is essential for entrance into the kingdom of the heavens (cf Matt.22:8; Luke 20:35). Yet for ourselves, worthiness is not essential to the allotment of life eonian (cf Rom.5:20,21; Titus 3:7), but only to having a part, or allotment, in God's kingdom (His government or "reign"; cf Gal.5:21; 2 Tim.2:12). All the members of Christ's body will enjoy glorious life in the oncoming eons, and they will possess it as a gracious gift (cp Eph.2:7; Col.3:3,4; 1 Cor.15:51-53).

NOW WE ARE AWARE

The awareness that God is working all together according to His counsel and purpose (Rom.8:28-30; Eph.1:4-12), and that this includes His knowledge and choice of us before we were born, seldom dawns on the believer early in his faith. But when it does, and we are able to put aside our false and prideful notions of free will and contrary choice, we are bound to increase in satisfaction and usefulness.

The CLNT of Romans 8:28 reads, "Now we are aware that God is working all together for the good of those who are loving God . . . ." Though this rendering is certainly in accord with the truth, the thought presented in the Greek text is an even wider and more glorious one. It is not only that God is working all together for the good of those individuals who are loving Him, but that God is working all together for good. Period. His operations for good are not confined to matters of our own welfare, but concern the best interests of all. They encompass all that exists and all that occurs. God is the Worker of all, for He "is working all."

Ephesians 1:11 declares that God (Theos, PLACER) is operating (IN-ACTing) all. Romans 8:28 reveals that He is doing so for good. This is His purpose. Paul says that those individuals who are truly loving the Placer not only believe this, but are aware that this is so. Immature believers may love the "heavenly Father" while being very far from loving God, "the Placer"—"the only true God" or Subjector (John 17:3). God cannot be loved as God when He is not even recognized (much less glorified and thanked) as God.

The phrase, literally," TO-THE ones-LOVING THE God," is not in the genitive case (OF), but the dative (TO). It is an appositive, making reference to how matters appear (cp James 4:17) in the eyes of those believers who have this awareness (compare the "we" here with the "you" of Romans 6:17, concerning those who "obey from the heart the type of teaching to which" the Roman saints were "given over"). The main unfolding here—that God is working all together for good—though marked by great intellectual depth, is an easy to understand thought. It may be difficult, or rather, impossible, for most to believe, but what a wonderful awareness this is!

Syntactically however, these verses as a whole are rather complex and difficult to translate into English. This is especially so since an ellipsis is required with regard to the thought presented in the latter part of verse 28 and in verse 29.

We might phrase the passage as follows: "Yet we are aware that, to those who are loving God, God is working all together for good, to those [believers], who are called according to the purpose that whom He foreknows, He designates beforehand, also to be conformed to the image of His Son, for Him to be Firstborn among many brethren [there is this awareness]."

The definite article, which appears here twice in the dative case (represented by the phrases "to those who are loving God" and "to those, who are called"), in both cases is used as a demonstrative pronoun. Though in the first statement the correct sense can be conveyed by the English far demonstrative, "those," it is important to note that Paul's reference is to his near-at-hand subject, those believers who, in fact, are loving God. But in its second occurrence, the near demonstrative, "those," must be used in order to retain the sense. For the apostle is speaking of those who are loving the Placer and of their resultant awareness. It is these believers who are being spoken of.

Paul does not say, however, that the remaining members of the ecclesia are not chosen in grace and predesignated of God. Indeed it is the very revelation of Ephesians chapter 1 that they too are so chosen and designated (cp vs.1 and 4). But it is "those who are loving God" who are in view in Romans 8:28,29.

In the nature of the case, then, the entire ecclesia is included in verse 30: "Now whom He designates beforehand these He calls also, and whom He calls these He justifies also; now whom He justifies these He glorifies also."

In the Authorized Version, proorizō is translated "predestinate," as well as "ordain" and "determine before." The Concordant Version translates it uniformly as "designates beforehand." This is its sense; it simply speaks of what is designated or specified. Its significance is clearly illustrated in Acts 11:29 (without the auxiliary, pro, BEFORE): "Now according as any of the disciples thrived, each of them designate something to send to the brethren dwelling in Judea, for dispensing." Man often fails to accomplish his plans, the things that he designates to accomplish. But God's plans, the things He designates to occur in His own wise counsels, always come to pass, for it is He Who fulfills them all (Isa.46:9-11).

In the Scriptures the expression "designate beforehand" is only used in reference to a few subjects, all of them of great consequence. Yet it should never be inferred from this that these are therefore the only things God designates beforehand. Besides, that is not the issue. Instead, the question is, Does God operate all (Eph.1:11)? and, absolutely speaking, Is there any other God (or Placer) except One, "the Father, out of Whom all is" (1 Cor.8:4-6)?

"What, then, shall we be declaring to these things? If God is for us, who is against us? Surely He Who spares not His own Son, but gives Him up for us all, how shall He not, together with Him, also be graciously granting us all? Who will be indicting God's chosen ones? God, the Justifier? Who is the Condemner? Christ Jesus, the One Who dies, yet rather is roused, Who is also at God's right hand, Who is pleading also for our sakes?" (Rom.8:31-34).

In choosing us, God has acted neither as a rewarder nor arbitrarily. Instead, in His grace, He chose us. It is what He preferred to do. Others may be better or worse than ourselves, but we are those whom God has chosen. As the dictate of His wisdom, and in accord with His purpose, He chose each one of us. He has not revealed why He selected us instead of others to be members of Christ's body. But we know that He has done so and that this was the best decision that could have been made, for it was His decision.

"Now we ought to be thanking God always concerning you, brethren, beloved by the Lord, seeing that God prefers you from the beginning for salvation, in holiness of spirit and faithfulness of truth, into which He also calls us through our evangel, for the procuring of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess.2:13,14). We will never fulfill this duty until we believe that God has indeed thus preferred us. God's purpose cannot fail, and His purpose in preferring us from the beginning and calling us into salvation is to procure the glory of Christ our Saviour.

When we enter into a settled conviction concerning these things, we will be shocked that we ever wanted to limit God's foreknowledge or mix His grace up with our responsibility. Finally, therefore, the fact that we were foreknown and chosen of God, apart from anything in ourselves, will become to us one of the most precious revelations of all the Scriptures. J.R.C.

Whom He rouses o from among the dead ones,
Jesus, our ·|Rescuer° out of the coming° ·indignation.

2 For =you s yourselves are °aware, brethren, that our ·entrance ·to d =you has not come to be for naught, 2 but though ¯suffering before and ¯being outraged in Philippi, according as =you are °aware, we are bold° in our ·God to speak the evangel of ·God to d =you i with a vast struggle. 3 For our ·entreaty is not out of deception, nor yet out of uncleanness, nor yet i with guile, 4 but according as we have been tested° by ·God to be entrusted with the evan-gel, thus are we speaking, not as pleasing human beings, but God, ·Who is testing our ·hearts. 5 For neither do we at any time become flattering in expression, according as =you are °aware; neither with a pretense for greed, God is witness; 6 neither seeking glory o from human beings, neither from =you, nor from others, when we |could° |be i a burden as Christ's apostles. 7 But we become gen-tle in =your midst, as if a nurse should be cherishing her sf own ·children. 8 Thus being ardently attached° to =you, we are delighting to share with =you not only the evan-gel of ·God, but our sf own ·souls also, because =you come to be beloved by us.

9 For =you are remembering, brethren, our ·toil and ·labor: working° night and day td so as not ·to be burden-some to any of =you, we herald io to =you the evangel of ·God. 10 =You are witnesses, and ·God, how benignly and righteously and blamelessly we become to =you ·who are believing, 11 even as =you are °aware how we are to each one of =you, as a father to his sf own children, consoling and comforting° =you and attesting° 12 io unto =you ·to be walking worthily of ·God, ·Who calls =you into His sf own ·kingdom and glory.

4 For the rest, then, brethren, we are asking =you and entreating in the Lord Jesus, that according as =you accept *b*__from us ·how =you |must be walking and pleasing God (according as =you are walking also), that =you may be superabounding yet *r*__more, 2 for =you are °aware *a*__what charges we give to =you through the Lord Jesus. 3 For this |is the will of ·God: =your ·holiness. =You are to be abstaining° from *e*__all prostitution; 4 each of =you is to be °aware of his *sf*__own ·vessel, to be acquiring° it in holiness and honor, 5 not in lustful passion even as the nations also ·who are not °acquainted with ·God. 6 No one is ·to be circumventing and overreaching his ·brother in the matter, because the Lord is the Avenger *c*__of all these, according as we say to =you before also, and certify°, 7 for ·God calls us, not *on*__for uncleanness, but in holiness. 8 Surely in consequence then, he ·who is repudiating is not repudiating a human, but ·God, ·Who is also giving His ·holy ·spirit *io*__to =you.

9 *y*Now concerning ·brotherly fondness, we ˡhave no*t* need to be writing to ⁼you, for ⁼you´ *s*yourselves ˡare taught by God io ·to be loving one another, 10 for ⁼you are doing it also *io*to all the brethren ·who are in the whole of ·Macedonia. *y*Now we are entreating ⁼you, brethren, to be superabounding yet *r*more, 11 and that you be being ambitious° to be being quiet, and to be being engaged in your ·own affairs, and to be working° with ⁼your ·hands, according as we charge ⁼you, 12 that ⁼you may be walking respectably toward ·those outside and ⁼you may be having need of nothing.

13 *y*Now we are not wanting ⁼you to be ˡignorant, brethren, concerning ·those who are reposing°, lest ⁼you may be sorrowing° according as the rest also ·who are having no expectation. 14 For if we are believing that

and He rises,

thus also, ·those who are put to repose, will ·God, through ·Jesus, be leading forth together with Him. 15 For this we are saying to ⁼you *i*by the word of the Lord, that we´, the living, ·who are surviving° *io*to the presence of the Lord, should by no means outstrip ·those who are put to repose,

16 *t*For the Lord *s*Himself will be descending° from heaven
*i*With a shout of command,
*i*With the voice of the Chief Messenger,
And *i*with the trumpet of God, and the dead ones in Christ shall be rising° first. 17 Thereupon we´, the living ·who are surviving°, shall at the same time be ˡsnatched away together with them in clouds, *io*to meet the Lord *io*in the air. And thus shall we always ˡbe together with the Lord. 18 So that, be consoling one another *i*with these ·words.

5 *y*Now concerning the times and the eras, brethren, ⁼you ˡhave no*t* need to be ˡwritten° to ⁼you, 2 for ⁼you *s*yourselves are accurately °aware that the day of the Lord is as a thief in the night—thus is it coming°! 3 *y*Now whenever they may be saying, "Peace and security," then extermination is standing° by them unawares, even as a ·pang over the ˡpregnant, and they may by no means escape.

4 *y*Now ⁼you´, brethren, ˡare not in darkness, that the day may overtake ⁼you as a thief, 5 for ⁼you´ ˡare all sons of the light and sons of the day. We ˡare not of the night nor of the darkness. 6 Consequently, then, we may not be drowsing, ⁺even as the rest, but we may be watching and be ˡsober. 7 For ·those who are drowsing are drowsing at night, and ·those who are ˡdrunk° are ˡdrunk at night. 8 Yet we´, being of the day, may be ˡsober, ¯putting° on the cuirass of faith and love, and the helmet, the expectation of salvation, 9 *t*for ·God does not appoint° us *io*to indignation, but *io*to the procuring of salvation through our ·Lord Jesus Christ, 10 the One Who dies *ov*for our sakes, that, whether we may be watching or drowsing, we should live at the same time together with Him. 11 Wherefore, be consoling one another and edifying one the *one*other, according as ⁼you are doing also.

12 *y*Now we are asking ⁼you, brethren, to °perceive ·those who are toiling among ⁼you and presiding° over ⁼you in the Lord and admonishing ⁼you, 13 and to be deeming° them exceedingly distinguished in love, because of their ·work. Be being at peace among yourselves.

14 *y*Now we are entreating ⁼you, brethren: Be admonishing the disorderly, be comforting° the fainthearted, be upholding° the infirm, be being patient toward all. 15 Be seeing that no *a*one may render evil *id*for evil to anyone, but always be pursuing ·that which is good *io*for one another as well as *io*for all. 16 Be rejoicing always. 17 Be praying° unintermittingly. 18 In everything be giving thanks, for this is God's will in Christ Jesus *io*for ⁼you.

19 Be not quenching the spirit. 20 Be not scorning prophecies. 21 Yet be testing all, retaining the ideal. 22 From everything wicked to the perception, be abstaining°.

23 y[Now may the God of ·peace s[Himself hallow =you wholly; and may =your unimpaired ·spirit and ·soul and ·body be kept blameless in the presence of our ·Lord Jesus Christ!

24 Faithful is He ·Who is calling =you,
Who will be doing it also.

25 Brethren, be praying° concerning us also. 26 Greet° all the brethren i[with a holy kiss. 27 I am adjuring =you by the Lord, that ·this epistle be read to all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our ·Lord Jesus Christ be with =you! Amen!

FAITH, LOVE, EXPECTATION

In 1 Thessalonians 1:2,3 Paul gives thanks to God, unintermittingly remembering the Thessalonians' work and toil and endurance. These are responses respectively to faith, love and expectation, the three remaining spiritual endowments of 1 Corinthians 13:13. But does Paul speak solely of their faith and their love and their expectation as given to them by God? Without developing the suggestion fully, but with the support of the revised translation, I am putting forth here an expanded meaning of the passage which has long been in my mind.

Starting with the third line, it can be read as Paul's remembrance of the Thessalonians' endurance resulting from "the expectation of our Lord Jesus Christ." That is, the believer's endurance in expectation through all the opposition of present experience and what is seen, is grounded and settled (cf Col.1:23) on our Lord Jesus Christ's expectation. Our expectation of always being together with Him (1 Thess. 4:13) is assured in that it is His expectation, and that is the essential source of endurance.

So also (working backward in verse 3) our toil of love develops, and can only truly develop from "the love of our Lord Jesus Christ (cf 2 Cor.5:14; Eph.5:2). And again, our work of faith is grounded in and grows out of "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ" in His obedience unto the death of the cross" (cf Gal.2:20; Phil.3:8). D.H.H.

PAUL TO THE THESSALONIANS (II)

1 Paul and Silvanus and Timothy to the ecclesia of the Thessalonians, in God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 Grace to =you and peace from God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We |ought to be thanking ·God always concerning =you, brethren, according as it |is meet; seeing that =your ·faith is flourishing, and the love of each one of =you all io·for one another is increasing, 4 so that we s·ourselves |glory° i in =you in the ecclesias of ·God, ov·for =your ·endurance and faith in all =your ·persecutions and the afflictions with which =you are bearing°—5 a display of the righteous judging of ·God, io·to ·deem =you worthy of the kingdom of ·God, ov·for which =you are suffering also, 6 if so be that it is right b·of God to repay affliction to ·those afflicting =you, 7 and to =you ·who are being afflicted°, ease with us i·at the unveiling of the Lord Jesus from heaven with His powerful messengers, 8 in flaming fire, dealing out vengeance to ·those who are not °acquainted with ·God and ·those who are not obeying◊ the evangel of our ·Lord Jesus Christ—9 whoa* shall |incur the righteousness of eonian extermination from the face of the Lord, and from the glory of His ·strength—10 whenever He may come to be glorified i in His ·saints and to be marveled at in all ·who believe (seeing that our ·testimony on·to =you is believed) in that ·day.

1:8 obeying: listening submissively to the evangel, cp Ro 1:5 faith's obedience.

11 *io*For which we are always praying° also concerning =you, that our ·God should count =you worthy of the calling, and should fulfill every delight of goodness and work of faith in power, 12 so that the Name of our ·Lord Jesus may be glorified i in =you, and =you in Him, in accord with the grace of our ·God and the Lord Jesus Christ.
2 *y*Now we are asking =you, brethren, *ov*for the sake of the presence of our ·Lord Jesus Christ and our assem-

=you these things?
6 And now =you are °aware ·what is detaining, *io*for him ·to be unveiled in his *sf*own ·era. 7 For the secret of ·lawlessness is already operating. Only *till*when the at present ⌊detainer may come° to be out of the midst, 8 + then will be ⌊unveiled the lawless one (whom the Lord Jesus will ⌊despatch with the spirit of His ·mouth and will ⌊discard by the advent of His ·presence), 9 whose ·presence ⌊is in accord with the operation of ·Satan, *i*with *e*all power and signs and false miracles 10 and *i*with every seduction of ·unrighteousness among ·those who are perishing°, *id*because w they do not receive° the love of the truth *io*for their ·salvation. 11 And therefore ·God will be sending them an operation of deception, *io*for them ·to believe the falsehood, 12 that all may be judged ·who do not believe the truth, but delight in ·unrighteousness.

13 *y*Now we´ ⌊ought to be thanking ·God always concern-

CONCILIATION AND LAWLESSNESS

Despite the confusion and stresses of our times it remains "a most acceptable era," for "Now is a day of salvation!" (2 Cor.6:2). It is God's grace to us to know that "all is out of God, Who conciliates us to Himself through Christ" (2 Cor.5:18). But in doing so "God was, in Christ, conciliating the world to Himself, not reckoning their offenses to them" (2 Cor.5:19). Yet there is a dark side to this operation of peace. With the conciliation, which is "the secret of the evangel" (Rom.16:25; Eph.6:19), comes "the secret of lawlessness," which Paul, the apostle of the conciliation, tells the Thessalonians is "already operating" (2 Thess.2:7). Nevertheless, the unveiling of the lawless one "with every seduction of unrighteousness" (2 Thess.2:8-10) is still being detained (v.6), and we continue to live in a most acceptable era. "Consequently, then, brethren," Paul writes in 2 Thessalonians 2:15, "stand firm, and hold to the traditions which you are taught by us whether through word or through our epistle."

THE TRUMPET OF GOD

> For this we are saying to you by the word of the Lord, that we, the living, who are surviving to the presence of the Lord, should by no means outstrip those who are put to repose, For the Lord Himself will be descending from heaven with a shout of command, with the voice of the Chief Messenger, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead ones in Christ shall be rising first. Thereupon we, the living who are surviving, shall at the same time be snatched away together with them in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. And thus shall we always be together with the Lord. (1 Thess.4:15-17)

UNTIL a beloved brother in Christ and in the Lord, F. H. Robison, requested me to set forth the difference between the "trumpet of God" in this passage and the seventh trumpet in the Unveiling of Jesus Christ (Rev.11:15) I had never noticed the fact that the seventh trumpet does indeed loom up in the background of this passage, and probably gave rise to the peculiar form in which it is cast. One would suppose, from the emphasis, that the Thessalonians had been told that, at the presence of the Lord, the living will outstrip the dead, and that He will not blow the trumpet, and that the dead will not rise until later, at another time, and that the meeting will be on the earth. And so they had, no doubt, been informed, for this is just how it will be when the Messiah returns to Israel. What Paul now tells them is quite the reverse of that which he had said before, hence he insists that it comes from the Lord.

In our quotation we have italicized the emphatic statements which are in striking contrast to the course of events when the seventh messenger introduces the reign of Christ over the world kingdom by his blast. It is difficult to account for the striking form in which the apostle expresses himself unless we keep this in mind and note that he is concerned to show that he is not speaking of the presence of the Lord at the commencement of the kingdom, when the living will outstrip those reposing, and the Lord will not blow the trumpet Himself and the dead will not be rising first, and will not be snatched away at the same time with the living, and they will not meet Him in the air. Practically every particular clashes with the occurrences when this seventh trumpet sounds.

First of all, why should Paul insist that he was saying this by the word of the Lord? Had he been speaking from himself? Was not all of this epistle inspired? The statement seems purely emphatic, and is introduced because what he is about to say regarding the presence of the Lord for the nations is in contrast to the presence of Christ for Israel. Doubtless he was well acquainted with the close of Daniel's prophecy. That he had instructed them along these lines is clear from his question in the second epistle: "Do you not remember that, being still with you, I told you these things?" (2 Thess.2:5). Then he had told them that the resurrection would occur some time after the presence of Christ. Now he wishes them to receive a further revelation somewhat similar, but not to be confused with that which he had already given. This is a new truth, which he had not told them previously.

The close of Daniel's prophecy seems to give us a clear idea of some of the principal events at the epiphany or presence of Christ when He comes to set up the kingdom. This will occur three and a half years—twelve hundred sixty days—from the middle of the last heptad, commonly called "Daniel's seventieth week." But everything connected with the kingdom does not take place at once. Thirty days later (1290 days from the same starting point) the offering that was stopped is resumed. Forty-five days after this (1335 days) seems to be the time set for the resurrection of Daniel and the kingdom saints. Thus the living saints, who have gone through the tribulation, will enter the kingdom seventy-five days before the dead are raised.

Is not this what Paul has in mind when he insists that we, the living, who are surviving unto the presence of the Lord, will by no means outstrip those who are put to repose? This is precisely what will be the case in Israel, and, up to this time, this was the only resurrection of the saints of which they could have heard. Does not this account for the emphatic double negative, NOT NO, by no means? Here was a new revelation, a presence of the Lord in which the dead do not come behind the living. If Daniel and the saints with him are "blessed" though they must wait (Dan.12:12), how much more blessed are those who do not need to wait, but arise immediately! They do not even wait until the Lord touches the earth, but are drawn to Him by the magnetism of His presence while He is in the air. Thrice blessed are those who are put to repose in this day of grace!

But why is this? If Christ is present on earth at His epiphany, why do not the saints rise to greet Him? But we must remember that the mere presence of Christ does not raise the dead. If that were so, all would have been raised when He was here in humiliation, or, at least, after His own resurrection, before His ascension. His word is needed to recall the dead to life. And, at the seventh trumpet, the blast is blown by a messenger, not by Christ Himself. No messenger can raise the dead, no matter how long or loud he blows. The seventh trumpet is also the third woe (Rev.11:14). It does not bring life, but death; it works no weal, but woe. Hence it is not fitting that the Living One should blow this trumpet. Nor is it meet that it should recall the dead to life.

tration are often confused in the minds of the saints. And this is not strange. Every great change or adjustment is bound to bring with it a period more or less chaotic. In Berlin, where some of this is being written, they are cutting through two grand boulevards, one north and south, the other east and west, right through the heart of the city. Some of it needs no change. "Unter den Linden" remains as it was. Yet in one spot a whole block of magnificent houses was pulled down to make an open place. The confusion was quite orderly, yet it was there, and even the well-informed could not say just how everything would be. So it was in the beginning of this administration. A grand boulevard had to be cut for grace right through from beginning to end.

Yet the confusion at the end is even worse, partly because it is still future, while the beginning is past, but more because it is not merely a peaceful readjustment, but a great battle line, darkened by His dreadful indignation and the din of destruction. Here are no clear limits, for it is the twilight between night and day. We cannot say this moment is in man's day, for he is still ruling, nor can we reason that the same moment is in the Lord's day, for He is thundering, but it is a time like no man's land, which belongs to both sides until the issue is decided. I would not stake off an exact boundary here. Reasoning is useless on such vague "premises."

BY NO MEANS OUTSTRIP

As we have seen, in the kingdom the living meet the Messiah first, and the dead do not rise until seventy-five days later. Unlike our upward call, His presence in Israel will at first call for sorrow. All the tribes of the land will be grieving over Him (Rev.1:7). It will not be a scene in which the dead would be welcome or happy. Hence there is a delay, as in the case of Joseph's brethren, until the affairs of the living have been adjusted, and normal relations are restored between them and their great Deliverer. After that the dead are raised in Israel, and the thousand years' reign commences.

In this way two periods of a thousand years' duration are formed, one commencing seventy-five days later than the other. Satan will be bound at the epiphany of Christ, so will be loosed before the saints have completed their term of office. His insurrection, after he has been loosed, lasts as long as the time between Christ's presence and the proper commencement of the kingdom administered by the saints. This seventy-five day delay is in strong contrast to the course of events when the Lord comes for us. Then the resurrection comes first, though we who survive are by no means left behind, for both unite in rising to meet our Lord in the air.

But why should there be this difference? The answer is simple—grace. The kingdom on earth is introduced by judgment, and this demands time for its execution, even where the saints are concerned. No such preliminaries are needed with us, for we are vivified first, before we are called upon to give an account of our actions in the body. With them He appears to those who await Him (Heb.9:28). They may feel the force of His indignation in the bowls. In the brief period following His advent, the living saints receive their wages (Rev.11:18) and the living nations are judged (Matt.25:31-46). But we are not appointed to indignation, but to the procuring of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, the One dying for our sakes, that, whether we may be watching or drowsing, we should be living at the same time, together with Him (1 Thess.5:9,10).

Grace removes the differences between us. Were resurrection a matter of merit, some of us would fall far behind, while some, I am sorry to say, feel that they should be raised at the time of their decease, if not soon after. But grace is a great leveler. There will not be a split second of priority in the resurrection. We will all be first! None will be last! In Israel the circumstances are such that the resurrection of the faithful of old is not due until the kingdom has been inaugurated.

HIMSELF

The reason why the living will not outstrip those who are reposing is found in the precious word Himself. In the work of woe, of devastation and death, He sends seven messengers, but in His prior presence, which Paul is now presenting for the first time to the saints, the Lord Himself will not only descend from heaven, but will Himself blow the trumpet, so that the effect will be the opposite of the woe trumpets. His is the voice that even the dead can hear! Indeed, it affects them first. Instead of waiting for two months or more, they are first to feel the vivifying power of His voice, and catch up with the living as they are snatched away from the earth into the air. And He it is Who blows the trumpet of God, not another!

It is possible that the Greek text of 1 Corinthians 15:52 is idiomatic, and so does not determine who does the trumpeting. It may be translated "it will be trumpeting," if we ignore the fact that it is grammatically active voice, so does not blow itself. Perhaps a small leeway is left to the bias of the translator. This is indicated in the sublinear by the fact that the He is printed with a small e, not a capital E. And I am certainly partial in my judgment in this matter. A trumpet is usually sounded by someone, so it is only a question of who does it. In this case it will rouse the dead, and I challenge anyone in the universe, apart from Christ, to do it! I have heard many a trumpet sound. Earth will hear the terrible blasts of the seven messengers at the time of the end. But no dead are roused! When these come forth I am reminded that He alone has this honor. All shall hear His voice, and not another's! Whose voice but His can rouse the dead?

The Authorized Version and Revised Version rendering, however, "the trumpet shall sound" seems to indicate that the Greek reads "the trumpet shall trumpet," for they translate the verb trumpet as sound elsewhere. Let it be clearly understood, then, that the only rendering to which no objection can be raised on the score of bias is "He shall be trumpeting." This is active voice in English, as in Greek. The grammar cannot be criticized. But if we render the word "it shall be trumpeting" we should have an object. Either it must be trumpeting something, or the verb becomes middle, not active, in its significance. The trumpet trumpets itself. Hence, if we translate it in place of He we say that this is not literal but a figure of speech, in which the active voice is used for the middle. The context or the interpretation may compel us to do this. But we should not do it until we are compelled.

Trumpets sound. This is what the Scriptures actually say in several passages (Matt.24:31; 1 Cor.14:8; Rev.8:13). In these the Authorized Version and the CONCORDANT VERSION agree. But they also trumpet. This word does not seem to have been in use as a verb in early English, so the Authorized Version renders it sound a trumpet (Matt.6:2; 1 Cor.15:52) or simply sound (Rev.8,9,10,11). In doing this they blot out a distinction which the CONCORDANT VERSION seeks to preserve. Now in English the verb sound is often middle in signification. We can use it as active, "He sounds a trumpet;" as passive, "a trumpet is sounded;" or as middle, "the trumpet sounds." This accounts for the unusual rendering of the Authorized Version. Having lost sight of the Trumpeter, they let the trumpet itself rouse the dead without His help.

Sound or blow a trumpet is found in the Septuagint, and is there expressed by trumpet a trumpet, or trumpet in a trumpet (1 Sam.13:3; 2 Sam.2:28; Isa.27:13; Jer. 51:27; Ezek.7:14), hence it could easily have been used in 1 Corinthians 15:52. But as it is not we cannot fully endorse the Authorized Version rendering today, although it is difficult to see how they could have avoided using the phrase in their days, if trumpet was not used as a verb. But they could just as well have rendered it "He shall sound a trumpet," as to change it to the middle, "the trumpet shall sound." Happily they did not change the next verb, "they shall be raised" to "they shall rouse," and thus ascribe this wondrous work to human beings. Is it not evident that He Who rouses is the One Who blows the trumpet?

Beloved reader, do you think that Gabriel, or any other messenger can rouse the dead? Do you look for the voice of the seventh messenger to recall you to life? Its blast will blight those who are blighting the earth (Rev.11:18), but not a soul will respond from the unseen. And let me confide to you a private opinion of mine which you may wish to share with me. If the messenger who blows the seventh trumpet were Christ, He might empty the tombs of Israel, and the resurrection would occur ahead of time! No! No! Trumpets have blown and more will blow, but the dead will hear them only when He will be trumpeting. It is not the trumpet that has the power, nor the sound that has authority, but the One Who does it. He and He alone is able to vivify His beloved saints.

THE SHOUT OF COMMAND

What is trumpeted? In Revelation the trumpet is not used to give any orders, but is a symbol of warlike destruction. No one is given any order, or commanded to act. But this is just what characterizes the trumpet which will not only recall the dead to life and mobilize them and the living, but will order them to ascend to Him. This command is given by means of the voice of the Chief Messenger, through the trumpet of God. It tells us what to do. It is like the shout of an officer to his men, "Forward, march!" Only with us it will be more like, "Live! Arise! Ascend!" Is this the third woe? I do not find it so!

THE CHIEF MESSENGERS'S VOICE

There was a time when I thought that Gabriel or some other "angel" would accompany our Lord and serve with his voice on this occasion. But, in other places it is plain that the dead, like Lazarus, will hear His voice. This opened to my gaze a new glory of our Lord. I had never thought of Him as an "angel," even though He seems to be the "Angel of the Covenant" of the Hebrew Scriptures. But now I see that, when He comes to us, He comes as a Messenger from God, and such He is above all of the "angels." He is the Chief Messenger. His voice alone can cope with this tremendous task. Not merely must it cover the earth, but it must vivify the saints. He may have given His disciples authority to raise the dead when the kingdom was heralded, but no one has that power now. And they did not vivify, but died themselves, and need His power to give them life eonian. Let us listen for His voice, not another's!

THE TRUMPET OF GOD

This is the trumpet of God! May we never confuse it with the trumpets of doom which fill the earth, with its most fearful inflictions! May we be preserved from identifying it with the third trumpet of woe, which stands at the summit of earth's sorest sorrows! Can there be any greater contrast than the death-dealing deeds done under the trumpets of woe, in one of which a third of mankind is killed (Rev.9:18), and the trumpet of God which brings incorruptibility to untold myriads of the reposing believers, immortality to millions of surviving saints, and power and glory inexpressible to both? We need only to change "trumpet of God" to "trumpet of woe" in our passage to see how utterly flagrant and false it would be. We could not console anyone with a trumpet of woe (1 Thess.4:18)!

THE DEAD RISE FIRST

To us, with our outlook, it seems strange that the dead should not rise for more than a month in the millennium. And it also seems unnecessary to insist so strongly that the dead will not be left behind at that time. It seems a matter of course. Why not? But, in view of the previous teaching of the Scriptures and the order of events in the day of the Lord, it is well that this is made so clear. It is also a wholesome restraint on us, who are so inclined to make the dead rise long before and go to heaven or some twilight intermediate bourne, as flitting shadows unknown to God's revelation.

AT THE SAME TIME

Here we find a fine fault in the literary language of the Scriptures. "At the same time" "together" is tautology, redundancy, excessive verbiage, a fault all who study rhetoric are taught to avoid: But, like many bad things, it may be used for good. Lawyers use it so as to avoid leaving a legal loophole. The Scriptures usually repeat for the sake of emphasis. Here, it seems, we have both. The point is important. Large "movements" in Christendom deny that the dead will be caught away at the same time together with the living at the presence of the Lord. Hence its emphasis is more than justified and the "fault" is found to be a highly finished literary feature.

SNATCHED AWAY IN CLOUDS

When the Son of Mankind comes He will dispatch His messengers (not necessarily "angels") with a loud-sounding trumpet, and they will assemble His chosen ones from the four winds, from the extremities of the heavens to their extremities (Matt.24:31). There are no dead here. They are not snatched away from the earth but gathered together on it, from every place under the heavens. He is on the earth, and they are gathered to Him there. When He comes to us we perform a feat which none of the kingdom saints could accomplish. If He came only to the air, they could not meet Him there, and ever be with Him thus. But we will float and rise above the earth like the vapor that is drawn up by the presence of the sun. And thus shall we always be together with Him. This would ruin the whole millennium if it applied to Israel. They will have Him in the land and on the throne of David, not in the air.

IN THE AIR

In the kingdom all will remain on earth. Neither revelation nor reason will grant any of the kingdom saints a journey into the air, to meet the Lord there. His feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives. I feel quite certain that I have stood close to the place where He will descend, if not upon the very spot, for I made a point of wandering about the southern end of the Mount of Olives in order to visualize the scene as vitally as possible. But when the trump of God shall sound we will not only be vivified but changed, so that He will not need to descend to the earth to meet His saints. They will not be struck down by the last woe trumpet, but carried aloft in clouds by the transforming power of His grace, on their way to the celestial allotment which He has prepared for them.

TOGETHER WITH THE LORD

The figure of clouds is well chosen. I hesitate to spread a figure out beyond its proper bounds, so only suggest the following. Some have found it difficult to see how we could always be with the Lord, when He is to be on the earth. A single question may clear that up. Where are the clouds? Are they in the air or on the earth? It is quite possible for a cloud to be both. Clouds on the ground, which we call fogs, are in the air quite as really as those above a high mountain peak. The ground is not their place, but they can descend if occasion demands. In the intricate and eventful history of the universe our Lord will not be confined to the earth nor banished from it. So will we be also. But we will be independent of it, and with Him—and that is more than we can say of the most deserving of the saints in Israel, or on the earth. I, for one, am content to be WITH HIM ALWAYS.

Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

THE RACE YOU RUN IS HIS RACE TOO

Let's run the great race;
You need not be a seer.
Keep a good steady pace;
From the start we're nearer
To the end, to the goal.

A wreath of righteousness
For those who run aright.
It is not won by swiftness;
Keep the end in sight,
One day we will be whole.

A great example is our Father
Whose race began eons ago.
There's eons yet in order to gather
All above and all below
Gathering all from pole to pole.

So when you get weary
From running the race,
His goal won't miscarry;
He'll finish with grace
Under His loving control.

EDITORIAL

IN THESE DAYS and increasingly in the days to come we need to set our minds and hearts on God's evangel concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. That God spares not His own Son, but gives Him up for us all (Rom.8:32)—that thus Christ Jesus comes into the world to save sinners (1 Tim.1:15), is the critical point of our faith. Indeed it is the critical point of God's eonian operations. The entrance of sin and death into the world, the promises of life to come apart from sin, of kingdom, both terrestrial and celestial, of salvation and reconciliation of all (p.30), are empty and meaningless apart from the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. All the revelations of "The Glory of His Grace" (p.4), made known through our apostle Paul (p.40), all that Scripture makes known about God's ways and achievements (p.9), all these riches of truth concerning which this magazine gives so much attention, are dependent on this one act of faith and love (p.27) described in 1 Timothy 1:11 as the evangel of the glory of the happy God. And for us as we live in present times, so brief and ever changing and insecure, this message of overwhelming grace is our daily source of joyful expectation and peace.

In this issue we present our revision of Paul's two letters to Timothy (as they presently stand). Even here in personal letters where the pronoun "I" naturally occurs often we perceive the spirit of "yet not I, but the grace of God" (1 Cor.15:10) throughout in the many reminders of the evangel of God centered in Christ. Therefore we are led to say with Paul: "The Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit! Grace be with you! Amen!" (2 Tim.4:22).

D.H.H.

THE GLORY OF HIS GRACE

GOD, Who blesses us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials, Who chooses us in Christ before the disruption, is "in love designating us beforehand for the place of a son for Him through Christ Jesus; in accord with the delight of His will, for the laud of the glory of His grace, which graces us in the Beloved" (Eph.1:5,6). In this rich revelation we find the basis of all our blessing in the love and will of God. His love predesignated us to sonship, His will is to display that love by an exhibition of His grace, possible only through the disruption and the entrance of sin. We were in the Son of His love in the beginning, according to His purpose; we are in the Beloved through the grace glorious which now graces us in Him.

IN LOVE

God begins all in love. The very universe was created in the Son of His love (Col.1:13-16). If the eyes of our hearts were open to this great truth, we could not help seeing that His goal must consist in the display of His affection. We would not be blinded by the intermediate processes, but recognize that these are the necessary background for its revelation. God is love, hence He must commence and consummate all in love, even though the path between is wet with weeping and hard with hatred and dumb with dread and death. Love is the root and love is the fruit of God's whole purpose. Let us, who are privileged to enjoy a taste of its entrancing sweetness before the goal is gained, look back to its inception, and fix our hearts firmly in that primeval plan.

All this is Godlike. It transcends our human ways and thoughts. Man knows little of what he is about, and he does not understand, far less control, the process. The future is hid in darkness. Whence he comes or whither he goes he knows not, neither does he know the way. But, with God, the end was the beginning. The final outcome determined the commencement and the course of its accomplishment. If He is to end in being beloved by all His creatures, He must begin in love. The substratum of every step He takes, no matter how it may appear on the surface, is love. It is not simply the silver lining of the cloud, the ameliorating circumstances which attend evil, but the burden of woe is itself imposed by love, for a time, in order to procure its own appreciation when it is removed.

PREDESTINATION

Let us not confuse predestination (predesignation, CV) with election. God's election or choice, one of the most precious pearls in the Scriptures, has been foully soiled in the mire of human theology. It has been divorced from service and associated with salvation. From a means of blessing to those outside its range, it has been made a curse. Theology leaves the "non-elect" to hopeless, endless retribution. Scripture makes them the beneficiaries of the blessings bestowed on the elect. Theology, as a rule, knows no distinctions between the various classes of the elect.

In the Scriptures there are at least five distinct spheres where God's choice has been exercised, so that all the elect are also nonelect with reference to some other service. Thus it comes to be that, if all the nonelect are damned, as theology teaches, then all are doubly damned, and none are saved!

Predestination deals with a distinct aspect of God's choice. It designates beforehand the destiny of God's creatures during the eonian times. It assigns them their proper relationship to God and His Christ. It defines the exact place accorded them in the process of redemption. The Greek word is a compound of pro, BEFORE, and horizō, SEEize. From the latter word we have our word horizon, the line which defines the boundary between earth and sky. Its force is to designate, define.

SONSHIP

In the evangelical effort to emphasize the necessity of the new birth we have lost the much greater truth of sonship. It is only as we see that the birth from above is an earthly thing, confined to the Kingdom proclamation concerned with the nation of Israel, and foreign to the truth for today, that we are prepared to enjoy the much higher honor of sonship. We are too much given to illogical "reasoning" and spoil many a figure of speech by smothering its point in false inferences. The new birth is a figure of the inception of life. Sonship is a figure of investiture with the honors and dignities of maturity.

In ancient times sonship was a recognized social institution and was never confounded with birth. Girls as well as boys were born, but they never were given the place of honor. A man may have had many boys, but only one could attain to the dignity of his father. He was usually the eldest, though this was not always the case. But real sonship comes before us clearly only in case a man had no children. If he had wealth and honor, he must choose someone to be his heir. A slave was often chosen for sonship. Such a case is portrayed in "Ben-Hur." This is the place that love has given us. We are designated for the place of a son through Christ Jesus.

When the one thus chosen came of age there was usually a magnificent ceremony and entertainment to celebrate the event. And this is what we are awaiting. Nor are we alone in our expectancy. The whole creation is looking for the day when we will openly assume the place of sonship. "The hopefulness of the creation is awaiting the unveiling of the sons of God" (Rom.8:19). "The entire creation is groaning together and travailing together until now. Yet not only so, but we ourselves also who have the firstfruit of the spirit, we ourselves also are groaning in ourselves, awaiting the sonship, the deliverance of our body" (Rom.8:22,23). We shall have the thrice-blessed place of being delivered and by our deliverance delivering the groaning creation.

Throughout Scripture the word son is used in a much higher sense than child. Those who are led by the spirit of God, these are the sons of God. Only in the measure in which this is true of us today can we claim to be sons. In the resurrection we will always be utterly under the control of His spirit. This will conform us to His character; it will make us true representatives of His glories. Then He will be truly displayed in us and through us. And this is the object of sonship and predesignation. It is not simply negative salvation from sin but positive possession of flawless holiness and high honors which will reveal the glory of His grace to the celestial hosts.

In the Scriptures "son" is an index of character. Paul did not call Elymas a "child of the devil" (Acts 13:10, AV), but "son of the Adversary." We are not "children of light, and the children of the day" (1 Thess.5:5, AV). We are "sons of the light and sons of the day" (CV). We were "sons of stubbornness" (Eph.2:2; 5:6; Col.3:6), not "children of disobedience" (AV). We are not "children of Abraham" (Gal.3:7, AV), but "sons of Abraham" (CV). It is a pity that most versions should have obscured the great truth of sonship by such frequent perversions. Hundreds of times we read of the "children of Israel." It should be the "sons of Israel." Those who use these translations are at their mercy. It is practically impossible for them to apprehend and enjoy the great truth of sonship, for the passages in which it is especially displayed have been degraded to the lower relationship of children.

THE DELIGHT OF HIS WILL

The word "will" has been hardened by opposition. It suggests stern inexorable adamantine determination. But, before there was aught to clash with it, God's will had no such iron aspect. Then it was immersed in love. Its decrees were its delight. As the servant of love it determined that its master should not only be known, but should receive the heartfelt adoration of all who were the objects of its affection. God's will does not delight in its power or inevitability, but in the fruit of His favor. It seeks the laud of the glory of His grace, which graces us in the Beloved (Eph.1:6).

No epistle is so full of grace as Ephesians. It not only begins and ends with grace, as most of Paul's epistles do, but strains the capacity of human speech to express its lavishness. Ephesians presses salvation in grace (Eph.2:5,8). This is the grace which is the result of being saved. It is the vast storehouse of grace on which we may draw at any time. The forgiveness of our offenses is in accord with the riches of His grace (Eph.1:7). Our future will display its transcendent wealth (Eph.2:7). Thus the eons will be dazzled with its glory.

The grace glorious has two distinct aspects, deliverance and dominion. From the lowest place in the universe the saints are taken and raised to the highest in this administration of God's grace. Sinners from the depths and darkness of divine displeasure are exalted to the highest pinnacle of His favor. From being a curse to themselves and all who came near them, they are transformed into a blessing to the utmost bounds of God's creation.

A. E. Knoch

HUMAN LOVE AND FREEDOM

ALL is to God's glory (Rom.11:36). "Now to Him Who is able to do superexcessively above all that we are requesting or apprehending, according to the power that is operating in us, to Him be the glory in the ecclesia and in Christ Jesus" (Eph.3:20,21). We do not at all have and never will have any independent glory in an absolute sense. God's creatures are constituted to manifest His glory, not to create their own.

There is nothing unseemly in the fact that God makes this present world (SYSTEM) and all that is in it (Acts 17:24). And it is certainly not unsuitable that it should be in His counsels to make all that is good, especially our love for Him. This love is still ours to possess and enjoy, though His by achievement: "For His achievement are we, being created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready beforehand, that we should be walking in them" (Eph.2:10). Though God certainly has not forced us to love Him, or rather merely to pretend to do so, nonetheless, He has introduced a myriad of influences into our lives which He has wisely designed in such a way that they are certain to affect us so that we genuinely and voluntarily love our Subjector. Greater is the efficacy of our Lord's grace unto righteousness than the (albeit) formidable force of sin's flesh unto unrighteousness (cf 1 Tim.1: 12-16; 1 Cor.15:10).

All causal synonyms are of the same basic significance. They point us to that which occurs or comes into being as the product of the agency which produces it. Effects are determined by causes. Once a cause occurs, its effect becomes necessary; it cannot not occur. It makes no difference whether the occurrence in question is that of a nail being driven into a board or of a man being influenced to make a choice. The existence of causality is not dependent upon one's awareness or acknowledgement of its presence.

It is only a matter of idiom when we say that an object falls to the ground "due to" the "pull" of gravity, that electrical "force" "makes" a motor operate, or that a man is "influenced" by his associates. Whenever we speak of such things as good "influences" or bad "effects," we are making reference to the presence of causative agencies.

Influences are always fully causal in nature, even if, in many cases, in themselves they are only necessary causes, not sufficient causes. Regardless, an influence that does not influence is not an influence. A cause which effects nothing and affects no one, is not a cause.

The verbs "influence" and "affect" are often used as figures of association in reference to collective causative factors which, when acting synergistically, together cause a certain event to occur or a certain effect to result. This is to say that when these necessary (which is to say, indispensable) causes causally interact and coalesce, they constitute a sufficient cause.

All genuine influences produce their own effects. They make certain things necessary, even if they do not make certain other things necessary.

When we ask the question, Why? we are often inquiring concerning the purpose of something that has occurred. That which has a purpose is purposed to occur—it is caused to occur for a specific purpose. It is evident that whatever occurs for a purpose takes place due to a cause, for it is absurd to conceive of a thing of chance having a purpose. Why? is frequently asked as well when seeking for an explanation, for that which will account for or reveal the particular cause or reason of an occurrence. The word "why," in itself, always presupposes causality; it merely seeks to know the particulars involved in a certain matter. Anyone who believes in free will should never ask, Why? concerning any of life's affairs.

GOD'S OWN COUNSELS; MAN'S CHOSEN DEEDS

In Romans 14:12, the apostle Paul says, "Each of us shall be giving account concerning himself to God." It is foolish, however, to think of this accounting as an occasion for divine retribution upon free will sin. For if, as claimed by the advocate of free will, we are not caused to choose and act as we do, then we are certainly no more "responsible for" (able to avoid) our deeds than if we are caused to do them. Indeed, it would be impossible to give any account whatever for a free will or uncaused event, in the sense of giving an explanation for its occurrence. If we are wise, we will not dread the day when we will give an account of ourselves to God, but anticipate it, yearning to learn of His good purpose concerning all.

God's gracious workings certainly are the greatest "force," or power, in all the universe. The voluntary love and service which they produce are created just as effectively and surely as any compelled, involuntary servitude could ever be. For they are the product of God's own counsels, channeled through His achievements in the cross of Christ, and He would not have them fail.

That which is "voluntary" is that which we volunteer to do, as contrasted with what is compulsory. We choose to do such things, actually preferring them (however wisely or unwisely) over other activities. They are not simply the consequence of our choice of certain things, but to us they are "choice" in themselves, in the sense of preferable, in accord with our current desires, however excellent or awful our current desires may be. The fact that voluntary acts are those that we do by choice has no bearing whatever on the question of whether their presence is necessary or unnecessary, avoidable or unavoidable. That for which we volunteer is a voluntary act or a chosen course of action. Whether our preference is itself the product of a cause or a thing of chance will not have any bearing upon our having chosen it. For this will remain true in either case.

It is not as if the Scriptures, whether by declaration or corollary, actually affirm the notion of free will. Free will is merely presupposed, and is therefore read into the Scriptures. It is not that it is found there; it is rather that advocates of that view, inferring its presence and abhorring any thought of its absence, unwittingly seek to put it there.

Since both determinism and indeterminism (or any combination of the two) preclude free will, free will, therefore, cannot be true. Further, since in all possible worlds, free will is precluded, it is impossible to give any objective account of how it might exist. That which is necessarily unreal, cannot be made real by the mere force of rhetoric. All that one can do in the interests of free will is to engage in circular arguments on its behalf, special pleading, on the assumption of a necessarily incorrect premise.

Actual self-determination would only be a rejection of divine determination. This would simply mean that man determines his own future instead of God. It would constitute polytheism instead of monotheism. But at least it would not be a notion of literal, actual chance. It would still be a deterministic concept. But if, as is also confusingly claimed by the advocates of conventional free will, nothing determines man—even from within himself—to choose and act as he does, then so-called "self-determination" itself would finally be but a thing of sheer chance, uncontrolled and uncontrollable. No one could be commended or criticized for such acts, for their presence would be due to nothing at all.

Under such a system, all instruction—whether entreaties, discipline, warnings or incentives—would be in vain. For none of these could affect even a single person. They could have no affect at all upon anyone whomsover; there would be no advantage to their presence, and no disadvantage to their absence. Therefore, it is free will (in its actual "chance" nature), not divine determination, that would make human effort and endeavor to be useless.

We thank God for all things, including our love for Him; it is not a thing of caprice or chance, but the product of a cause. Blissfully, and actually, we "can't help" loving Him: "We are loving God, for He first loves us" (1 John 4:19)!

FREEDOM VS. FREE WILL

Scriptural freedom—freedom worthy of the name—is not a power of "free will." No one can be what he is not. Neither personal maturity nor progression in the understanding of scriptural administrations brings the power of contrary choice, or, as popularly expressed, "free will independence." The era in which any particular man may live relative to the various administrations, has no bearing on this issue. For the idea known as "free will" is false in itself, and therefore cannot be true at any time or under any conditions. This is so even though many who do not understand, and yet imagine that such a power is essential to spiritual adulthood, have claimed that it is the hallmark of maturity. To the contrary, the mature believer, first of all, will recognize, and then glorify and thank, God as God, Who alone is the Subjector of all (cf Col.1:10; Rom.1:21). Certainly, he will not care to champion "free will." In the meantime, belief in free will no doubt will continue to prevail in the lives of those who are "puffed up" by their fleshly minds (cf Col.2:19; 1 Cor.4:6,7).

Just because it is sound, sound teaching concerning God's deity will not be tolerated, and certainly will not be widely accepted. The foolish cannot recognize its validity and wisdom, and "minors in Christ" are not able for solid food (1 Cor.3:1,2). It takes wisdom even to recognize truth, and much grace to follow it. God alone can supply these.

No one, including God Himself, ever chooses by means of freewill chance. In choosing as He does, God is subjected neither to chance nor to sinfulness. He chooses what is best, because of His own wisdom and righteousness. Out of His own perfection, He is caused to choose as He does. His preferences do not exist by chance! It is certainly no dishonor upon the Deity for His choices to be caused, especially when we see that their only cause is His own perfection. Would we prefer instead for them to be due to the operation of some competing power to whom He must be subject, or even to be a thing of actual chance and so due to nothing at all? Yet these are our only conceivable alternatives.

It is evident, therefore, that the actual notions advocated under the clever and confusing banner "free will," namely the absence of causality and the presence of avoidability, are claims which not only fail to attend even a single created being at any time and concerning any thing, but are things from which no one is any further removed than the Supreme Deity, the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory.

Even God cannot deny Himself (2 Tim.2:13); He is not "free" to be foolish or sinful in any way, but enjoys the "bonds" of His own righteousness, goodness, love and grace, in which He is always constrained to do what is best and act ideally. Whatever God chooses to do is chosen because He conceives its presence to be preferable to its absence. However, God's choices, unlike our own, are never shortsighted, or the product of sinful desires, but are the reflection of the perfection of His Being.

Scriptural freedom, of which we enjoy a small measure by the power of the holy spirit of God, is freedom from Sin, not abandonment to chance. Each of us experience this freedom even now, though in a limited way. This is reflected in the disposition and walk of all those who are truly "in Christ Jesus" (Rom.8:1-4). But we long for the day when we will enjoy its fullness. Then we will possess such unbounded liberty that we will not be free to sin (cf Rom.8:29; cp 1 John 3:9; John 8:31-36).

FOR FREEDOM CHRIST FREES US!

As those who were obeying from the heart the type of teaching given over to them by the apostle Paul (cf Rom. 6:17), the Romans had not gotten "slavery's spirit to fear again" (Rom.8:15).

The foolish Galatians, however, had again become "enthralled with the yoke of slavery" (Gal.5:1a). They wanted to be under law (Gal.4:21). God's message to them was "grace and peace" (cf Gal.1:3), but in their apprehensions, they had fallen out of grace (Gal.5:4b). Therefore, the apostle shouts to them, "For freedom Christ frees us! Stand firm, then, and be not again enthralled with the yoke of slavery" (Gal.5:1).

It is vital that we heed Paul's counsel. For the power of Sin is the law (1 Cor.15:56). Those who were under law and yet not in the grace of God, were ever "in fear of death," for through their entire life they were liable to slavery (Heb. 2:15), subject to all the law's curses at their least infraction of its precepts (cf Deut.28:15). Anyone who should be keeping the whole law, yet should be tripping in one thing, becomes liable for all (James 2:10).

Living in such an environment, rather than eliminating sin, actually leads to its increase. "At the coming of the precept Sin revives" (Rom.7:9). "Sin, getting an incentive through the precept, deludes me, and through it, kills me" (Rom.7:11). We need to be in a realm which is "apart from law," where "Sin is dead" (Rom.7:8).

God has put us in just such a place. In His grace, He has justified us apart from law, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:21,24) and has placed us "in Christ." Here we are safe. Our life is hid together with Christ in God (Col.3:3).

In Romans 6:13 we are entreated to present ourselves to God as if alive from among the dead, and to present our members as implements of righteousness to God. Yet if the apostle's words following this statement were to accord with the popular beliefs of today, the passage would have to read, "You must do this, for Sin shall be lording it over you if you do not." His inspired words, however, are just the opposite of this: "[Be heeding my words,] For Sin shall not be lording it over you, for you are not under law, but under grace" (Rom.6:14).

The ground and strength of the apostle's entreaty is our freedom from Sin's lordship. Since we are "under grace" and Sin shall not be lording it over us any longer, we are free from the deleterious influence which Sin produces in us through its insistent misuse of the law of God. Law is laid down for the lawless and insubordinate (1 Tim.1:9), which, in ourselves, includes us all. But it is not laid down—even to the slightest degree—as a means toward the achievement of our righteousness. Righteousness is not out of law (cf Gal.3:21b). If righteousness is through law, consequently Christ died gratuitously (Gal.2:21).

Those who are resting on law, on man's obedience to legal precepts, are doomed to despair. In speaking of himself and his fellow—Israelites, Paul says, "We were garrisoned under law, being locked up together for the faith about to be revealed. So that the law has become our escort to Christ, that we may be justified by faith" (Gal.3: 23,24). Indeed, "the scripture locks up all together under sin, that the promise out of Jesus Christ's faith may be given to those who are believing" (Gal.3:22). We do not seek a righteous standing before God by our obedience. Instead, through the work of Christ, all God's chosen ones find such a privileged position.

THE GLORIOUS FREEDOM OF THE CHILDREN OF GOD

The entire creation has been subjected to vanity, the slavery of corruption, of which the sufferings of the current era are the result. None of God's creatures volunteered for this; all were subjected to it because of God (cf Rom.8:18-22). But He has subjected us to this experience in which we groan and travail, "in expectation that the creation itself, also [not only believers], shall be freed from the slavery of corruption into the glorious freedom of the children of God" (Rom.8:21). Therefore, we are expecting what we are not observing, and are awaiting it with endurance (cf Rom.5:3-5; 8:25).

If we would be faithful, our primary desire must not be for the elimination of our miseries, but for the ability to be active in our love for God even if our trials should remain. If we would be true, it is absolutely out of the question for us to give first place to personal gratification (cf 2 Tim.3:4,8). All manner of secular schemes and "Christian" concoctions may well alleviate our pains, but only at the terrible price of imbibing their spirit and coming under their sway. They are "affording exactions rather than God's administration which is in faith" (1 Tim.1:4).

The only wise counsel, then, "for all endurance and patience with joy" (cf Col.1:11b), is the advice which Paul gave to Timothy. It is this: "Be invigorated by the grace which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim.2:1). There is much grace for us in Christ Jesus. This grace is able to deal with our troubles and failings in the way that God intends (cf

2 Cor.12:9). It comes to us through our active and grateful mindfulness of the sacrifice of Christ in which He died for our sakes. Invigorating grace also comes to us through our believing, understanding and rejoicing in the unbounded benefits which God will surely bring to all through Christ's saving work.

All have been subjected to vanity, and, at the consummation, all will become subjected to God, that God may be All in all (1 Cor.15:28). It is necessary to suffer in the vain bonds of corruption in order to reveal the glory of the great God Who alone can deliver from such a fearful condition. There must be sinners if sinners would be saved. If God would be glorified as their Saviour and if they would know the unspeakable blessing of salvation from all sin and shame, they must experience a short season of evil. It is in view of such considerations that our apostle joyously declares, "I am reckoning that the sufferings of the current era do not deserve the glory about to be revealed for us" (Rom.8:18).

The obedience of Christ unto death, even the death of the cross, has only led to His exaltation. God is love (1 John 4:8b). "If He afflicts, yet He has compassion according to the abundance of His kindnesses" (Lam.3:32). He is the Saviour of all mankind (1 Tim.4:10). God highly exalts His Christ, "and graces Him with the Name that is above every name ["Jesus," Yahweh-SAVIOUR], that in the Name of Jesus every knee should be bowing, celestial and terrestrial and subterranean, and every tongue should be acclaiming that Jesus Christ is Lord, for the glory of God, the Father" (Phil.2:10,11). All are bound, that they might enjoy this freedom. And, all are bound to enjoy this freedom! God has given us His word on this. We long for the consummation, and await it in expectation, with joyful confidence in "the kindness and fondness for humanity of our Saviour, God" (Titus 3:4).

PAUL TO TIMOTHY (I)

1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus, according to the injunction of God, our Saviour, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our ˙Expectation, [2] to Timothy, a genuine child in faith:

Grace, mercy, peace, from God, our Father, and Christ Jesus, our ˙Lord.

[3] According as I entreat you, remain° with them in Ephesus, when going° into Macedonia, that you should charge [a]some not to be teaching differently, [4] nor yet to be heeding myths and endless genealogies, which[a] are affording exactions rather than God's administration, the administration which is in faith.

[5] [y]Now the consummation of the charge [l]is love out of a clean heart and a good conscience and unfeigned faith, [6] from which [a]some, ¯swerving, are turned aside into vain prating, [7] wanting to [l]be teachers of the law, not apprehending [n]either what they are saying, [n]or that concerning [a]which they are insisting°. [8] [y]Now we are °aware that the law is ideal if ever anyone should be using° it lawfully, [9] being °aware of this, that law is not [l]laid° down for the righteous, yet it is for the lawless and insubordinate, the irreverent and sinners, the malign and profane, thrashers of fathers and thrashers of mothers, homicides, [10] paramours, sodomites, kidnapers, liars, perjurers, and if any [d]other thing is opposing° ˙[l]sound teaching, [11] in accord with the evangel of the glory of the happy God, with which I´ am entrusted.

[12] Grateful [l][hv]am I to Him ˙Who invigorates me, Christ Jesus, our ˙Lord, [t]for He deems° me faithful, ¯assigning° a Human, Christ Jesus,

6 ˙Who gives Himself a Correspondent Ransom [ov]for all

(the testimony in its own eras), [7] [io]for which I′ am appointed a herald and an apostle (I am telling the truth, I am not lying°), a teacher of the nations in knowledge and truth.

[8] I am intending°, then, that ˙men be praying° in every place, lifting up benign hands, apart from anger and reasoning. [9] Similarly, women also are to be adorning themselves in raiment, decorously, with modesty and sanity, not [i]with braids and gold, or pearls or costly vesture, [10] but (what is becoming to women professing° a reverence for God) [th]with good works. [11] Let a woman be learning in quietness [i]with [e]all subjection. [12] [y]Now I am not permitting a woman to be teaching nor yet to be domineering over a man, but to ˡbe in quietness [13] (for Adam is first molded, thereafter Eve, [14] and Adam is not seduced, yet the woman, deluded, has come to be in the transgression). [15] Yet she shall be ˡsaved through the child bearing, if ever they should remain in faith and love and holiness with sanity.

3 Faithful is the saying: "If anyone is craving° the supervision, he is desiring an ideal work." [2] The supervisor, then, ˡmust be irreprehensible, the husband of one wife, sober, sane, decorous, hospitable, apt to teach, [3] no toper, not quarrelsome, but lenient, pacific, not fond of money, [4] controlling° his ˙own household ideally, having his children in subjection with [e]all gravity—[5] [y]now if anyone is not °aware how to control his ˙own household, how will he ˡcare° for the ecclesia of God?—[6] no novice, lest ¯being conceited, he should fall [i] into the judgment of the Adversary. [7] Yet he ˡmust ˡhave an ideal testimony also from ˙those outside, that he should not fall [i] into the reproach and trap of the Adversary.

[8] Servants, similarly, are to be grave, not double-tongued, not ˡaddicted to much wine, not avaricious, [9] having the secret of the faith in a clear conscience. [10] [y]Now let these also first be ˡtested°: thereafter let them be serving, being unimpeachable. 11 The wives, similarly, are to be grave, not adversaries, sober, faithful in all things. 12 Let servants ˡbe the husbands of one wife, controlling° children and ˙their own households ideally, 13 for ˙those who serve ideally are procuring° for themselves an ideal rank and much boldness in faith, the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things I am writing to you, though expecting to come to[d] you more quickly, 15 yet if I should be ˡtardy, that you may be perceiving how one ˡmust ˡbehave° in God's house, which[a] ˡis the ecclesia of the living God, the pillar and base of the truth. 16 And avowedly° great ˡis the secret of ˙devoutness,

Which is manifested in flesh,

Believed in the world,
Taken up in glory.

4 [y]Now the spirit is saying explicitly, that in subsequent eras [a]some will be withdrawing° from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits and the teachings of demons, 2 in the hypocrisy of false expressions, ˙their own conscience having been cauterized°; 3 forbidding to ˡmarry, abstaining° from foods, which ˙God creates [io]to be partaken of with thanksgiving by ˙those who believe and ˚realize the truth, 4 seeing that every creature of God is ideal and nothing is to be cast away, being taken° with thanksgiving, 5 for it is being hallowed° through the word of God and pleading. 6 By suggesting° these things to the brethren, you will ˡbe an ideal servant of Christ Jesus, fostering° with the words of the faith and of the ideal teaching which you have fully followed. 7 [y]Now ˙profane and old womanish myths be refusing°, yet be exercising yourself [td]in devoutness, 8 for ˙bodily exercise ˡis beneficial [td]for a few things, yet ˙devoutness ˡis beneficial [td]for all, having promise for the

Who ˡis the Saviour of all human beings,
Especially of believers.

11 These things be charging and teaching. 12 Let no one be despising your ˙youth, but ˡbecome a model for the believers, in word, in behavior, in love, in faith, in purity. 13 Till I ˡcome°, be giving heed to ˙reading, to ˙entreaty, to ˙teaching. 14 Be not neglecting the gracious gift which is in you, which is given to you through prophecy with the imposition of the hands of the eldership. 15 On these things be meditating. In these ˡbe, that your ˙progress may ˡbe apparent to all. 16 Be attending to yourself and to the teaching. Be persisting in them, for in doing this you will be saving yourself as well as ˙those hearing you.

5 An elderly man you should not upbraid, but be entreating him as a father, the younger men as brethren, 2 the elder women as mothers, the younger as sisters, in [e]all purity. 3 Widows be honoring, ˙who are really widows. 4 [y]Now if any widow ˡhas children or descendants, let them ˡlearn to be ˡdevoted to ˙their own household first and reciprocate by paying ˙their progenitors, for this ˡis welcome in ˙God's sight. 5 [y]Now ˙one really a widow, and ˚alone°, ˚relies on ˙God and is remaining in ˙petitions and ˙prayers night and day. 6 Yet she ˙who is being prodigal, though living, is ˚dead. 7 These things also, be charging, that they may ˡbe irreprehensible. 8 [y]Now if anyone is not providing for his ˙own, and especially his family, he has disowned° the faith, and ˡis worse than an unbeliever. 9 Let no widow be ˡlisted° of less than sixty years, having been[c] the wife of one man, 10 ˡattested° [i]by ideal acts: if she nourishes children, if she is hospitable, if she washes the saints' feet, if she relieves the ˡafflicted°, if she follows up with every good work. 11 Yet the younger widows ˡrefuse˚, for whenever they should be restive against ˙Christ, they are wanting to be marrying; 12 having judgment seeing that they repudiate ˙their first faith. 13 Yet at the same time they are learning to be idle also, wandering˚ about the homes. PAUL'S PERSONAL EPISTLES

Paul's letters to Timothy and Titus are concerned with conduct in service. Not only are they given instructions for their own guidance, but rules are laid down for the selection and service of elders, or supervisors, and servants. These two classes were officially recognized and appointed and their functions defined. Besides this there are exhortations for all the various classes in the ecclesias, old and young, the rich and the dependent widow, and slaves. Indeed, these epistles contain the constitution of the out-calling. The second epistle to Timothy is especially applicable to the last days.

FAITH AND LOVE IN CHRIST JESUS

MUCH has been lost by taking passages referring to Christ's faith to speak of our faith in Him. This also may well be so with certain passages in I and II Timothy where faith is said to be "in Christ Jesus" (1 Tim.1:14; 3:13; 2 Tim.1:13; 3:15). Does Paul speak here of the believer's faith in Christ Jesus or Christ Jesus's own faith, that faith which is in Him? (Or perhaps are both applications somehow in view?).

This article is meant to be introductory to the matter, and not at all a thorough investigation. And it will consider it primarily as it appears in 1 Timothy 1:14 where not only faith is in view, but love as well.

Previously the CV has indicated that Paul speaks of his faith and love in Christ Jesus. It is true that the grace of our Lord overwhelms [Paul's former hateful calumniation, persecution and outrage, and his unbelief] with faith and love in Christ Jesus (that is, his hate is replaced by love, and his unbelief by faith). Yet that is not what Paul says here.

There can be no doubt that there was a change in Paul. The context, as it leads from verse 12 makes this clear. But also the context as it leads from verse 11 makes it clear that the evangel of the glory of the happy God is in view as well, and this is brought before us in plain and striking terms in verse 15. "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all welcome, that Christ Jesus comes into the world to save sinners." And then Paul brings himself back into the picture by saying he is the foremost of sinners.

Let us note, therefore that Paul refers to himself by the personal pronouns "I" and "me" in verses 12 and 13 six times (as translated in the CV), and often before. But he does not do so in verse 14, and not again until the end of verse 15[1]. We may well assume, on the basis of verse 13 that the grace of our Lord overwhelms Paul's unbelief and hate. But Paul says only and simply: "the grace of our Lord overwhelms" [OVER-MOREIZE]. This opens up the application not only to Paul, but to all sinners as brought out in verse 15 (and later affirmed in 1 Timothy 2:4,5).

To repeat, verse 14 does not bring over the personal pronouns of verse 13, but rather refers to "our Lord" as in verses 1 and 12, and to "Christ Jesus," as in verses 2,12 and 15.

THE IN CHRIST JESUS

The Greek construction "the in Christ Jesus," is an appositive to "faith and love." The words "faith and love" are to be understood following the definite article "the," hence: Grace overwhelms ". . . with faith and love, the faith and love in Christ Jesus. Yet surprisingly (here and in 2 Timothy 1:13) the definite article is singular in Greek, so that the "faith and love" is considered to be one thing here, hence "the faith and love thing." It is, perhaps, the faith and love character (or mindset ["disposition"] as in Philippians 2:5), or the faith and love way of operating, that is in view. Christ's faith is His loving faith.

The evangel of the glory of the happy God is being brought before us as a matter of faith and love which as a single quality is in Christ Jesus. It is faith joined with love that leads Christ Jesus to come into the world system as it exists, to empty Himself and humble Himself in obedience even to the death of the cross (Phil.2:5-8) in order to save sinners!

1. The pronoun "our" includes Timothy and relates them to Christ Jesus as Lord.

Yet of course this appositive can be taken as a reference to Paul's own faith and love (cf 1 Tim.1:5) as given to him in Christ Jesus, just as grace is given to us in Christ Jesus (2 Tim.1:9). Nevertheless, to receive grace in Christ Jesus it must first be in Christ Jesus (cf 2 Tim.1:9). So also faith is first (and of primary importance) to be understood as in Christ Jesus.

Indeed this appositive construction often is clearly alternative to the genitive "of" construction. Paul addresses the Corinthians as "the ecclesia of God, the [ecclesia which is] in Corinth" (1 Cor.1:2; 2 Cor.1:2), while he writes to the Galatians as "the ecclesias of Galatia." Thus "the faith and love in Christ Jesus" would likely be understood as equivalent to "the faith and love of Christ Jesus."

And once again, there is no direct reference to Paul in 1 Timothy 1:14 while there is double reference to our Lord Christ Jesus. We must give first place to what is said, over and above what may be assumed.

Once we see the emphasis on Christ Jesus's faith (joined with love) in 1 Timothy 1:14 we can make the connection with passages in Romans, Galatians, Ephesians and Philippians which speak of Christ's faith. God's evangel is first of all a message of Christ's loving faith in emptying Himself, humbling Himself, giving Himself to the death of the cross. This is His faith following the will of His God and Father Who sends and gives and spares not His only Son for the sake of sinners. This is Paul's testimony throughout his epistles. The evangel is "out of faith, for faith" (Rom. 1:17)—out of the Righteous One's faith, Christ Jesus's faith, for our faith.

Paul's hateful unbelief has become loving faith, but he is not thinking of himself in 1 Timothy 1:14, but of that which he is believing, our Lord Christ Jesus's own grace and faith and love.

WORTHY OF ALL WELCOME

(1 Timothy 4:9-11)

SOMETIMES when we are wearied of unfulfilled promises, unfinished endeavors and unsatisfying possessions we look about us and wonder, Is there nothing that is of lasting consequence? Everything seems to come short of our expectations. We even let ourselves down.

But, when we turn to God's Word, all our longings are met. Human words and schemes fail, but God and His sayings are faithful. Consider this: Faithful is the saying and worthy of all welcome (for for this are we toiling and being reproached), that we rely on the living God, Who is the Saviour of all human beings, especially of believers. These things be charging and teaching (1 Tim.4:9-11).

All of God's words are faithful and call for eager acceptance, but here is a saying which is marked off with special emphasis and magnified with special importance. And then by coupling this passage with its parallel in 1:15, our consolation is complete: Christ Jesus comes into the world to save sinners.

Nothing else, perhaps, is so vital to us and so revealing of God as this pronouncement of God's work of salvation. Will we not welcome such overwhelming grace, coming as it does with Christ Jesus's faith and love, sending Him into this world of shame, to save ignorant, calumniating sinners like us? With open arms, with humbled spirits and with receptive hearts, we grasp these words gladly. If there is reproach in welcoming such joy, inexplicable as such reproach might be, there is also reliance. If there is toil in holding faithfully to such faithful sayings, there is also the peace and satisfaction of becoming acquainted with the living God.

Strangely, however, the majority of humanity have habitually welcomed what is unfaithful, untrue, and ultimately dishonoring to God. This is the tragic record of human history, and it is at the very core of human distress. Eve hearkened to the Adversary's lie. Cain refused to avail himself of God's provisions. And down through the centuries it has remained the same. Men prefer the false to the faithful.

GOD IS THE SAVIOUR

It is good news to our hearts that entirely apart from our own efforts, God Himself is the Saviour of all human beings. This word dispels all our worries. Nevertheless, some would secretly nourish the idle fancy that God needs certain additions to His grace from us. The Galatians, for example, by turning their backs to the goodness that is in grace and welcoming instead that which was worthless (Gal.4:9) were suffering much loss of inner joy and peace.

Salvation is God's favor. He purposes, and He performs. And we receive.

This is worthy of our fondest and fullest acceptance. It is the most persuasive evidence there could be of the life and activity that is in God. In the midst of testing we are refreshed by placing our complete confidence in this God Who saves. On Him we can rely!

GOD IS THE SAVIOUR

There is no comfort in maintaining what is not true. Yet some have claimed that God has limited Himself as to the time of salvation. Of course we would not deny that today is a day of salvation (2 Cor.6:2) and that this era is limited (1 Cor.7:29). Yet God never ceases to be the Saviour of all human beings. This is what He is, and He always remains faithful to this designation.

Some of the Thessalonians evidently became shaken and alarmed, fearing that God's work of salvation had ceased (2 Thess.2:1-5). Yet even in the day of His indignation God continues to save. And He does not stop until all are delivered safely to Himself (1 Cor.15:24-28).

It is only by embracing this faithful word that fear and doubt can be removed. That God's character continues to be that of the Saviour is worthy of our warmest welcome. Does it not secure and strengthen us? Even though His enemies increase, yet God, nevertheless, is their Saviour. We are thus assured that what He is will someday be fully effected. All human beings will then know God in truth as their Saviour.

GOD IS THE SAVIOUR

Perhaps in all the annals of human history no declaration so deserving of acceptance has been so neglected or opposed as this, that God is the Saviour of all mankind. Some among the Corinthians attacked it by denying the resurrection, its very foundation (1 Cor.15:12). Today, men continue to reject the reality of our danger. Death is not a friend; it is the greatest of all enemies (1 Cor.15:26). From it and its sting of sin (1 Cor.15:56) we must be saved.

God is the Saviour. That means He actually delivers us from the perilous position in which we are born as sons of Adam.

These words have tremendous power to comfort and soothe our every anxiety and rejoice our dejected spirits. This is our God, the One Who is the Saviour of all human beings. What positive quality does He lack? Power? Wisdom? Love? All of these are seen in the God Who does such a great work as this! There is no room for failure in Him. There can be no weakness and no indifference in the One Who saves all. Yet He is especially the Saviour of those who are believing this evangel as worded so well in 1 Timothy 2:5,6. For there is one God, and one Mediator of God and human beings, a Human, Christ Jesus, Who gives Himself a correspondent Ransom for all.

As believers who receive God's special eonian salvation, we should find particular pleasure in keeping this faithful word, and even more so in sharing it with others. There is One on Whom we can rely. There is a truth that will never let us down. There is a place where we can go when we are distressed and be filled with satisfaction and happiness. Faithful is our God. Faithful is His work. Faithful is His Word. And Faithful is the saying that He is the Saviour of all.

GERALD W. UPTON

Our fellow worker and brother in the Lord, "Jerry" Upton was put to repose on January 26, 2022, at age 87. Born and raised in the industrial area of southeast Detroit, he lived most of his life in the Detroit area, finally settling with his wife, Alta, north of the City, not far from our office in Almont. A laborer who did not finish public school, he nevertheless was an avid reader, mostly on scriptural topics. His journey of faith took him from storefront "charismatic" attendance to a more sober law-centered association focused on the Old Testament and the "circumcision" writings, and then finally to fellowship centered on Paul's evangel of grace and God's present administration in faith.

In recent years Jerry enthusiastically aided us in proofreading chores, and encouraging fellowship, as his confidence in God's purpose of love through our Lord Jesus Christ for each and every individual grew. We will miss him greatly.

FULLY FOLLOW PAUL
(2 Timothy 3:10-13)

PAUL encouraged Timothy in fully following him in his teaching (2 Tim.3:10). This was the ideal course. In the past Timothy had "fully followed" "the ideal teaching" (1 Tim.4:6). Now Paul seeks to remind him that by continuing to do so, he will save both himself and those who hear him from withdrawing from the faith (cf 1 Tim.4:1,6,16).

Only a very small percentage of believers seem to have a practical awareness of the importance of following Paul in his teaching, in the heralding of his evangel. And fewer still have been able to do so, for most have not "followed" (understood) his words. Sadly, they have not, to adapt Luke's words on a different theme, "fully followed all accurately" (cf Luke 1:3). However, since we are aware that God is working all together for good, we recognize that all our disappointments are actually but His appointments, in His great wisdom and love. Therefore let us be gracious toward those who are blind to the evangel of the glory of Christ (2 Cor.4:4), realizing that "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are concealed" in God (Col.2:3).

God must reveal His truth to us; otherwise we cannot grasp it. Those who herald and teach the Word faithfully are mere "servants . . . , through whom you believe." Yet, "God's farm, God's building, are you" (1 Cor.3:5-9). We are "His achievement" (Eph.2:10). And we are all members of Christ's body. But, "all the members have not the same function" (Rom.12:5). Likewise, even those of similar services can only serve "in accord with the grace which is given to [them]" (Rom.12:6). God is "apportioning to each his own, according as He is intending," "operating all in all" (1 Cor.12:6,11). All do not make the same progress, or grow at the same rate. However, "the entire body . . . is growing in the growth of God" (Col.2:19). As with the seasons of the year, "For everything there is a stated time, And a season for every inclination under the heavens" (Ecc.3:1). This is the way that it is, and we will do well to accept it, for human murmurings and reasonings will not change God. Indeed, they make it evident that those who engage in them do not "fully follow" Paul.

PAUL'S DISTINCTIVE MESSAGE

All scripture is a revelation of truth concerning the subject with which it deals. Therefore we must not confound different subjects. It is foolish to suppose that the Lord's own words to the disciples and the throngs (as in "red letter" Bibles) are on a higher level than His words through His apostles. Neither is it true that He gave an identical message to all who were His apostles. For the nature and purpose of the ministry of the twelve was quite different than that of Paul's ministry. It is not pleasing to God for us to take to ourselves things which He has given to Israel alone. It needs to be appreciated that stealing the belongings of others is no more to be applauded than is the dereliction of one's own duties.

It is a great advance to recognize the fact that all in the "New Testament" except for Paul's epistles is concerned with the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. It is all according to the ancient Hebrew prophets, and concerned with Israel's affairs, both in the conclusion of this eon and in the impending one. Apart from Peter's brief allusion to Isaiah as to "new heavens and a new earth" and John's vision of the new earth, nothing is said of any matters beyond the terrestrial events of the coming eon. And only as the nations of the earth are blessed with Israel in that day, do they even come into the picture. Therefore, only by grasping Paul's teachings, especially his mature unfoldings, can we, as believers of the nations, become informed of those things which concern ourselves. For Paul "was appointed a herald and an apostle and a teacher of the nations" (2 Tim.1:11).

To enter into life in the Messiah's kingdom, one must be just and worthy, having demonstrated a satisfactory measure of personal righteousness according to both Moses' law and the precepts of the Lord which He proclaimed during His ministry to the sons of Israel. For those of that calling, these things are essential. They were never rescinded, nor could they be (cf Matt.5:20), on behalf of the disciples or any of those reached through their ministry. And, in the coming era of the conclusion of this present eon, they will become equally applicable to the believing Israelites and proselytes of that day. None can enter into the kingdom on earth except under these conditions. Thus, it is "a cramped gate and narrowed way . . . leading away into the life" thereof, "and few are those who are finding it" (Matt.7:14).

Now the fact is that of the many groups which suppose that the scriptural promises concerning the kingdom of the heavens are for themselves, none even attempt to keep but certain parts of the law, and that not apart from a confused admixture of things from Paul. If life in the terrestrial kingdom were their calling, they would all be disqualified for it. Worst of all, they conceive of man's obedience, finally, as a human contribution through which he qualifies himself for "eternal" life. Yet this is contrary to the genuine evangel of the Circumcision, which is a message of grace to all those of that administration who are in Christ. Though under law, they are nonetheless in the true grace of God, in which He provides all that is needed for their obedience, through His marvelous workings in the lives of His people. But today, hardly any of this is perceived. Instead, believers are subjected to a terribly confused and corrupted "gospel," which is not a message of grace at all, but a travesty, for the most part a perverted caricature of the evangel of the Circumcision.

But we rejoice to know that neither darkness nor disbelief can annul the completeness in Christ (Col.2:10) which is the possession of all the members of His body. Its members have this blessing and all its benefits, even if they have never heard of it, or even if they should deny and oppose it. For in our calling it is not a matter of our knowledge, nor of our walk, but of the fact that God in His grace, apart from law, justifies us gratuitously and places us in the body (1 Cor.12:18), having chosen us in Christ so long ago (Eph.1:4). Though our service to Christ as our Master ("in the Lord") may be quite deficient, God's ability to gain and maintain for us our secure place as members of Christ's body, is most efficient.

But it is only as we are able to "follow" Paul's writings as to their actual teachings, that we can be in a position to follow him in such a way so as to be teaching accordingly ourselves. May we be included among those who "are not as the majority, who are peddling the word of God" and "adulterating" it. Let us become qualified, competent workers, speaking "as out of sincerity[1], . . . as of God, in the sight of God, in Christ" (2 Cor.2:17; 4:2).

IMITATING PAUL

Not only are we to follow Paul, we are to "imitate" him as well (mimeomai, "attempt the same thing in the same manner," KEYWORD CONCORDANCE, p.154). This entreaty is presented in several passages (cp 2 Thess.3:6-9; 1 Cor. 4:16; 11:1; Phil.3:17; cf 4:1,9). Paul explains why we should do so: "Become imitators of me, according as I also am of Christ [imitating]" (1 Cor.11:1). Though Paul's service was not perfect, as the Lord's own would have been, had He carried out Paul's ministry personally instead of through the apostle, he was still an unusually faithful servant and is worthy of our imitation. There was much accord between Paul's actual service and those entreaties which the Lord had revealed to him to give to the members of His body. Therefore, immediately upon having declared matters of the greatest consequence as to his evangel and its service, he says: "Become imitators together of me, brethren, and be noting those who are walking thus, according as you have us for a model" (Phil.3:17).

Paul's evangel is only "his" in the sense that it is the distinctive message which the Lord first entrusted to him (cf Gal.1:6-12; 1 Thess.2:13). It is also "the evangel of Christ" (e.g., 1 Cor.9:12). Indeed, in the highest sense, Paul's evangel is "God's evangel" (e.g., Rom.1:1). But it is not the same evangel of Christ, or of God, which is presented elsewhere (e.g., Mark 1:1; 1 Peter 4:17). It is true that it has a number of similar features, and, when given its proper place, is in harmony with all other revelation. Nonetheless, likeness is by no means identity. In various respects, Paul's evangel is unique, and presents us with revelations that are quite different and far more glorious than those found elsewhere. We become aware of this as God establishes us in accord with Paul's evangel (Rom.16:25).

Now you fully follow me in my teaching, motive, purpose, faith, patience, love, endurance, persecutions, sufferings, such as occur to me in Antioch, in Iconium, in Lystra: persecutions such as I undergo, and out of them all the Lord rescues me (2 Tim.3:10,11). We will still be very deficient in our service, even if our teaching itself should find full accord with Paul's, if we fail to follow those things which attended his teaching.

Let us consider Paul's motive and purpose. The nature of that which causes us to act, and the goal we have in mind in so doing, determine the character of our actions. For an act is neither sinful nor upright of itself, but due to the motives which produce it and the reasons for which it is done. One may well act in a way that results in certain benefits, and yet still fail to perform a good act. For if our acts, merely as a by-product thereof or as a veil to hide our true designs, should result in certain benefits to ourselves or others, this is no indication of their uprightness. For whenever we do helpful things, but as those who are motivated by selfishness or otherwise sinful gain in so doing, our acts remain essentially sinful ones. This is due to our unworthy reasons for so doing and their motivating effect upon us. Paul, however, was graciously constrained by the love of Christ, and sought only to boast in the cross of Christ, while seeking the welfare of others, unselfishly and gladly giving the glory for all things to God (2 Cor. 5:14; Gal.6:14; Rom.11:36).

Paul was singleminded for God and His Word: ". . . of nothing have I a word, nor yet am I making my soul precious to myself, till I should perfect my career and the dispensation which I get from the Lord Jesus, to certify the evangel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:24). Timothy imitated him in "seeking . . . that which is of Christ Jesus'" (Phil.2:21), instead of selfish interests.

Paul's faith was genuine, firm, settled and unmovable. He was persuaded by the truth, and had a strong expectation concerning all of God's promises. Since his faith was stable and sure, he could face the terrible reality of so many of his circumstances, being confident of the Lord's saving power, even if He was not presently exercising it.

All true faith in God and in His Word, is His gracious gift; He alone is able to dispense and sustain it.

The apostle's patience is a marvelous model for us to imitate. For example, among the Thessalonians he was gentle, as a nurse cherishing her own children (1 Thess.2:7), waiting for God to perfect His work among them. Of course, those outside had contempt for his message, were stumbled by it and considered it foolish, often causing him great personal injury as well (2 Cor.6:3-10). But the worst pains came to him daily, and were not from the outside but from within. They were the result of his heartfelt solicitudes for all the ecclesias (2 Cor.11:28), in all their doubts, departures, neglect, ingratitude and otherwise shameful deeds. Yet to such ones Paul could say, out of much patience, "Being reviled, we are blessing; being persecuted, we are bearing with it; being calumniated, we are entreating" (1 Cor.4:12,13).

Paul's love was one of "being ardently attached to you, . . . delighting to share with you not only the evangel of God, but our own souls also, because you come to be beloved by us" (1 Thess.2:8). In criticizing the Corinthians, Paul said, "Not to be abashing you am I writing these things, but as my children beloved am I admonishing you . . . . I am entreating you, then, be becoming imitators of me" (1 Cor.4:14,16). In his love, he taught the truth, seeking not to please men, but to edify his fellow believers through the word of God's grace. He did not compromise, and because of this, being true to the brethren and their best interests, he appeared to some to have become their enemy (Gal.4:16). Above all else, we must be walking in love, for without it we are nothing (1 Cor.13:2).

Paul's ministry was a great wonder of endurance in the face of so many afflictions of the worst sort. Yet his endurance produced testedness, which, in turn, resulted in "expectation" (Rom.5:4). Trials often serve to increase expectation, our reliance upon God, and an increase in our trust. Besides actual expectation, which must be confined to our confidence in God's glorious promises for ourselves and for all in the times ahead, we may have figurative expectation concerning even our trials. That is, we may have the positive and joyful outlook which we associate with our literal expectation in God's happy promises, concerning even those affairs of life which would otherwise mortify us. For, in themselves, indeed, our failings and sufferings are humiliating and painful, sometimes even disgraceful.

But we believe that God will bring great good out of them all, such good as would have been quite impossible had they never occurred! At the deepest level, it is God Who makes our trials, and Who promises to give us sequels to them all someday (1 Cor.10:13). To enable us to undergo them at present, Paul would have us accept and be attentive to these things. Out of a deep appreciation of these very matters, Paul could say, "Now expectation is not mortifying, seeing that the love of God has been poured out in our hearts through the holy spirit which is given to us" (Rom.5:5).

Even the persecutions and sufferings, such as those which Paul underwent in Antioch, Iconium and Lystra,[2] were trials concerning which he could say, "out of them all the Lord rescues me" (2 Tim.3:11). Though we may not be called upon to suffer the degree of pain and persecution which was Paul's, still, to fully follow him, we will need to undergo those which are appointed to ourselves.

2. In Antioch, Pisidia, the Jews were filled with jealousy and "were contradicting the things being spoken by Paul, blaspheming" (Acts 13:45). They roused up persecution for Paul and Barnabas, and ejected them from their boundaries (Acts 13:50). In Iconium, the same thing occurred" (cf Acts 14:1-7). In Lystra, "Jews from Antioch and Iconium come on, and persuading the throngs, and stoning Paul, they were dragging him outside of the city, inferring that he is dead" (Acts 14:19).

DEVOUTNESS AND PERSECUTION

And all who are wanting to live devoutly in Christ Jesus shall be persecuted (2 Tim.3:12). Persecution (CHASing) can take many forms. May we cause no one to "chase" after us with evil intent because of our own foolishness or offensiveness. We are to suffer evil "with the evangel" (2 Tim.1:8), not precipitate persecution by being obnoxious. Yet in some way, and to some degree, all those who are wanting to be living devoutly in Christ Jesus shall be persecuted. Like Paul, we will suffer "for His sake" when others misunderstand and mistreat us due to our firm stand for "the faith of the evangel" (cf Phil.1:27-30).

Yet wicked human beings and swindlers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived (2 Tim.3:13). Many of these may not be wicked in their deportment, or committed to swindling others through their message. God alone knows the heart. With some, such deceptions may be intentional, though not often obviously so. Yet in many cases, and with those who may otherwise be commendable individuals, there will only be a certain likeness to the patently wicked man and the swindler.

Such things as these "shall" occur, for that is what the future holds. However, we may be certain that God has a good purpose in them all. After all, He is ideally good and full of power, and yet it is in His universe that these things exist. Concerning our God, the only true Subjector or Placer, Paul has said, "This One am I announcing to you. The God Who makes the world [human society as presently constituted] and all that is in it . . . . He Himself gives to all life and breath and all" (Acts 17:24,25).

May it please our God and Father to direct our steps in such a way that we may be characterized as those who "fully follow" the apostle Paul, for the glory and laud of God. J.R.C.

Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

"SIN brings misery on mankind; transgression calls down indignation; but an offense is the wound that aches God's heart" (p.56).

"We are having the forgiveness of offenses in accord with the riches of [God's] grace, which He lavishes on us" (Eph.1:7). God forgives us for having offended Him, for having wounded His feelings.

God loves us with a vast love (Eph.2:4); as his children, we belong to Him. Hence it is unsurprising that in our distressing deeds and fleshly foolishness we offend our God and Father. Howbeit, how wondrous it is that it is as we become more sensitive to our offensiveness to Him in respect of our multitudinous failings, that we gain a greater desire to be well pleasing to Him in the casting aside of these selfsame wrongful ways. Even if at best our progress in so doing is measured, for this progress we are unspeakably thankful to Him in His kindness to us.

"No epistle in the Scriptures is so full of harmonies as Ephesians. There is a continual assurance that each phase of our blessing is in accord with all the rest" (p.59).

"When, in Greek, the definite article ("the") follows the word or words it modifies, we are being led to pause, repeat in our mind what has just been said, and reflect on it as it is further defined" (p.70).

"Much of our thinking is distorted by pride. Even if we have been graced to come to Christ as our Lord and Saviour, that is no indication at all that we are particularly inclined to repudiate our trust in the flesh as to our daily affairs" (p.71).

Pages 80-83 contain our revised Concordant Version of Paul's epistle to Titus, with translation notes.

"Paul saw Titus as 'a genuine child in accord with the common faith' (1:4). What we have in common is not the same measure of faith (cf Rom.12:3), but the truth we are believing. It is 'the faithful word' (Titus 1:9)" (p.84) . . . . "The common faith is the evangel of which Paul is not ashamed, for it is God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it (Rom.1:16)" (p.85).

"The advent of God's grace is the intervening, rescuing and glorious appearance of God's joyful favor to humanity in the gift of His Son" (p.87). "What could be more sane? What could be more productive of righteousness and devoutness than a faith centered upon the blessed advent of God's grace for salvation to all which is revealed in the evangel?" (p.91)

"It is true that 'righteousness' encompasses many particulars. Yet in our wider pursuit of 'righteousness, faith-[fulness], love, [and] peace' (2 Tim.2:22), there are certain things that are basic to our approach, besides being practical necessities along the way" (p.92) . . . . "It is critical, then, that we become 'concerned to be presiding for ideal acts' (Titus 3:8). Indeed, we cannot very well 'be learning to preside over ideal acts for necessary needs' (Titus 3:14), unless we first become concerned to do so" (p.93).

On page 94, we present an Introduction to Philemon, which is "the only private, personal letter from the pen of the apostle Paul . . . a perfect specimen of its kind. Its powerful yet pathetic appeal is the ripe fruitage of that overwhelming grace which Paul dispensed from his Roman prison. Himself a prisoner, he captures the runaway slave and gives him the freedom of Christ, yet sends him back to the master from whom he had escaped."

On pages 95-96 we close this issue with our revised Concordant Version of Paul's epistle to Philemon. J.R.C.

DELIVERANCE BY BLOOD

IN THE BELOVED we are having the deliverance through His blood, the forgiveness of offenses in accord with the riches of His grace, which He lavishes on us . . . (Eph.1:7,8).

Those who have the sublinear of the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT will note why the word deliverance is used, rather than redemption. Redemption or ransom is LOOSEN*ing*. Deliverance is far more; it is FROM-LOOSen*ing*. Its special force is evident in the fourteenth verse of this chapter, where the sealing of the holy spirit (which is only for those who have been redeemed) is until the deliverance of that which has been procured. Deliverance by blood is not simply a guaranty of future good, but a present realization and enjoyment of freedom from God's indignation. It is not that we will have this, but we are having it now. This word is peculiarly Paul's. He uses it seven times out of its ten occurrences.

Deliverance is by blood and by power. It averts God's just sentence and it rescues from the evil circumstances of human life. In Egypt, the firstborn were delivered from the death stroke of the destroying messenger by the blood of the lamb (Exodus 12). The whole nation was delivered from the armies of Egypt by the outstretched arm of Yahweh.

All Israel was shielded from the inflictions that fell on Egypt by the divine mercy alone. But if Egypt's firstborn are to be slain, justice demands that Israel's firstborn suffer a like penalty. Their only escape lay in a release acceptable to Yahweh. As the firstborn are to be delivered, a lamb is taken for each household. There was not one lamb for each person, nor yet one for the whole nation, as in the Antitype. There was, roughly speaking, one lamb for each firstborn.

So we see that the firstborn, and they alone, were delivered by blood. They form a select company in the wilderness. No wonder that Yahweh does not wait a day before He tells them: "Hallow to Me every firstborn male . . . It is Mine" (Ex.13:1,2). And no wonder that it became a statute in Israel that every firstborn animal was to be sacrificed to Yahweh. Only the firstling of an ass and the firstborn of mankind might be ransomed, and each with a lamb. If not, then the animal's neck was to be broken (Exodus 13:13).

Thus it was when they came out of Egypt. But when Yahweh pitched His tent in their midst in the wilderness the ransom of the firstborn passed over to the tribe of Levi. They were hallowed and set apart from the rest of the nation to wait on Him. They were numbered by themselves (Num.3:12). This is a precious picture of Yahweh's estimation of the blood, and it shows how He has only those near Him who know a blood deliverance. All Israel were delivered from Egypt by power, but only those hallowed by blood could draw near to Him. The rest were kept outside His habitation.

We would miss much, indeed, if we did not see in this history a type of God's Lamb and the blood He shed on Golgotha, which is the sole ground of confidence of the ecclesia of the firstborn (Heb.12:23). It portrays that later exodus, as told us in the treatise called Acts. Once the nation was identified with Moses. Then marvelous power was put forth to deliver them from the bondage of Egypt and bring them into the promised land. Now "the powers of the impending eon" (Heb.6:5) are put forth on behalf of the people, not only to indicate deliverance from their enemies, but as a prelude to the coming Kingdom.

Once the land lay but a short journey across the desert sands. Now the Kingdom has drawn very near. No long deferred delay is necessary. But, even as they spent forty years in the wilderness for lack of faith, so now, for forty years, they try God's patience by refusing to trust in His Prophet, of Whom Moses had told them (Deut.18:15-18). Once a few entered Canaan and brought back some of its goodly fruit. So now they are given a taste of the celestial gratuity (Heb.6:4).

But, alas! The majority never reached that delectable land! All lacked confidence in Yahweh except Caleb and Joshua. So now, the nation fails to enter the Kingdom because of unbelief. They cling to the law and their own dead deeds. The majority, in both cases, never knew deliverance by blood, though surrounded by tokens of His ability to deliver them by His power. If we dwell too long on deliverance by power, it is only to keep it distinct from blood deliverance, and to note its contrast. Deliverance by power will come before us again. For us it is future. Deliverance by blood, however, is our present portion.

The treatise on the Kingdom of God, called the "Acts of the Apostles," will never be fully understood until these two distinct deliverances are perceived. The whole nation of Israel partook of a measure of blessing, even in unbelief. The Circumcision epistles, Hebrews, James, Peter, John, and Jude, should be read in this light. How many of God's dear people, sheltered by the blood, have needlessly shuddered under the dark shadows of the sixth and tenth of Hebrews! These apply to those who had known only the premonitory evidences of a future deliverance by power. They have no bearing on those beneath the blood.

Deliverance by power is brought by strength; the blood is a memorial of weakness and suffering. The soul of the flesh is in the blood (Lev.17:11). Sensation is situated in the crimson stream. There is nothing in the actual substance of the blood which has any intrinsic value. The animals slain under the divine ritual did not suffer, it is true, for the blood was poured out so that sensation fled. But in the great Antitype, when God's Son poured out His soul unto death, it was not until after He had suffered that the blood was shed. The blood figures the abiding efficacy and value of His sufferings.

Deliverance by power needs no memorial other than its own effects. Deliverance by blood reminds us of a Sacrifice. In the tabernacle types, there was an annual repetition of the great day of Atonement, or Shelter. The victim was slain but once a year, but its blood was efficacious for a twelve month. The crimson spots upon the Propitiatory preserved all its value for the eyes of God. So with the great Antitype. The virtue and value of His death, and all its precious fragrance will never cease. Though the actual blood has long since been lost, in figure it will remain forever, the memorial of the sufferings which will deliver the whole creation.

They crucified Him. Little did they dream that thus their foulest deed would bring them fairest favor. Little did they know that the physical agony was but the sign of far sorer sufferings, due to His severance from God's face. Yet now the suffering all is past. This fact alone should make our hearts a well of gratitude, not because of what it brings to us, but what it means to Him. The wormwood and the gall have been displaced by perpetual pleasures at God's right hand. The sufferings, the darkness and despair, are far beneath our fathoming. And so are the glories also—higher than our eyes can reach, though we yet shall see and share them with Him.

A suitable reward for all He did we never could have offered Him. But God has given Him a place and a portion which it should be our delight to trace and bid our hearts confirm. His death is past, yet, though eons draw upon the resources of His blood, they never will exhaust its potency or drain the wealth it brings to God. Upon His sufferings, upon the blood which speaks of it, reposes this deliverance, rich and rare. But the severance from a doom well merited, wondrous as that blessing is, is but the lower score of the divine harmony. Before touching the higher keys, let us sound these lower notes.

SIN

The whole creation is under law. All else would be confusion, chaos. Breaking the laws of nature brings on a retribution none can stay. Failure to conform to law in any sphere is sin. Had man not swerved from his lawful course, he would be perfect, and would measure up to the standard God Himself had set. To lack aught of this ideal condition is proof positive of sin, of lawlessness.

All failure is sin. In the olden time there were men in Israel so expert with the sling that when they shot they never "sinned" (Judges 20:16). That is, they never missed the mark. This is the essence of sin. It is not confined to overriding known commands. It includes every failure to attain perfection, in every sphere, material, mental, or moral. Let us, in spirit, transport ourselves into the consummation, when sin shall be banished. Suppose (which cannot be) that in that bright scene a single ray of light should depart from its appointed, God-given path. Suppose that one thought should stray into devious ways. Suppose that a solitary act should be unholy. Such lawlessness, such sin, would once again drag down all to wreck and ruin. In the beginning a single sin brought about the moral chaos that we see.

TRANSGRESSION

Adam's guilt was far heavier than this. He did not merely fail, for he transgressed. Before He sinned God had spoken, showing him the boundaries of obedience and where sin's territory began. God had said, "you must not." Yet he did. He walked right over the prohibition God laid down. He trespassed into the realm of the forbidden. This was more than sin. It was not the lawlessness of failure or of ignorance, but of light. It was a transgression.

OFFENSE

Yet a deeper, darker side than even this marked Adam's act. God had been with him as a friend. He had supplied a present bounty for every need. He had given Adam a place superior to every creature that he knew. He had done everything to win his heart. The serpent knew what would most wound God's affections. It aims directly at these deeper feelings, and insinuates that God is dealing deceitfully with His creatures. And Eve believes the lie! Sin brings misery on mankind; transgression calls down indignation; but an offense is the wound that aches God's heart.

THE FORGIVENESS OF OFFENSES

Perhaps the word "forgiveness" here should be put in quotation marks, for it suggests the pardon granted in the proclamation of the Kingdom, though it is now adapted to a higher sphere. That pardon, however, was in line with the limited mercy dispensed at that time, this is in accord with His grace, yes, the riches of His grace. Hence, though the word "forgiveness" is used, the thought is immeasurably above its former usage. Moreover, this is connected, not with sins, but offenses. Sins may be pardoned, but offenses against the feelings must be forgiven.

THE RICHES OF HIS GRACE

The forgiveness of offenses seems to be so far below the sphere of truth in the Ephesian epistle that those who are most enlightened are tempted to look askance at the phrase and wonder if it is well founded in the ancient text. They have learned that pardon, or forgiveness (it is the same word) is probational. It belongs to the proclamation of the terrestrial Kingdom. Many who gained pardon, like the ten thousand talent debtor, lost it through misconduct. The great mass of pentecostal believers, by their refusal to allow pardon to be preached to the gentiles, had their own pardon revoked.

Paul, meanwhile, has heralded a far higher, a far greater grace than the pardon of sins through repentance and baptism. He set forth justification by faith, through the unforced favor of God, which leads us into a sphere where condemnation no longer exists (Rom.8:1). It is absolutely without admixture of works, either before or after it is received. It cannot be forfeited by aught that we can do. Having this, shall we go back to pardon, even if it is in Ephesians?

Ephesians does not deal with the pardon of sins, but the forgiveness of offenses. It is not in the sphere of government, or of the courtroom, but of the home. It has reference, not to God's rule, or His righteousness, but His feelings. We are not forsaking justification for a lower benefit. We are going on to a higher, even if one of the terms is borrowed from the lower. We have not only sinned and are justified, but we have offended God, and are forgiven.

This forgiveness, however, is not measured by the mercy shown to the Circumcision. That, as we have seen, was comparatively stinted and probational. It sprang from pity rather than love. It was temporary because its term depended on its possessor instead of on God. This forgiveness is according to the riches of His grace. It were wise never to leave off this phrase. We have not "the forgiveness of sins" but "the forgiveness of offenses according to the riches of His grace." This raises it to the level of its context. This makes it glow with glory.

The grand gulf between the probational pardon of sins granted to the Circumcision and this rich deliverance is best seen in their results. The majority of those who were pardoned fell away and forfeited eonian life. We, who receive the forgiveness of offenses, not only remain in grace, but are the recipients of its lavish gifts. We alone are associated with Christ in the administration of the complement of the eras, in which He attains His highest eonian dignities. We were last. We are destined to be first.

A. E. Knoch

A NOTE ON FORGIVENESS

In Ephesians 1:7 Paul speaks of our present deliverance through the Beloved One's blood which he defines as the forgiveness of offenses. Yet it seems to me that Brother Knoch's comments on this forgiveness lacks the clarity of his explanation of the deliverance through Christ's blood. He seems to suggest that "forgiveness" is not the best term for Paul to have used in this context, although he upholds it in its contextual sense "in accord with the riches of [God's] grace which He lavishes on us."

Forgiveness is not justification, but the forgiveness of offenses which we are having accords with the rich grace of justification which has been procured through the suffering and death of God's beloved Son. To be reckoned righteous (cf Rom.4: 5,24) is not the same as being constituted righteous (Rom. 5:19). Conciliation is not the same as reconciliation, but in that it comes about through the death of God's Son (Rom.5: 10,11; 2 Cor.5:18,19), it accords with the grace of reconciliation which has been procured (indeed for all) through the blood of the cross of the Son of God's love (Col.1:13,20). Had Paul used the word "conciliates" here in Ephesians as he does in Romans and 2 Corinthians, his point might be clearer to us, for forgiveness and conciliation speak of our present blessing of peace toward God and removal from His indignation on the basis of the suffering death of God's Son. These are temporary, but as Brother Knoch points out they are not provisional and cannot be retracted. They are secured unto the full enjoyment of righteousness and reconciliation (when we shall not offend or sin) is delivered to us.

THE SECRET OF HIS WILL

AT PRESENT most of God's creatures are out of harmony with Him. He is either unknown, ignored, or defied. The ideal relationship with God is well expressed by the word "complement." We should combine with Him to make one harmonious whole. All that is in Him should find a response in us. There should be such mutual reciprocation in every relationship of life as will be most delightful to both. As Creator we should take our place as His creatures. As Father we should be His beloved sons: He the Reconciler, we the reconciled. He the Deliverer, we the delivered. But, more than this, we are accorded a place with Christ in His work of revealing Him to the celestial hosts. It is only as we ourselves are filled with His affection that it can overflow to others.

HIS GLORIOUS RICHES

No epistle in the Scriptures is so full of harmonies as Ephesians. There is a continual assurance that each phase of our blessing is in accord with all the rest. Our sonship suits the delight of His will (1:5). The "forgiveness" of our offenses harmonizes with the riches of His grace (1:7). The secret of His will is consonant with His delight (1:9). Our predestination (predesignation) is in unison with His purpose (1:11). Paul's dispensation agrees with God's grace which, in its turn is attuned to His powerful operation (3:7). The insight of the celestials is in line with the purpose of the eons (3:11).

God's riches are glorious. In these last days riches have increased. There are many men of vast wealth, and fortunes have been amassed which are amazing. Great as is their material magnificence, they are sadly lacking in moral glory. Much of our unrighteousness and crime is connected with money. It occasions far more misery than it alleviates. In general, riches are a menace to society. Yet all will acknowledge that wealth has power. It is fast becoming the paramount force in human affairs. It overrides social prestige and political influence. What could we not accomplish with an unlimited command of means! Yet one thing cannot be bought by all the wealth of all the world. That is love. God's wealth alone has the moral glory that influences the affections.

Outwardly we may be as weak as Timothy, with his frequent infirmities. We may be clothed in rags and live in the meanest of shelters. There may be nothing to indicate that we are rolling in the real riches. This wealth is not for the outer man at present. It is spiritual, and for the spirit. It is for the man within. Men behold the external appearance, God looks on the heart. Through His spirit our hearts become the habitation of Christ. This is the ground of our strength, for our vitality and stability depend upon the apprehension of God's love which has been poured out into our hearts through His holy spirit (Rom.5:5). As a plant seeks its sustenance and strength in the soil, so we should search for our sustentation and support in the subsoil of God's activities, the fact of His affection. We can flourish in no other ground. Here alone can our roots find nurture and our trunk find strength. Both of these are necessary for fruit, such as love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control (Gal.5:22).

CHRIST'S UNIVERSAL HEADSHIP

To those in the embrace of the glory of His grace, God makes known the secret of His will to have an administration of the complement of the eras, to head up the universe in the Christ (Eph.1:9,10). He presses Wisdom and Prudence, with all the resources at their command, into the service of this great secret. Christ has many eonian glories. This is the highest of them all. He is the Son of Adam, the Son of Abraham, the Son of David. He is the King of Israel, the Owner of the land, the King of kings. All of these glories are not only confined to the earth, but find fulfillment in the day of the Lord. They do not enter the final eon, when, as the Son of God, He administers the whole universe.

The clearest intimations of the eon after the day of the Lord found in the Old Testament may be summed up in the statement that, in that era, Christ will continue to reign over the earth, even after His priestly functions vanish. The secret here revealed also definitely assigns Him the headship over the earth, and consists in enlarging the scope of His reign to include the heavens (Eph.1:10). Christ is to be the Head of the universe! That Messiah's rule included all the earth was a secret the initiates have known from early times. To be with Him in this earthly Kingdom was the high hope He put before His own. Even Paul, at first, had looked for this earthly paradise. But now, as we have seen, he longs for blessing in the heavenly spheres. His hope is no longer fixed on earth, but among the celestials.

It is not possible that there can be a blessed place, anywhere, apart from Christ. Our hearts have no heaven but where He is. So it is essential, at this point, to insert this secret of Christ, lest it seem that we are exalted and He is left beneath upon the earth. If our blessings are among the celestials, if we are to reign in regions supernal, it follows that these are beneath His sway, for we have naught without Him. Before this, God's revelation was confined to the earth. There was no necessity for revealing His higher glories, for His saints were not partakers in them. Now that our destiny is celestial, we are entrusted with a secret so staggering, so superb, that few of His saints have ever heard of it, almost none believe it, and these are unable to measure or even imagine its immensity.

Christ will be Head, not on the earth alone, but over the highest heavens. His sway will include the vast universe in its embrace. The heavenly realms, which men are only beginning to explore, will all be beneath His pierced feet. Look with me, on some dark night, into the starry sky and behold a few of His domains. Come with me to the desert and see them double their number in the clearer air. Join me on yon mountaintop and peer through the greatest glass that man has made to search the star-strewn firmament. A thousand times as many stars swim past our wondering gaze. But mortal eyes are far too weak, even with the greatest of telescopes. Let us allow the stars to set their seal upon a photographic plate. So many millions more appear that our spirit falls upon its face in awe, for we have begun to glimpse the grandeur of His celestial kingdom.

The headship of Christ must not be confounded with His salvation. The rule of our Lord should never be confused with reconciliation. Universal reconciliation cannot occur until He abdicates the throne. His headship ceases when He hands over the Kingdom to God the Father. The universal sovereignty of the Son of God precedes the consummation. Universal reconciliation follows it. His headship is in the last eon. Reconciliation does not become universal until after the eonian times are past. The complement of the eras lies between the judgment era of the great white throne and the close of all the eras, for it must be the last.

The word plêrōma is somewhat difficult to translate correctly. The usual rendering of the Authorized Version is fullness. But it never denotes the state of being full, but rather, as they have translated it in its first occurrence, that which is put in to fill up (Matt.9:16). It is that which fills, or the complement. The eras of human history will some day fulfill, their cycle. The final era, which completes their number and rounds out their ministry, is characterized by the rule of one Human over the whole universe. He Who descended into the lowest depths to save, ascends to the highest place in order to rule.

It is worthy of note, in passing, that the Circumcision epistles never mention a plêrōma, for their ministry was not final. Paul speaks of the complement of the nations (Rom.11:12,20), of love as the complement of law (Rom. 13:10), of the ecclesia as the complement of Christ (Eph. 1:23; 4:13), of Christ as the complement of God (Col.2:9) and of all else (Col.1:19). Only in Paul's epistles do we find God's work brought to final fullness. He alone adds the finishing touches. These are indicated by this word plêrōma, or complement.

The only indication of this era we have in the Old Testament is that rule, the reign of Christ and His saints, is to continue further than the priestly millennial reign. Priesthood is only for olam ("forever"). Kingship is for olam va ad ("forever and ever"). This is in exact accord with the clearer details given us in Revelation. There we find that the reign of the saints as kings and priests is limited to the thousand years (Rev.20:6). They still continue to reign in the next eon, but there is no temple and no priesthood. This is the complement of the eras. The throne of God and the Lambkin is upon the earth. John has no vision of the heavens. It is a secret reserved for Paul and the celestial saints. We have no part in the new Jerusalem. Our portion is in the high heavens.

From our present viewpoint we are apt to get a most distorted view of God's dealings in the eonian times. We look back at almost seven and a half thousand years of human history and find it written with tears and blood. We look forward hopefully to a thousand years of bliss for suffering mortals, but even that blessed era will close in revolt and fire. Is this the full cycle of the eras? Has God accomplished all He set out to do? Has humanity been fully tested? Mankind has fully manifested its sin. We are satisfied on that score. But we are not sure that Christ has done all that He can do. He is a Human, and as a Human we are sure that He can bring humanity to the very summit of perfection. This He does not accomplish in the day of the Lord. Hence this is what is before Him in the day of God, which follows it.

How long will this final era be? There is no definite revelation given to us. We feel sure that the thousand generations of which the Psalmist speaks must be within the eonian times. This would give the eons a period of at least twenty thousand years. Perhaps it coincides with that great astronomical cycle, the precession of the equinoxes. That would be about twenty-four thousand years. During this period the sun seems to shift its crossing of the ecliptic, through all of its signs. In twenty-four thousand years the polar star seems to make a complete circle. If the eonian times are so long, we have only begun them, and there will still be nearly sixteen thousand years left at the end of the millennium. This leaves a long, long time for the final eon, the era which completes the cycle.

There is no such thing as chance in God's sight. A lottery, in Israel, was not an appeal to blind fate, but to Yahweh. We who believe, in this present era of grace, were taken by lot to share the celestial honors of our Lord. When the yearly meeting of farmers occurred in each community in ancient Israel, they divided into groups, and first of all the allotments were divided among the heads of these groups, who allotted them to the others. We belong to Christ. He is our Head. He has been allotted the heavens: our lot is cast in Him.

At this point it is well to draw the attention of our readers to the fact that nothing in the first twelve verses of Ephesians is directly concerned with the nations. We have been taking this for granted, for reasons which will presently appear. But, first of all, it applies to Paul and those of the Circumcision who received his message. It is all in the first person. Six times he speaks of us, twice of we, once of our. In contrast to this he begins verse thirteen with an emphatic you—the Uncircumcision, the nations. It is necessary to note this in order that we may understand fully one statement which, while true of the aliens, was especially important in connection with the Circumcision who were chosen for this grace.

THE COUNSEL OF HIS WILL

Yahweh had counselled with His people Israel concerning their blessing and destiny. It was quite clear even to the apostle Paul that he would have his place in the earthly Kingdom of which the Hebrew prophets and our Master Himself had spoken. How could he look forward to aught else but what Yahweh had revealed? But now, without explanation, his blessing and destiny both are changed. What right had God to make this alteration? Did He confer with Paul about it first? Did He consult anyone affected by it? We may be sure He did not do it without competent advice. But to whom could He go? Who was able to advise Him? No one! So He takes the counsel offered by His own determination. In this crisis He retires into the privacy of immanent and absolute deity and bases this fresh departure on the immutable sovereign will which underlies every activity in the universe.

How Godlike is this thought! He does not apologize to Paul. He does not even explain. Why should He? He is the Deity. He does what He wishes. Notwithstanding appearances, this is precisely what He is doing everywhere and at all times. He is not hindered by His own revelations.

He is operating the universe in accord with the counsel of His own will. It always was His intention that Paul (and we) should be associated with Christ's heavenly headship. And it was His will that this should be kept secret until Israel had been thrust aside. To Paul, to us, He wishes to be known as the only and absolute Deity, Who is working our welfare even when we are not aware. He would have us trust in Him, not merely His promises.

THE LAUD OF HIS GLORY

The revelation of God is a synonym for His fame or glory. What He does is so marvelous and what He is is so wonderful that no glory could exceed His unveiling. Let us not be satisfied with a knowledge of His acts, or an acquaintance with His ways. These are but the pathway to a knowledge of Himself. Let us go on until we no longer "stand on the promises," but rest in God. Hitherto God had stressed His ways and words and demanded faith in their fulfillment. Now He makes known His secrets, which deal with previously unknown activities. From these we learn His inmost motives, and we learn the great lesson of the eons, to trust all to Him. The future, beyond the consummation, is unknown. But the God of the post-eonian eternity we know, and that is all we want to know!

THE PRIOR EXPECTANCY

Here we have an entirely new destiny. How are these elect to get to their celestial allotment? Israel's saints will be recalled to life on the earth just before the millennial reign. The day of the Lord will have commenced more than seven years before. During this period God's attitude toward the earth will not be one of conciliation, as it must be in this economy of grace. He will be indignant and visit this scene with the terrors of His vengeance. We cannot be here then. It follows that the celestial company here revealed must be taken from the earth at least about a decade before Israel's saints are roused, hence they have a prior expectation (Eph.1:12).

The ancient prophets, our Lord, and His apostles, give no hint of any coming prior to His presence in person on the mount of Olives (Zech.14:4; Acts 1:12). This teaching is confirmed by Peter and James and John, and the unknown author of Hebrews. All expected a furious time of affliction, through which those who call upon the Name of Yahweh would be saved.

But there is a very real sense in which Christ has already come in glory. He was present to Paul, on the Damascus road, in blinding splendor, long before the time predicted by the prophets. And it is to this same apostle that He later reveals His presence in the air before the time of Jacob's affliction. To the Thessalonians, who were sorrowing for their dead, and who supposed themselves to be overtaken by the time of trouble, Paul reveals the presence of the Lord in the air before that dread day. As a consequence, those who received this teaching through him had the expectation of meeting the Lord before He would come to Israel. They were called pre-expectants, they had a prior expectation.

As we have already seen, the great truth of the "mystery" came only to this class. It was not sent to, nor intended for, nor received by, the bulk of the Circumcision. The calling above was a fitting prelude to the celestial destiny later revealed. In a very real sense it left the saints "in the air." They could not come back to earth beneath the black thunderclouds of raging wrath. They could hardly remain in the atmosphere. The matter was left in suspense. All that was revealed was that they would ever be with the Lord (1 Thess.4:17). Now we have the logical outcome. He is exalted to celestial supremacy. Hence we must share it with Him.

Before the apostle sums up and defines the present secret administration in the third chapter, he refers us to this mystery again. After mentioning the administration of the grace of God that is given to him for us (Eph.3:2), he inserts a parenthesis to show the relation which Christ's celestial headship sustains to the present secret administration, introducing it by the connective according as: "according as I write before [in Eph. 1:10], in brief, by which you who are reading are able to apprehend my understanding in the secret of Christ, which, in other generations, is not made known to the sons of humanity as it was now revealed to His holy apostles and prophets" (Eph.3:3-5). This reference to the secret of Christ is usually confused with the secret administration, which is the main subject of the chapter. These two are quite distinct. This concerns Christ's headship over the earth, which had been revealed in the prophets, and His headship over the heavens, which was only now made known to the apostles, including Paul. The secret of the present administration of grace, was made known through Paul alone, and had been hid in God. No one can have a satisfactory grasp of the present grace who does not distinguish between the secret of Christ, gradually unfolded during the past eons, and the secret economy, securely locked up in the very heart of God, and not revealed until Israel was set aside.

To Paul, and to those of the Circumcision who received this message, the celestial allotment was a marvelous advance. To be sure, if Paul should claim His due in the Kingdom, some would give him the place for which John asked. Perhaps he would be entitled to the seat at Christ's right hand. I know of no one who could successfully dispute his right. Yet he, who might have had the highest place on earth, is merely a member of the joint body in this new secret administration of the grace of God. But every member of this body is graced with a glory which grants him a place superior to the highest of earthly honors.

If this means much to Paul, what does it mean to us, sinners of the nations? We have no claim to the lowest place in the terrestrial Kingdom. We have no allotment at all in that administration. We have no deserts whatever. God is not obliged to bless us. He has not bound Himself by any such covenant with the nations. Yet such is His passion for the display of His grace, that BECAUSE Paul was His worst enemy, BECAUSE we have no deserts but destruction, BECAUSE we are lowest and last, we shall share with Christ, His highest and His best. As the heavens are higher than the earth, so is grace, and its gifts, higher than the rewards of righteousness in the earthly Kingdom.

Hence "do not cause sorrow to the holy spirit of God by which you are sealed for the day of deliverance.

"Let all bitterness and fury and anger and clamor and calumny be taken away from you together with all malice.

"Yet become kind to one another, tenderly compassionate, dealing graciously among yourselves, according as God also, in Christ, deals graciously with you!" A. E. Knoch

THE HUMAN

In the introduction to the first edition of the CONCORDANT VERSION, A. E. Knoch expressed the hope that the English word "human" could be used consistently for the Greek word anthrōpos in a revision of the CV "at no distant future." That was about one hundred years ago. Whether or not this conforms well with current usage (it certainly does so more readily than in the 1920's), we are using it more consistently in the current revision to distinguish it from anêr, the Greek word for "man." This is especially important when God's Son, Christ Jesus, our Lord is referred to as an anthrōpos, as in 1 Timothy 2:4, and (already rendered this way) in Philippians 2:8. His association with humanity as a human, capable of dying and being made sin, is critical to His place as the Mediator between God and the entire human race. In accord with this change in translation we have adjusted the preceding comments on the Greek word plêrōma where Christ's rule over the universe is in view (top of pages 63 and 64). His exaltation comes by way of His humbling of Himself as a human.

D.H.H.

PAUSE, REPEAT AND REFLECT

WHEN, in Greek, the definite article ("the") follows the word or words it modifies, we are being led to pause, repeat in our mind what has just been said, and reflect on it as it is further defined. This most often occurs in Paul's writings when the subject is grace. Note how this is done in the following verse portions as rendered in our revised CV:

. . . the grace of ˙God and the gratuity in grace, the grace which is of the One Human, Jesus Christ . . . . (Rom.5:15)

. . . graces excelling in accord with the grace, the grace which is given to us . . . . (Rom.12:6)

. . . the grace of ˙God, the grace which is given to ¯you . . . . (1 Cor.1:4)

. . . and ¯knowing the grace, the grace which is given to me . . . . (Gal.2:9)

. . . in accord with the gratuity of the grace of ˙God, the grace which is given to me . . . . (Eph.3:7)

. . . His own purpose and grace, the grace which is ˡgiven to us in Christ Jesus . . . . (2 Tim.1:9).

. . . be ˡinvigorated© ⁱby the grace, the grace which is in Christ Jesus . . . . (2 Tim.2:1).

This construction with grace in view also occurs in Romans 15:15, 1 Corinthians 3:10 and 2 Corinthians 8:1.

In every case the grace points in one way or another to God's evangel concerning His Son, His death and resurrection, and its effects. The more we pause, repeat in our mind and hearts and reflect on such passages, the more surely we will be invigorated by this grace, in walk and thankfulness with praise to God.

D.H.H.

JUDGMENT AND INDIGNATION

MUCH OF OUR THINKING is distorted by pride. Even if we have been graced to come to Christ as our Lord and Saviour, that is no indication at all that we are particularly inclined to repudiate our trust in the flesh as to our daily affairs. Indeed many seem to become much more proud and self-reliant after "conversion" than ever before.

When our minds are puffed up by concepts of free will and self-satisfaction over our "decision for Christ," we lose any real appreciation for God's grace in choosing us before the disruption of the world and calling us entirely apart from anything in ourselves that might make us more worthy than anyone else. We begin to think that we at least are more "willing" and sufficiently disciplined than others, and so it is only right that the unbelievers should be condemned to unending torment or loss.

Just think of it! For all "eternity" we can say, "All those miserable sinners burning in hell could have gone to heaven too. Certainly the work of Christ saved no one at all, including myself. It wasn't supposed to. All it did was make salvation possible. Besides, every single one of those sinners deserves to be in everlasting burnings, for, unlike me, they didn't do what they should have and could have done. And here I am, in eternal bliss, perfectly good and perfectly happy, even though billions of my fellow creatures are perfectly miserable and doomed to stay that way forever! Yet, in the end, I only got here myself because of what I did, not because of the sacrifice of Christ. I chose to meet God's demands for His so-called 'free gift' and did so. I wasn't given any special grace; it wasn't any easier for me than for anyone else. It's too late now anyway, so let them burn. Too bad for them, but not for me. I'm happy, and so is God. In fact we're all happy here."

Many do not seem to realize that one does not succeed in avoiding boastfulness by simply being modest. For such a person is still a boaster, albeit a modest and pleasant boaster instead of a haughty and vocal boaster. One can only avoid boasting in self by truly ceasing to believe, think and say things that are inherently of a boastful nature. It is only the word of the cross that effectively and wisely trains us in this true humility (cf 1 Cor.1:18-30) so that if anyone is boasting, "in the Lord let him be boasting" (1 Cor. 1:31; cp Gal.6:14). It is an empty gesture to go through the motions of "giving all the glory to God," while at the same time continually believing, thinking and often even insistently declaring that good decisions and acts are things which ultimately owe their existence to one's own self, God having but made them "possible." May He enlighten us to see, truly, that it is "in the grace of God" that "I am what I am" (1 Cor.15:10).

It is wonderful to know that man's rebellion, including all our proud imaginings, are no problem to God whatever. For whenever He exercises His strong and saving hand, His people volunteer: "Your people will be willing in the day of Your potent power" (Psa.110:3). "Alas, my Lord Yahweh! Behold, You Yourself made the heavens and the earth by Your great vigor and by Your outstretched arm. Nothing at all is too marvelous for You" (Jer.32:17). He is saying, "All My counsel, it shall be confirmed, And all My desire shall I do" (Isa.46:10).

SUBJECT TO HIS JUDGMENT

Men are accountable to God; they are subject to His wise judgment, for the sake of His own purpose and their good. They are not "responsible" in the sense of being able to avoid, or prevent, their actions. May God cause us to remember this when we begin to boast in ourselves, or, to grovel in undue self-condemnation. Let us not foolishly use the freedom of this truth as an incentive to the flesh, yet let us not deny or neglect it out of fear of so doing (cp Gal.5:13). And when others offend and injure us, may God bring us to our senses by powerfully impressing these things upon our minds once again, that we may be enabled to be much more sympathetic to all, "bearing with one another and dealing graciously among yourselves, if anyone should be having a complaint against any. According as the Lord also deals graciously with you, thus also you. Now over all these put on love, which is the tie of maturity" (Col.3:13).

We, who in ourselves are nothing and useless (Rom.3:12; Gal.6:3), are nonetheless called upon to live by these lofty ideals, and a great many others. They are our duties (or, in this sense, our "responsibilities"), and it will be our loss to the degree we fail to carry them out. It is evident, then, they are not given to us so that we might glorify ourselves through our faithfulness, but to leave us no recourse than to turn to our God and Father for His saving grace if we would fulfill them at all.

Divine indignation is a "theophany," a manifestation of the Deity. God's "indignation" is a figure of likeness; expressed in ordinary language, we have called it "condescension"—a matter in which God condescends to being "spoken of as if 'He' were human . . . so that He may reveal Himself in terms within the range of human perception" (KEYWORD CONCORDANCE, p.358).

In the day of His righteous judgment, God will pay each one in accord with his acts (Rom.2:6). For their evil deeds, they will receive "indignation and fury, affliction and distress" (Rom.2:9). Through this wise and expedient exhibition, He will present Himself thus. The technical term for such figures as divine "indignation and fury" (even as divine "regret" or "repentance") is anthropopatheia (human emotion). As with all divine manifestations, this theophany will be effected through His Son, "Who is the Image of the invisible God" (2 Cor.4:4), "the Effulgence of His glory and the Emblem of His assumption" (Heb.1:3), to Whom He has given all judging (John 5:22).

GOD DESIGNS ALL FOR GOOD

God is—literally and absolutely speaking—angry at no one at all. At the deepest level, God is love (1 John 4:8) and love is not incensed (1 Cor.13:5). All is out of, through and for Him, occurring in accord with the counsel of His will according to which He operates all. Thus all accords with "what must be" (Rom.8:26).

This divinely assumed role in which Christ will be manifested as the righteous God Who can only be indignant with those who are "persuaded to unrighteousness" (Rom.2:8), will prove to be an altogether wise and expedient exhibition. For, at once, it will commend God's own righteousness (when set in contrast to man's unrighteousness; Rom.3:5) and chasten (2 Peter 2:9) those of whom He is fond in a way that is best for them. We mortals cannot become indignant without also becoming sinful (cf Eph.4:26). But God is able to manifest Himself in such an assumed role for the sake of His own glory and the benefit of all concerned, while all the while acting in and being motivated by love and perfect righteousness. His motives are of the highest order, and His purpose is for the greatest good.

The story of Joseph and his brothers clearly illustrates the fact that since God operates all together for good, there is therefore no ground whatever for literal, absolute indignation toward anyone. At the human level it was a sordid tale of jealousy and hatred, wickedness and guilt. Though at first the brothers had plotted to put him to death (Gen. 37:18-20), they finally sold him into the hands of Midianite merchants (Gen.37:28). Years later, however, after having been brought there as a slave, Joseph rose to a very high station in Egypt and was finally appointed its governor by the Pharaoh.

Yahweh was with Joseph and gave him the wisdom to recognize that He had devised his evil experience, doing so for the good of all concerned. Joseph, perceiving the hand of God in it all, realized that his brothers were but the men of His counsel, instruments in His hands. Therefore, not only was Joseph not angry with his brothers, but he did not want them to be upset with themselves either: "And now do not be grieved nor let it be hot in your eyes that you sold me hither, because Elohim has sent me on before you for the preservation of life . . . . Elohim sent me on before you to set up for you a remnant on earth and to preserve lives in a great deliverance. So now, not you sent me here, but the One, Elohim" (Gen.45:5,7,8). "You devised evil against me, yet Elohim, He devised it for good in order to accomplish, as at this day, to preserve many people alive" (Gen.50:20).

It was not that God merely (as some will say) "allowed but did not cause" the actions of Joseph's brothers. No, to the contrary, God actually designed—He planned and brought to pass—the brothers' evil (and sinful) deeds. But He did so for good, in the best interests of all concerned and for His own glory.

The apostle Paul reveals that the Hebrew scriptures—"whatever was written before"—are to be understood as representative of God's ways with ourselves (Rom.15:4). For, if not, they could hardly afford us "endurance," "consolation" and "expectation" as to our own trials and sufferings.

GOD'S WILL AND INTENTION

These matters, undoubtedly, are among "the depths of God" (1 Cor.2:10). While He is able to reveal them, He is surely able to conceal them: "I am acclaiming You, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, for You hide these things from the wise and intelligent and You reveal them to minors. Yes, Father, seeing that thus it becomes a delight in front of You." (cp Matt.11:25-27).

The Lord Jesus made this acclamation of praise to God at the very time when He had just reproached the cities in which most of His powerful deeds occurred, "for they do not repent" (Matt.11:20). Our Lord recognized that it was God's intention (or decretive will) that His preceptive will—Christ's own call for repentance—should be withstood.

Christ speaks of God as acting intentionally, actually hiding His truth, not merely "allowing" men to remain ignorant of it. Similarly, by removing our blindness (while we are yet minors in faith), He reveals His truth to us. God is leading us toward maturity, "to all the riches of the assurance of understanding, unto a realization of the secret of the God and Father of Christ, in Whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are concealed" (Col.2:2,3).

In order to "hide" the truth from us, no other means are needed than our own flesh, the Adversary, and the influences which come upon us from this deceived world in which we live. We will do well to follow the Lord's example and entrust ourselves to God, not to mortal flesh: "Jesus Himself did not entrust Himself to [the Jews], because of His knowing all human beings, for He had no need that anyone should testify concerning humanity, for He knew what was in humanity" (John 2:24,25).

Since God is good, we know that He has a good purpose not only in the good, but in the evil as well, in darkness even as in light. For God is operating all together for good. May He grace us to perceive His glory concerning all (cp John 12:41).

The words "counsel" and "will" are common nouns. In some passages they are used in reference to God's counsel, or advice, which men will do well to heed that they might receive the benefits attending such a course. Such passages speak of God's preceptive will, those things which He has chosen for man's instruction. They point us to "the will of God, good and well pleasing and perfect" (Rom. 12:2; cp 1 Thess.5:18).

In other passages, the terms will and counsel reveal the divine plans, those things which God has decided should occur. These passages speak of God's decretive will, what He has purposed to happen or transpire. God is operating all according to the counsel of His own will. Concerning all things, He has decided what should occur. Consequently, He acts accordingly, operating all, causing everything that happens to come to pass (Eph.1:11). The only advice acceptable to Him is that of His own decisions (cp Rom.11:35). Concerning all, God has decided what is best, and, He will do what is best. For He is God.

GOD IS LOVE

It is not that His indignation is not "real," but that it fails to reveal His inmost Being. It is a genuine divine assumption, one of many roles the Deity assumes during the eonian times. Each one is full of wisdom and according to His purpose. The purpose of this assumption is to make a "display" of indignation, "and to make His powerful doings known" (Rom.9:22). God is love. He is not indignation.

"We are never told that God is justice, or God is power, or God is wisdom. These are His attributes, not His essence. The distinction is of vital import, in the conflicting maze of reasoning concerning God's ways and words. Righteousness and power and wisdom are relative, but love is absolute. He is never so just as when He justifies the unjust, for that is in line with His love. He is never so strong as when His weakness overpowers human strength, for that links it to love. He is never so wise as when His foolishness confounds the wisdom of men, for that glorifies love.

"All His attributes appear and withdraw at the beck of love. All serve it and never go counter to its commands. We cannot reason that God will do thus and so because He is just, or strong or wise. Love may not give leave. But we can safely lay our heads on the bosom of His love and there learn the great lesson that He is love, and has both the power and wisdom to carry out the dictates of His affection. What clearer proof can be given that all that He has done and is doing is leading up to that grand ultimate when He will be All in all, and love will rest in being loved?"[1]

God's judgments are not in opposition to or a denial of Paul's evangel, the good news of life's justifying for all mankind, being constituted righteous one day through the obedience of Christ (Rom.5:18,19). For God is the Saviour of all mankind, and all will be made alive (1 Tim. 4:10; 1 Cor.15:22). The glorious fact is, our Saviour, Christ Jesus, "indeed abolishes death" (2 Tim.1:10), and God "is vivifying all" (1 Tim.6:13)!

In the midst of speaking of God's severity in the day of judging, Paul rejoices to interject that even this is "according to" his evangel (Rom.2:16; that is, "in accord with," or founded upon his evangel; kata, DOWN). The indignation and death which precede the glorious consummation are only temporary and will soon pass; love and life are permanent and will never lapse.

We who are members of Christ's body have not been appointed to indignation, but to salvation (1 Thess.5:10). We shall be saved from the indignation of God through Christ (Rom.5:10). For in the oncoming eons, God has purposed to display the transcendent riches of His grace in us (Eph.2:7). For ourselves, Grace reigns "for life eonian" (Rom.5:21), even if our work is a loss and we get no wages (1 Cor.3:14,15). Therefore, God's good news to us is, "Where sin increases, grace superexceeds" (Rom. 5:20). "Now thanks be to God for His indescribable gratuity!" (2 Cor.9:15). J.R.C.

WHAT IS JUDGMENT?

It is a sad commentary on the human race to find that the word "judgment" is so unstable and liable to deterioration. This must be because men are so unjust and vindictive themselves. The word has come to mean condemnation and punishment almost exclusively, when it ought to be neutral. How seldom is it used in a good sense among us! It will be worth a good deal of effort to restore its true meaning, if only to keep us from distorting it in connection with the great white throne. Let us note first what company it keeps in the Greek Scriptures.

The Pharisees were not slow to condemn others. Yet our Lord rebuked them for passing over judgment and the love of God. They neglected the reparatory side of judgment. The poor (Prov.29:14; Psa.72:4) they failed to judge, and the fatherless (Isa.1:23; Psa.10:18), that is, they did not protect them in their rights. Our Lord combined judgment with mercy and faith. These, the weightier matters of the law, they neglected. Such a "judgment" certainly did not mean punishment. Instead of so judging, the scribes devoured widows' houses, though they were swift to condemn those who did not keep the traditions (Mark 12:40).

Perhaps the best place to show that judgment is always right, is found in Abraham's appeal to the Lord, when He spoke of the state of Sodom. The Authorized Version reads, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right" (Gen.19:25)? I agree that they expressed the sense correctly, yet I deplore the fact that, in doing so, they passed up a notable opportunity of anchoring the true meaning of the word judgment in our language. The Hebrew reads, "The Judge of the whole earth, is He not doing judgment." It is clear that anything wrong would not be judgment in Abraham's eyes. If anyone in Sodom should suffer unjustly that would not be judgment, and would be wrong. There is absolutely no injustice in divine judgment. It is rather, the righting of what is already wrong. A. TRANSLATION NOTES

1:5 The second aorist verb, "I leave," and the first aorist, "I prescribe" are both fact verbs referring indeed to past actions, but giving them emphasis, apart from time. They are not present tense verbs as we are apt to take them, but simple statements of truth. The context tells the time. The verb tells the facts.

2:11 The verb, "makes its advent" (literally "on-appears") is also a fact verb. Again the time of the appearing is established by the context, but the verb simply and wholly is concerned with the evangelical fact of God's grace making its advent.

Furthermore, by the Greek syntax (in most ancient manuscripts) we are to connect the term "saving" (or "salvationing") with the words "to all humans." Paul does not say that the advent is made to all people, but rather the grace as a saving operation is to all.

3:8 The faithful saying, in this case, is surely the evangel as stated in 3:4-7. That message of God's kindness, fondness and mercy and Jesus Christ's grace for justification and a future allotment speaks of things of which we (like Titus) are to be insistent.

D.H.H.

THE COMMON FAITH

In writing to Titus Paul does not go very far without mentioning faith. What he is and does is "in accord with the faith of God's chosen ones" (Titus 1:1). So also he closes with the fond reminder: "Greet our friends in faith" (3:15). Like the word grace, which is also there in the beginning (1:4) and end (3:15), faith occupies a prominent position in Titus as also in all of Paul's epistles, and it generally recalls in one way or another, the evangel.

Paul saw Titus as "a genuine child in accord with the common faith" (1:4). What we have in common is not the same measure of faith (cf Rom.12:3), but the truth we are believing. It is "the faithful word" (Titus 1:9). In Romans, the foundation letter, our apostle calls this "God's evangel" (Rom.1:1), and in 1 Corinthians he presents it by these words: "Christ dies for our sins in accord with the scriptures, and . . . He is entombed, and . . . He has been roused the third day in accord with the scriptures" (1 Cor.15:3). Now also to his genuine child in faith Paul brings the common faith (which Titus already has accepted and believes) before him as our Saviour Jesus Christ's giving of Himself for us, that He should redeem us from all lawlessness and cleanse for Himself a people to be about Him, zealous for ideal acts" (Titus 2:13,14).

The common faith is therefore the message we are believing, the message of the faith of Jesus Christ Who gives Himself in obedience unto the death of the cross (Phil.2:8) for our sakes. This message is "truth, the truth which accords with devoutness" (Titus 1:1). To uphold it is to be "sound in the faith" (Titus 1:13; 2:2). Thus what this faith, its grace and glory, its revelation of God and what He achieves in the sending of His Son in the likeness of sin's flesh and concerning sin for the condemnation of sin (cf Rom.8:3), becomes a training force in our lives for living sanely and righteously and devoutly in the current eon of chaos, vanity and darkness. ("Not that I already obtain [this], or am already perfected," says Paul, "Yet I am pursuing, if I may grasp also that for which I am grasped also by Christ Jesus," Phil.3:12.) The common faith is the evangel of which Paul is not ashamed, for it is God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it (Rom.1:16).

TWO FAITH PASSAGES

Thus, then, in this brief, personal letter concerned with practical matters of the believers' lives and assembling together, the evangel itself is the dominant force, often in single words or phrases, but also in two notable passages where it is presented explicitly in fuller detail. These two passages are Titus 2:11-14 and 3:4-7.

These passages stand apart from instruction for sound teaching and ideal acts in that they explicitly tell us what the sound teaching is and what empowers ideal conduct. The focus is wholly on God as He is made known through Jesus Christ's giving of Himself. It is not our righteous acts that are in view, but God's grace and glory, His kindness and fondness for humanity, His mercy. God is the Saviour through Jesus Christ, our Saviour. We are the saved, who are cleansed in spirit, anticipating that happy expectation of life eonian. This is true of us as chosen ones out of all human beings, all of whom are objects of God's grace of salvation and will ultimately know and enjoy His kindness and fondness.

We need to be speaking of these things (2:15) and be insistent concerning them (3:8). They are the common faith which trains us in sanity and ideal acts. D.H.H.

THE ADVENT OF GOD'S GRACE

THE BASIS of the salvation of all mankind is Christ's death for sinners, followed by His resurrection and exaltation. The faithfulness of the One Who sheds His blood for all is what brings about life's justifying for all (Rom.3:22; 5:8,18,19). It is in Christ Who dies for our sins and is roused that all who are dying in Adam will be vivified (1 Cor.15:3,4,22). The exaltation of Christ with all bowing in the Name of Jesus, the Saviour, and all acclaiming His Lordship for the glory of God the Father arises from His obedience to the death of the cross (Phil.2:8-11). The reconciliation to God of all on earth and in the heavens is accomplished through the blood of the cross of the Son of God's love (Col.1:13-20). That God is the Saviour of all mankind is God's accomplishment through Christ Who gives Himself a correspondent Ransom for all (1 Tim.2:4,6; 4:9,10). It is all of God through Christ, gratuitous and full of grace.

Paul's concern in writing is the edifying of the believers. Consequently he focuses on the evangel of God as it particularly relates to us. But since our blessings are based on God's purpose for all human beings, on what Christ has done for the entire human race, it is altogether natural that he will bring this wider view forward at significant points.

For example, the apostle guides us toward a prayerful concern for all mankind on the basis of God's will to save all (1 Tim.2:1-4), and encourages us in devoutness in light of the fact that God is the Saviour, not only of the believers, but of all human beings (1 Tim.4:8-12). A similar pattern is displayed in Paul's letter to Titus.

THE GRACE OF GOD

In Titus 2:11,12, Paul writes, "For the grace of God makes its advent, giving salvation to all human beings, training us that, disowning irreverence and worldly desires, we should be living sanely and righteously and devoutly in the current eon."

The advent of God's grace is the intervening, rescuing and glorious appearance of God's joyful favor to humanity in the gift of His Son. In Titus this revelation of God's grace focuses, as it does throughout Paul's ministry, on the death of Christ and its effects. It is the evangel that Christ "gives Himself for us, that He should be redeeming us from all lawlessness" (Titus 2:14); it is the saving and justifying work of God which is channeled through Jesus Christ (Titus 3:4-7). This is God's evangel concerning Jesus Christ our Lord (Rom.1:1-5), that Christ dies for our sins and is entombed and has been roused the third day (1 Cor.15:1-4). This appearance of God's grace in Christ's death for sinners lies at the very root of what Paul calls the faithful word and sound teaching (cf Titus 1:1,4,9,13; 2:1,8,10).

This grace of God is consistently presented throughout Paul's epistles in the clearest of terms:

1. It reveals God's righteousness (Rom.1:17; 3:21) rather than demanding our righteousness, and it commends God's love (Rom.5:8) and is His wisdom and power (1 Cor.1:23-25) rather than being conditioned on human acts.

2. Not only is God's grace of justification and salvation wholly of God, through His Son, it fully recognizes that we are sinners (Rom.3:23), and even features this fact by the type of people being called today, so that no one can boast in themselves (Rom.3:27; 1 Cor.1:29; Eph.2:9).

3. God's grace is founded solely on the faithfulness of Jesus Christ in His death for human beings, all of whom are sinners (Rom.3:23; Gal.2:16; Col.1:20,22).

Even in this letter to a "genuine child according to the common faith" (Titus 1:4), to one well acquainted with the revelation of God's grace which Paul was heralding, this evangel is everywhere assumed and specifically recounted at least twice. Throughout this letter it is the grace of God in saving sinners that shapes and directs the apostle's thoughts and words. He hardly can entreat and instruct and guide Titus in the concerns of his own tasks without continued reference to this foundational message of the grace that saves.

SALVATION TO ALL HUMAN BEINGS

Paul's principal concern in this passage is to remind Titus of the practical power of the evangel in the believer's life. The evangel of God's grace trains us. But in referring to God's grace, the apostle makes special reference to its relation to all. This connection of God's purpose for all with His special purpose for us is found in other passages from Paul's writings, such as Romans 3:21-28; 5:17-19; Ephesians 1:10-14; Colossians 1:20-22 and 1 Timothy 4:10. Now once again we find that the disciplining value of God's grace in our lives is related to the truth that this grace involves the salvation of all human beings.

Note how this is brought out in Darby's translation where we read: "For the grace of God which carries with it salvation for all men has appeared, teaching us . . ." and the New Revised Standard Version: "For the grace of God has appeared, bringing salvation to all, training us . . . ." No doubt it is because such renderings seem to the traditionalist to say too much about the effects of God's grace that the Jerusalem Bible paraphrases the passage as follows: "You see, God's grace has been revealed, and it has made salvation possible for the whole human race;" and, giving a different slant, the New World Translation has: "For the undeserved kindness of God which brings salvation to all sorts of men has been manifested."

Of course Paul did not use the word "possible" or speak of "all sorts of" people, and even if he had it would not mean that what is "possible" for God to do will not be done (especially since He wills this very salvation of all humanity, 1 Tim.2:4), or that Christ's death for all sorts of people excludes any of the human race. But such attempts to qualify Paul's actual words appear designed to preserve a doctrine that not all humanity will be saved. The effect is to suggest that Paul used an expression that seemed to honor God's grace more than he intended.

Why mention salvation in relation to all humanity in this context at all if these or other qualifications are to be understood? The use of the term "possible" seems intended to suggest that what God has done in saving sinners is not sufficient for saving anyone unless we do our part. It implies that nothing was actually achieved for anyone when Christ died for sinners, and that it depends on the human being for the cross to have any meaning to the sinner.

The use of the gloss "all sorts of" is equally puzzling. It is generally defended by noting Paul's reference to "aged men" and "aged women" and "younger men" and "slaves" in Titus 2:1-10. These are certainly different sorts of people. But the fact that those being saved today include old people and young, slaves and free, only confirms the truth that Christ died for everyone and that salvation is not at all dependent on human works or standing. We rejoice that God's present calling includes sinners of all ages and positions, all nationalities and races, male and female, young and old. But if a corollary of this present inclusiveness is that many people of every sort will eternally be excluded from God's gratuitous grace, then the joy and strength we get from this passage is considerably dimmed and our comprehension of God's grace considerably confused.

When this feature of diversity among believers is associated with a conviction that present unbelievers can never be saved, the whole point of the passage becomes twisted. This sort of thinking is more likely to train human beings in callous self-satisfaction and hypocrisy, or, on the other hand, in crippling anxiety and anguish over the lost, or even more likely in continued fluctuation between these evils of mind, than in a spirit of sanity, righteousness and devoutness.

It is the grace of God as manifested in the death of Christ and its effects for the salvation of human beings that is in view here, and it is this that serves to discipline the believer in his and her daily living. The words "salvation to all human beings" must not be made to draw attention away from God or distort and confuse the meaning of His wisdom and righteousness and love.

TRAINING US

The apostle is concerned with the effects of the grace of God on believers in their present lives. These effects are reflected in our thinking as well as our action. The grace of God trains the believer in a good and sane state of mind as well as good conduct. It leads to sanity and devoutness as well as right behavior.

These are qualities that are essential to Titus' service. But in pointing to God's grace, which motivates such thinking and acting, Paul is concerned that God's grace be seen in relation to its significance for all people. God's grace (to use various connecting terms inserted by different English translations) "brings" or "comes with" or, even better, gives salvation to all human beings. The grace of God which has made its appearance in the death of Christ for sinners means salvation to all humanity. And in that God's grace has this wide and glorious significance it has a powerful impact on us who believe, a sure and effective impact of sanity in relation to the world in which we live, and righteousness in our deeds, and a healthy and growing reverence toward God.

Paul has already drawn attention to this. Slaves who are believing that in His grace God is their Saviour and that His grace means ultimately the salvation of all mankind are led appropriately and naturally to a sane and righteous subjection to their owners and a devout and faithful walk before God (Titus 2:9-13). Under the effects of God's grace, they are not obsessed with fears and resentment and covetousness as so often happens in human affairs. Their realm is inherent in the heavens. God is working all together for good. Their afflictions are momentary and light in relation to the glory to come. But beyond themselves, they are aware that God's grace means salvation for everyone, including their masters who may not be presently saved from dependency on their transitory riches and power, having no enjoyment of Christ as their expectation. God's grace means salvation for them as well, in God's own time.

What could be more sane? What could be more productive of righteousness and devoutness than a faith centered upon the blessed advent of God's grace for salvation to all which is revealed in the evangel?

Hence Paul instructs Titus to "be speaking what is becoming to sound teaching" (Titus 2:1). It is the sound teaching which centers on the advent, the coming into this world, of God's grace for salvation to all humanity, even on His kindness and His fondness for humanity (Titus 3:4), that will guide the believers, both aged and young, both men and women, into sober and sound and good lives (Titus 2:1-8).

It is this evangel which ultimately embraces the whole of humanity in the saving work of God that trains us who are believing. At the root of the Greek word for "train" is the term hit. Nothing can hit us so constructively and effectively as the grace of God in its vast scope and rich blessedness.

IDEAL ACTS

THE ESSENCE of "the kingdom of God," whether in its present governance within our hearts, or in its future implementation, under Christ, over the nations of the earth in the coming eon, is "righteousness and peace and joy in holy spirit" (Rom.14:17). Hence it is that "he who in this is slaving for Christ, is well pleasing to God and attested by humanity. Consequently, then, we are pursuing that which makes for peace and that which is for the edification of one another" (Rom.14:18,19).

It is true that "righteousness" encompasses many particulars. Yet in our wider pursuit of "righteousness, faith-[fulness], love, [and] peace" (2 Tim.2:22), there are certain things that are basic to our approach, besides being practical necessities along the way. Thus, through his epistle to Titus, the apostle Paul speaks concerning these as follows:

"Be reminding them to be subject to sovereignties, to authorities; to be yielding, and to be ready for every good work, to be calumniating no one, to be pacific, lenient, displaying all meekness toward all humanity" (Titus 3:1,2).

It is necessary for us to be subject to those in authority over us, whether in the civil government under which we live, in our employment, or within our own families.

We must not "calumniate" (i.e., defame or disparage) others, but instead be pacific and lenient, "displaying all meekness [i.e., mild-manneredness] toward all humanity."

"For we also were once foolish, stubborn, being deceived, slaves of various desires and gratifications, leading a life in malice and envy, detestable, hating one another" (Titus 3:3).

Therefore, if we would now become "well pleasing" (Rom.12:1) to God in our walk, we must be "transformed by the renewing of [our] mind" (Rom.12:2).

It is critical, then, that we become "concerned to be presiding for ideal acts" (Titus 3:8). Indeed, we cannot very well "be learning to preside over ideal acts for necessary needs" (Titus 3:14), unless we first become concerned to do so.

In order to inculcate this concern within us, having first frankly stated how sinful and detestable "we also" once were, our apostle then interjects:

"Yet when the kindness and fondness for humanity of our Saviour, God, makes its advent, not for works, the works in righteousness which we do, but according to His mercy, He saves us through the bath of renascence and renewal of holy spirit, which He pours out on us richly through Jesus Christ, our Saviour, that, justified in that One's grace, we may become enjoyers in expectation of the allotment of life eonian" (Titus 3:4-7).

"Faithful is this saying, and I am intending you to be insistent concerning these things, that those who have believed God may be concerned to be presiding for ideal acts. These things are ideal and beneficial for humanity" (Titus 3:8).

"Not for works . . . which we do, but according to His mercy, He saves us"! And, as concerns His mercy, as related by Paul, God is saying: "I shall be being merciful to whomever I may be being merciful, and I shall be pitying whomever I may be pitying" (Rom.9:15). In the original text to which Paul refers, it is: "I will be gracious to whom I am being gracious and will show compassion to whom I am showing compassion" (Exodus 33:19). Thus mercy accords with grace, even as pity accords with compassion.

"Consequently, then, it is not of him who is willing, nor of him who is racing, but of God, the Merciful" (Rom.9:16).

Hence, then, "that those who have believed God may be concerned to preside for ideal acts," "I am intending you to be insistent concerning these things" (Titus 3:8).

INTRODUCTION TO PHILEMON

THIS, the only private, personal letter from the pen of the apostle Paul, is a perfect specimen of its kind. Its powerful yet pathetic appeal is the ripe fruitage of that overwhelming grace which Paul dispensed from his Roman prison. Himself a prisoner, he captures the runaway slave and gives him the freedom of Christ, yet sends him back to the master from whom he had escaped.

This note was doubtless written at the same time as the epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians. Onesimus accompanied Tychicus (Eph.6:21) to Ephesus and Colosse (Col. 4:7-9). From the fact that Onesimus is spoken of as "one of you" (Col.4:9), we may infer that Philemon belonged to the ecclesia at Colosse, and that he was given the message to masters in that epistle at the same time (Col.4:1). But this precious little letter goes far beyond what is "just and equal" so far as Onesimus is concerned. No picture of God's grace can better this. Not only a slave, but subject to torture and death for stealing from his master, he is first reconciled to God through Paul's preaching, and then is reconciled to his master through Paul's pleading. He is caught upon the very crest of the great tidal wave of grace which was just then ready to overflow the whole world. The transcendent grace of Paul's perfection epistles was doubtless his precious possession even before it was delivered to Philemon. Can we realize what this must have meant to him? To be taken from the deepest depths of social degradation and to be seated with Christ in the celestial realms, by faith, almost exhausts the possibilities of grace. And now upon all this, he is given this precious passport to his master's heart! Is it not a lovely little letter?

CHARLES SHIRK

Our dear friend in the Lord, Charles Shirk, was put to repose on his birthday, May 8, at age 88. Charles resided in Lake View Terrace, California. He is survived by his wife Norma Jean, son Brian, and daughters Carolyn and Marilyn.

We first met Charles in 1979, forty-three years ago. He was a close student of Scripture, often sharing with us a word of his latest findings through the Concordant Version, even as the expository writings in Unsearchable Riches magazine.

For many years, Charles would come in to our office weekly, assisting my wife Suella in the processing and shipping of orders.

Charles enjoyed an unusually clear and consistent grasp of the grace of God, keenly noting its many and varied usages throughout Scripture, yet while ever maintaining its essential meaning of gratuitous favor. As Charles would joyfully relate on many occasions, "Where, then, is boasting? It is debarred!" (Rom.3:27). J.R.C.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, THIRD QUARTER 2022
BEING THE THIRD NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED THIRTEEN

EDITORIAL

God is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will (Eph.1:11). This operation and this counseled will are determined and settled in accord with God's purpose, of which there are no changes. Yet from our standpoint things keep changing. In September Jim Coram and I spoke by phone, as we have been doing for many years, concerning the next issue of Unsearchable Riches (this third issue for 2022). It was our last conversation, for within days he was in the hospital with severe intestinal pain, and within weeks he was taken from us in death (see p.99). Of course, for us, there are always changes, changes in plans, changes in associations, changes round about us in human ways and thinking, some hardly noticeable, others very evident. But with God, Who brings about changes, there is no change of purpose toward which He is operating all "for the laud of His glory" (Eph.1:6,12,14).

The writer of Hebrews takes notice of an adjustment of the eons occurring in his days (Heb.11:3). In the article entitled "The Boundary Line," A. E. Knoch discusses this adjustment in terms of a change in God's administration (pp.101-107). This change brings many rich blessings, but it does not come without trials, which, as Brother Coram shows from the Scriptures, are made by God for our good (pp.108-114).

It was given to Paul to be severed from Judaism and the former apostles to make known the features of God's present administration, which brought about much change. This decisive separation is examined in the two articles, "Paul and God's Evangel" (pp.115-119) and "When it delights God" (pp.120-130). Consequently we center our-attention on Paul's epistles, for he is our apostle, and he brings God's evangel with a fulness that corresponds with the features of God's present administration which is in faith (1 Tim.1:4).

But these changes all are dependent on the greatest changing event of the eons, the death and resurrection of God's Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Without that no promise can be fulfilled and no purpose of good can be achieved. Therefore the announcement of this astounding occurrence is called "God's evangel," His welcome and good and triumphant announcement of what happened in that brief time of three days nearly two thousand years ago, and its results.

In the last two articles Jim Coram and I contemplate some features of this message (pp.131-144). We cannot exhaust its riches of revelation. But in this we must begin: "The evangel is not good advice; the evangel is good news" (p.142). As certain scholars put it these days, the "gospel" is not 'contractual" but is "apocalyptic," by which is meant it is not "God will save you if you do such and such," but is revelatory, that is, a revelation (or "unveiling") of what has been done, its present significance and future results. This has been set forth anew where the Greek genitive construction "faith of Christ" is seen to be exactly that, and not "faith in Christ" as usually translated. Our faith is not something to boast in as though it arises from ourselves and is the source of deliverance from sin and death. Rather it is something to be thanking God for, and praying that it might grow along with growth in realization of God's righteousness and power and love in His sending of His Son and the faith and obedience of His Son to the death of the cross. This has called for changes in the CV translation (as in Ephesians 2:8, see Unsearchable Riches, vol.112, pp.111-118) which hopefully can be discussed further in these pages, God willing. D.H.H.

In Memoriam

James Robert Coram

Our fellow worker, Jim Coram, was put to repose early in the morning of October 10, 2022. He had been in and out of the hospital several times in recent months because of recurring intestinal pain, and previously it always seemed he could be restored to normal. He spoke with me by phone cheerfully as we discussed finishing plans for this third issue of Unsearchable Riches for 2022 just days before he suffered what proved to be his final relapse.

He was born on April 13, 1946 in Columbus, Ohio and grew up in that general area. A talented musician, he yet turned to printing as a vocation. After a stint in the military reserves, he became interested in the Bible and joined an association which centered its attention on law observance. There he met and married his faithful companion, Suella Beth, who survives him. Soon after their marriage they left the religious organization they belonged to and were directed to the teachings of the Concordant Publishing Concern. It was the great contrast between grace and law that changed the direction of their thinking and provided answers to many perplexing questions.

A quick learner, Jim started a Bible class and became acquainted with other teachers and groups in the midwest, corresponding also with others at a distance. He did some printing for the Concern, and in connection with his own ministry. But in 1981 circumstances brought about the loss of the Coram's home where also the printing establishment was centered. It worked out, however, that they were to move to California, printing equipment and all, with their young son, Marc, and Tony Nungesser who had been assisting Jim in his work.

That opened up a forty (plus) year association with the CPC and Unsearchable Riches magazine which was not without troubles and trials, but of which he would assess (speaking for us all) in 2005 as follows:

"As concerns our own personal faith and as concerns our publication Unsearchable Riches as well, we can only say that we are thankful for the faith God has given us and for the little place of service He has allowed us to be in."[1]

Concerning "the little place of service" which God gave him we give God thanks for much that enlightens and encourages in his writings and recorded messages. He took up many scriptural issues and shared spiritual truth with boldness and meticulous scrutiny. His studies on Galatians in particular and the series "His Achievement are We" will be consulted often with profit. His "Questions and Answers" examine a variety of subjects that have become obscured by tradition and popular misconception. Perhaps above all else his thoughts on causation, pointing all to God as First Cause, leading to final glory, call for our serious attention.

Yet it would be wrong to speak only of his many contributions to scriptural understanding and not that, like us all, he was a human being who knew the suffering and groaning of Romans 8:18-23. For that is what gives the scriptural revelations of God's purpose and operations through Jesus Christ their continuing value.

His son Marc, read from 1 Corinthians 15 at the graveside service held on October 28 near Mission, Texas, where he had been living with his wife, Suella. He rests now in peace, waiting for that shout of command, and that glorious change into the image of his Lord, of which our apostle has written. D.H.H.

THE BOUNDARY LINE

WHERE is the boundary line between the Pentecostal era and the present secret administration of God's grace? What part of the Scriptures applies to us and what was written to the Circumcision? The scriptural line is clear cut and conclusive. It may be briefly stated thus: All of Paul's writings are for us: all the rest are primarily for the Circumcision. This is as simple as it is satisfactory. It will stand every test. Those who take all of the New Testament as truth for today are in error. The great foundation for Christian doctrine is supposed to be the book of Acts. To learn that this treats of the terrestrial Kingdom is a vast step in the right apportionment of the truth. With it go the writings of James, Peter, John and Jude, which are based on the Gospels and addressed to the Circumcision.

There is a tendency on the part of some who have gone thus far, to question whether all of Paul's writings may be for us. This applies only to his earlier letters. All are agreed that his prison epistles apply to the present. But his pre-prison letters, which were penned during the era covered by the book of Acts, are questioned. It is found that the later epistles contain much which the early ones do not reveal. Where shall we draw the line?

Those who have lived near the boundary line of two different countries will understand some of the difficulties connected with this subject. Twice have I stood on the line between the United States and Mexico. Once, many years ago, I could not see just where the line was, for there seemed to be no artificial indication. The country on either side looked alike. Both Spanish and English were current speech above and below the border. But there was a subtle change in the moral atmosphere. Rows of guns were stacked before the adobe custom house in Mexico. The mud-walled church was over a hundred years old. The greatest differences were invisible. I hardly realized that I was under another government, among a people with distinct customs and a different mode of life.

It were well if we could learn the lesson of the border in dealing with borderland writings. We once thought that the mere mention of the word "church" in Acts proved that it was for us. Let us not imagine that language settles such things. The Thessalonian letters were the first of Paul's epistles to be written during the Acts era. We must expect the language to be like that on the border. Because I use some Spanish words in my conversation does not prove that I am in Mexico. It may suggest that I live near that country. So the presence of Kingdom expressions in border epistles proves nothing except that they are such.

We should be prepared to find much in the latter part of Acts, in connection with Paul's ministries, which has a strong leaning toward present truth. The very call of Saul is far more in keeping with the grace now shown to the nations than the Kingdom administration of Acts. His turning to the nations points in the same direction. The raising of Eutychus is a specially strong intimation of something beyond the Kingdom proclamation. It is all border truth. But, in Acts, Paul never steps over the border. This he does for the first time, when he writes his letter to the Thessalonians. There the evangel is reduced to its gracious simplicity. All that they did was to receive it. They became imitators of Paul, which is quite contrary to Kingdom teaching, and in thorough accord with the present. They are taught to wait, not watch, for God's Son out of the heavens, not after the great affliction when Christ comes to Israel, but before God's indignation is poured upon the earth (1 Thess.1:3,6,10).

Perhaps, to elaborate the illustration, it would be more correct to say that he is on the border in his preparatory epistles. I well remember visiting the international boundary line a second time where it was clearly defined by a high wire fence. I made a point of standing on foreign ground with one foot back whence I had come. Though I still stood partially on home soil, I was headed for another land. So is Thessalonians, and Romans, Corinthians, and Galatians. The political superiority of Israel lingers slightly in these letters. Israel's dominance is discounted, yet her ascendency is still acknowledged in some respects. The full entrance of the nations into their present position of highest privilege is not made known until it is revealed in the first chapter of Ephesians. We shall now consider the first full revelation of the present place of the nations. This is not border truth. This is not transitional. It is the final definition of our position in God's purpose.

In the opening paragraphs of Ephesians (1:3-12) we have been reading of the supreme place accorded to some of the Circumcision, who are associated with Paul. We have taken it for granted that the same is true of us. We have anticipated Paul's inclusion of the nations (Eph.1:13,14). Let us now meditate on this memorable declaration: "In Whom you also [the Uncircumcision]—on hearing the word of truth, the evangel of your salvation—in Whom on believing also, you are sealed with the holy spirit of promise (which is an earnest of the enjoyment of our allotment, to the deliverance of that which has been procured) for the laud of His glory!"

These words are of supreme import to us, sinners of the Gentiles. They should be graven on our monuments, they should be preached from our pulpits, they should be harbored in our hearts. They mean more to us than the Magna Charta to the English or the emancipation proclamation to the southern slaves. They are our fortune, and our fame.

They bring us more of wealth, of power, and of prestige than the highest flight of our ambition dares to dream. Yet how little have the nations noticed them! How seldom are they mentioned! How generally are they ignored!

The logical argument is this: The transcendent blessings Paul had outlined are spiritual (Eph.1:3). The nations had received the spirit, by faith, when hearing and believing the evangel. Now this spirit is an earnest of the very allotment which he has been revealing. Hence they also are included in the grace glorious, and are blessed with every spiritual blessing among the celestials! They had enjoyed the earnest of this allotment from the day that they believed. But they did not dream at that time that the possession of the spirit had any promissory value. Now it becomes the title to high celestial honors and makes them joint allottees with the celestial section of the Circumcision.

To stop here and fully investigate the spirit and its operations would break the thread of thought. Hence we will return to this aspect at a later time. While we have the clue fresh in our minds, let us hurry on to the next unfolding, for it commences with a "therefore." Translators are at a loss to render "THE according-to YE BELIEF" (Eph.1:15). The Authorized Version ignores the preposition (according-to). The Revisers seek to express it by "the faith . . . which is among you," but they show their indecision by suggesting "in" in the margin. Rotherham makes it the faith "on your part." But a little consideration will show that Paul cannot be writing of their act of faith in receiving the evangel, for he had known of that for many years, when he was among them in person. Why should he bring it up at this late date? He is dealing with something new, something recent.

Paul here refers to the teaching which he has just enunciated in the preceding verses 1-14. What he has in mind is that peculiar body of truth which was theirs to receive, and he calls it "this faith of yours" or "this faith which relates to you."

THE CELESTIAL FAITH RELATING TO YOU

The Greek text of Ephesians 1:15 differs from Colossians 1:4. The most ancient and almost complete manuscripts, the three used in compiling the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT, did not have the word "love" in Ephesians 1:15. It was added by a later editor in Sinaiticus. On many occasions the additions of this editor are of great value. But in Ephesians 1:15 he seems to be recording the attempts of some early expositors to make this epistle understandable after its message as a circular letter was lost; even though some of the Church Fathers (Origen, Pelagius, Jerome, Augustine, Cyril) omit the word "love" when they quote from Ephesians.

Colossians is by no means a repetition of Ephesians. The two paragraphs that seem to be parallel have minute variations which, sympathetically examined, will show how exquisitely the separate details harmonize with the special subject of each letter. In both epistles Paul presents himself as an apostle, for he has been commissioned, and has authority to write and set forth the truth and reveal the secrets which it contains.

In Ephesians Paul appears alone as apostle in his salutation. Here his full authority is necessary to certify to his words of teaching. Colossians is the complement of the doctrinal section of Ephesians. Two secrets dominate both. Ephesians elaborates the present secret administration of the grace of God with celestial blessings for us, the members of the body of Christ: Colossians dwells upon the secret of Christ, Who is the Head of that body. In Ephesians, Paul teaches the truth, while he corrects departure from it in Colossians.

Epaphras seems to have been the principal teacher in the Colossian ecclesia. It was from him that Paul and Timothy had heard of the faith and love which they exercised. Hence he writes, "We are thanking . . . on hearing of your faith in Christ Jesus and the love which you have for all the saints." Considering the circumstances, the simple term "your faith" was appropriate.

Ephesians, however, was a circular letter, copies of which were sent to a number of Pauline ecclesias. Here Paul writes of "the according to ye faith" or the faith which relates to ye, for which the CV has this faith of yours. He does not speak of the act of faith which the believers in all his ecclesias had been exercising ever so long, but rather of that body of faith which was especially theirs, namely the message of this epistle, which Paul alone had heard from his Lord and which he is now passing on to all his readers: "Therefore, I also, on hearing of this faith of yours in the Lord Jesus, and that for all the saints, do not cease giving thanks for you . . . ."

After having outlined it in Ephesians 1:1-14, the apostle is not changing the subject when he comes to verse 15, but is rather continuing it as is evident from the use of the conjunction therefore. There is one body of faith for us, of the celestial, spiritual allotment, and another, a terrestrial inheritance for the Circumcision and all the nations who are going to be blessed with and through them. We are not dependent on the national restoration of Israel any longer, for our blessings are supernal, among the celestials. In those days this new body of faith was in contrast to the [faith that was] for all the other saints. If the first half of verse 15 were understood, there would have been no need for inserting the word "love" in the second half.[1]

1. The Unsearchable Riches issue No.1 of volume 31 contains 5 pages (40-44) dealing with the grammatical evidence for our rendering of Ephesians 1:15.

When the time came that the twelve apostles in Jerusalem were assembled to their fathers and the last of their followers had died and the proclamation of the Kingdom was no longer authorized, then "this faith of yours" became indeed the faith for all the saints, even though not of all the saints, for they had lost all knowledge of their own special celestial faith, and could not understand any reference to it. Even during Paul's lifetime all his ecclesias in Asia had turned away from him.

In Ephesians 1:15, the apostle does not give thanks because those to whom he writes had believed, but because they have become the recipients of the grace glorious. He was grateful that they also were included in its embrace. His prayer is just as definite in its scope. It all refers immediately to God's calling, His allotment, His power. The need for this prayer certainly ought to be apparent in these days, for spiritual wisdom and realization of God's will are needed today more than ever. Hence let us pray for it so as to perceive the expectation of God's calling, and the transcendent greatness of God's resurrection power for Christ and for us, also to perceive the riches of the glory of the enjoyment of God's allotment among the saints.

WITH FAITH AND EXPECTATION

Gleeful, yet unostentatious in their giving, the Yoder family of Hemet, California, Maurice and Anita, and their five children, were instrumental in the continuance of the Concordant Publishing Concern in the early years by financial support and much encouragement. We now learn of the deaths of the eldest son, Charles Yoder at the age of 99 years and the younger daughter, Evelyn Tatton at the age of 93. They were blessed with faith and expectation, while walking in love.

Together with their extended families and many friends we mourn their loss with the happy expectation of being together with our Lord always.

GOD MAKES OUR TRIALS

IT IS CERTAINLY CORRECT to say that God makes our trials, not merely permits them. For, "No trial has taken you except what is human" (1 Cor.10:13a). And, "A man [a "human"] cannot get anything if it should not be given him out of heaven" (John 3: 27). "Now, faithful is God, Who will not be leaving you to be tried above what you are able, but, together with the trial, will be making the sequel also, to enable you to undergo it" (1 Cor.10:13b).

If a furniture maker were to say to us, "Together with the table, I will be making the chairs also," we would understand just what he meant. He would mean that he would be making both items of furniture, making them together, one as well as the other. Thus it is with God's making of our trials and their sequels, though He has no need to attempt the actual trying, or "probing" (peirazo, PROBIZE), and so has delegated that work to others who will ultimately benefit from the experience (e.g., Gen.50:20). Therefore, God brings us into trial (cp Matt.6:13; Luke 11:4), yet He Himself does not try us (James 1:13).

The standard PROBE accurately represents the central idea in the stem -peir-, from which we get peirasmoa, PROBing, trial, and peirzaō, PROBize, try. Its most elementary sense is shown in the passages that speak of attempting to do something. Thus, Saul tried to join the disciples in Jerusalem (Acts 9:26); Paul and Timothy tried to go into Bythynia (Acts 16:7); Paul was charged with trying to profane the sanctuary (Acts 24:6). The essence of the term, then, points us to the idea of attempting to do something. And, in the nature of the case, the purpose of such an endeavor also involves the thought of probing. In some passages it is the essence of -pier- (to attempt) which is in view. In others, we are directed toward its purpose (to discover) and the means which it employs toward this end (probing, into the unknown).

POWER PROMISED TO ENDURE

Though God may often "leave us to our own devices" (which are themselves ultimately the work of His hand), He will not be leaving us in such a way or to such a degree that we are tried above what we are able. He promises us power to endure our trials, not exemption from their consequences or a way to escape their grasp. He enables us to endure by giving us faith to believe that one day we will "step out" of all our trials, and will then enjoy their "sequel" (ekbasis, OUT-STEPPing). Therefore, "we may be glorying . . . in afflictions, having perceived that affliction is producing endurance, yet endurance testedness, yet testedness expectation" (Rom.5:3,4). Indeed, "Happy is the man who is enduring trial" (cp James 1:12a). And, "Lo! we are counting those happy who endure," for we have heard of the endurance of Job, and have perceived the consummation of the Lord, "for very compassionate and pitiful is the Lord" (cf James 5:11).

James speaks ideally when he says, "Let no one undergoing trial be saying that: 'From God am I undergoing trial' . . ." (James 1:13a). He by no means, however, declares that the reason no one should be saying "From God am I undergoing trial" is because (as most believe) He has neither made our trials nor given them to us. To the contrary, since God has made our trials and given us all that we have, it cannot be that James is hereby denying God's deity with regard to our trials. To the contrary, he explicitly tells us why he says what he says. We are not to be saying, "'From God am I undergoing trial,' for God is not tried by evils, yet[1] He is trying no one" (James 1:13).

Unlike ourselves, God is never tried by evils, in the associated sense of experiencing perplexity or distress due to suffering. In the face of evil, God is neither perplexed nor distressed, for He knows just what it will do, and that it will accomplish His purpose. Likewise, evils cannot probe into the untraceable ways of the Deity in order to put Him on trial or discover something about Him. They have no such ability, and have been given no such ministry. Our trials may consist of much that is evil, but in themselves they can teach us nothing. God, however, can teach us much through the experiences of evil which He wisely gives us (Ecc.1:13).

We are not to be putting God on trial (1 Cor.10:9), attempting to make Him prove Himself; we are to be believing His Word and trusting His promises. However, while confidently relying on Him, we are to be testing God (examining and testing out His ways) that we might have Him in recognition and discover the goodness of His ways (cp Rom.1:28; 12:2). But we must never be so foolish as to put Him on trial, to contend with our Maker out of our own unbelief (e.g., Ex.17:1-7).

It is true that we are not being tried by God, as if He were trying to discover something about us (for He already knows all; 1 John 3:20). Consequently, in this sense and for these reasons, when being tried, we should not be saying that "From God am I undergoing trial" (literally, we should not say, "From God [the Placer] I am being tried," Concordant Greek Text sublinear, James 1:13). This is quite true. For the Placer does not "try" (attempt and probe), He subjects.

1. "Yet" represents the particle de, "an adversative connective, yet, sometimes very slightly so; [it is] used as a resumptive, now" (Keyword Concordance, p.337, entry "yet"). De is sometimes idiomatically rendered "or" (e.g., James 4:13). Here, in James 1:13b, the sense is: The reason no one is to be saying, It is from the Placer that I am being probed, is because (first of all) God is not tried by evils; yet (another reason why no one should be speaking thus is because) He is trying no one.

Trying or Probing

"Let us take the case of Job as a concrete example. Here we have both God and Satan. God undoubtedly brought Job into trial, but He did not try him. He left that to Satan. God knew Job and did not need to probe him to find out what was in him. Satan did not know Job and needed to be shown. And so it is in all other cases. Trial, probing, experiment is a thing God does not need for Himself, since He knows all. But His creatures need it, for they are here to learn, as Job, not only what is in themselves, but also what is in God (cp Job 1:6-12,21,22; 42:12-16).

"The meaning of try or probe involves ignorance. The outcome is questionable. Whenever the men of His day tried our Lord they manifested their own blindness as well as their lack of confidence in Him. Yet in the contrary instance, when Philip was tried by our Lord (John 6:6), it is immediately explained that He was aware what He was about to do. His words tried Philip. He practically brought him into trial. Once we see this essential element in the word "trial," which we have tried to express by the standard probe, it becomes evident that God cannot try anyone, except in a figurative sense (e.g., Gen.22:1). The teacher in a classroom may "experiment" before the pupils, but that is a vastly different matter from the experiments of an inventor or investigator. God brings trials to demonstrate. This should be abundantly clear from the fact that with each trial He makes a sequel as well. He is like a novelist who determines first of all what the end of the tale is to be, and then brings on all the dangers and difficulties which will lead up to the sequel, but hold this back for the second volume."[2]

IF THE LORD SHOULD EVER WILL, WE SHALL BE DOING

Indeed, James' words in reply to those who boast in "the free will of man" concerning one's plans and achievements are among the most condemnatory in all Scripture against that position: "Come now, you who are saying, 'Today or tomorrow we will be going into this or that city and should be spending a year there, and we will be trafficking and getting gain'—who are not versed in that which is the morrow's, for what is your life? For a vapor are you, which is appearing briefly and thereupon disappearing—instead of your saying, 'If the Lord should ever will, and we shall be living, we also will be doing this or that.' Yet now you are vaunting in your ostentations. All such boasting is wicked. Then to one perceiving how to be doing the ideal and not doing it, to him it is sin" (James 4:13-17).

This scriptural teaching, through James, is obviously transadministrational in nature. Indeed Paul presents himself as our model in this matter as well: e.g., "I shall come back again to you, God willing" (Acts 18:21). Similarly, "I shall be coming to you swiftly, if ever the Lord should will" (1 Cor.4:19). Upon hearing the prophecy that at Jerusalem the Jews would put the apostle in bonds and give him over to the Romans, the brethren declared, "Let the will of the Lord be done!" (Acts 21:14). They realized that this was the will and work of the Lord, for, "Would there come to be evil in a city, and Yahweh not have done it?" (Amos 3:6b).

It is not that we may never use the future tense concerning ourselves under any circumstances, but that we are not to do so when speaking predictively where God has not promised. When it is evident we are simply speaking ideally, as an example of a commended course, the future tense may freely be used by itself. For example, Paul said, concerning all who were announcing Christ, "I am rejoicing in this also, and will be rejoicing nevertheless" (Phil.1:18). He is not boasting of the morrow, but setting us an example.

Yet if indeed when saying "I will" (or, "I'm going to") we actually mean no more than "I intend to do so" or, "my plans are," then why not say as much—at least when speaking of matters of some importance? Undoubtedly, not unlike the matter of saying "eonian life" instead of "eternal life," here too we wish to be accepted by others, and so convince ourselves that these matters are not very important after all. Yet Paul has said, "Have a pattern of sound words, which you hear from me, in faith and love, the faith and love which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim.1:13). Though even among ourselves, perhaps we need not always express the words, "the Lord willing," nonetheless, we should be very far from neglecting them altogether. But let us not be overrighteous in this matter, or intent upon reforming our friends. We have enough to do to deal with our own weaknesses, and in many areas. Let us be sensible and practical, but not unfaithful under guise of these.

Yet let us remember, "It is the glory of the Elohim to conceal a matter" (Prov.25:2). Most are well satisfied as to their own rectitude in paying little heed indeed to these teachings. Their consciences do not bother them. They are quite ensconced in their habitual ways of thinking and speaking. So let us remember that it is God's grace that brings adjustment, not our impatience.

It is extremely helpful to realize that our trials, with all their human failings (or "sin") do not happen by free will. Instead, they occur according to the wise counsels of our God and Father. This realization becomes a powerful influence upon us, giving us an ability to undergo many an unhappy matter that we would otherwise never have. Like Job, we can take these things from the hand of our God, our Subjector. For we know, though they find no place whatever in His heart of love (cf Jer.32: 35; cp 44:21), His wisdom dictates their ephemeral presence, and His hand brings them to pass, according to His counsels (e.g., cf Acts 4:28; cp Isa.53:10). This is so that we might one day have the blessing of deliverance from all evil, and glorify and thank Him accordingly.

We rejoice in the assurance that God is faithful. Together with the trial He will be making the sequel also, to enable us to undergo it. Consequently, in the midst of trial, in everything we are giving thanks (1 Thess.5:18). May we be giving thanks always for all things, in the name of our Lord, Jesus Christ, to our God and Father (Eph.5:20).

James R. Coram

OUR PRESENT TASK

Our future testimony may be brief. Our opportunity for service may be very short. When our Lord calls us to Himself the ministry of suffering will be over, and give place to the glory. Shall we not make the most of the time that still remains?

There is nothing we can do in the world comparable to making known God. That was the mission of Christ. That will be our work in the coming eons. That is our task now. And what truths in the Scriptures are so necessary to a knowledge of Him as His transcendent grace to His saints in this administration and His limitless favor to the whole universe in the consummation? What is more derogatory to His great Name than the defeated, vindictive, vengeful god revealed by the doctrine of eternal torment? Let us do our utmost to exalt the love and power and wisdom of our God and the potency of the cross of His Christ by showing what they will accomplish when the eons have been harvested. Let us deem it an inestimable privilege to suffer in the proclamation of the truth that thus we may bring pleasure to Him Who suffered for our sakes on the accursed tree.

PAUL AND GOD'S EVANGEL

HERE I wish to begin a review (and note anew in some cases) of certain important details relating to God's evangel as Paul contributes them in Romans and beyond. First of all let us look closely at what Paul says about himself in relation to this good and highly welcome message of God.

Using the "sublinear" of the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT as a basis (with some changes) it might be helpful to render Romans 1:1 in English, word for word and grammatical form for grammatical form[1] as Paul expressed it in Greek, thus:

PAUL SLAVE OF-ANOINTED-One JESUS CALLED FROM-PUT-ed-one HAVING-been-FROM-definED INTO WELL-MESSAGE OF-God . . . .

JESUS CHRIST'S SLAVE

Paul was a slave of Jesus Christ . . . for God's evangel. A slave obeys [UNDER-HEARS], that is, he submissively listens to what is said to him by his Master (cp Rom.6:16,17). He was making known the evangel which came to him, not from a human but through a revelation of Jesus Christ (cf Gal.1:11,12). His testimony was, "For if I should be bringing the evangel, it is not for me to boast in, for necessity is lying on me, for it were woe to me if I should not bring the evangel! For if I am engaging in this voluntarily, I have wages, yet if involuntarily, I have been entrusted with an administration" (1 Cor.9:16,17; 1 Tim.1:4b).

Few have understood what Paul is saying in Romans 7:25 concerning the enslavement of his mind, but it is in full accord with his position as a slave of Christ Jesus for God's evangel. It is by God's grace through Jesus Christ, our Lord that Paul will be rescued out of his body of death. "Consequently, then," Paul declares concerning his present life, "I myself, with the mind indeed am slaving for God's law, yet with the flesh for sin's law." Paul plays on the word "law" throughout this context. There is the law of God, given at Sinai, for which Paul is gratified as to his inner self (v.22). And there is a different law in his fleshly members which wars with that inner gratification of mind (v.23). Yet in view of the evangel of God's grace through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Paul himself now enslaves his mind to God's law. That is not the law of God imposed upon Israel, but God's own "law," the law by which God operates in not sparing His Son, but giving Him up for us all (Rom.8:32), even God's evangel. Consequently even while sin's law operates in his flesh, Paul enslaves his mind, day by day, hour by hour, to God's law of grace through Jesus Christ.

A CALLED APOSTLE

Furthermore, Paul was a called apostle . . . for God's evangel. The sublinear of the CV Greek Text uses the English word "commissioner" for the Greek word apostolos. A commissioner is not one who commissions, but one who is sent with a commission "with authority for the execution of some task."[2] This is its usage. Accordingly Paul declares, "Christ does not commission me to be baptizing, but to be bringing the evangel" (1 Cor.1:17).

Yet according to its elements, the commission was not only a placement ("putting") to some task, but also from some situation, or activity. The twelve apostles were put into a new service from an old work. Paul was put into the execution of a new task, the work of bringing the evangel, which was just the opposite of his former activity. "For I am the least of the apostles, who am not competent to be called an apostle, because I persecute the ecclesia of God" (1 Cor.15:9). Nevertheless he was a called apostle, commissioned for the task of evangelizing God's evangel.

In this we see what is most certainly a telling feature of God's evangel (that is, God's "law") ". . . the stupid things of the world God chooses, that He may be disgracing the wise ones, and the weak things of the world God chooses, that He may be disgracing the strong, and the ignoble things and the contemptible things of the world God chooses, and the things which are not that He should discard the things which are, so that no flesh at all should boast in God's sight" (1 Cor.1:27-28). In accord with His own law God calls the very one most unlikely from the world's standpoint to be the apostle for His evangel.

SEVERED FOR GOD'S EVANGEL

Paul had been severed for God's evangel. The Greek verb aphorizō refers to a decisive separation. In his "expanded translation" of the New Testament, Kenneth S. Wuest has "permanently separated to God's good news" here in this passage.[3] And in his ("expanded, amplified, multiple rendering) translation, Jonathan Mitchell has "being one having been marked off by boundaries (parted away and determined by bounds separated away and limited off, delineated, defined).[4]

3. The New Testament, an Expanded Translation, Eerdmans, 2001, ISBN 0-8028-0882-4.

4. The New Testament, copyright 2009, by Jonathan Mitchell, ISBN 978-1-4507-0505-9.

Many modern versions use "set apart" here. This is better than "separated" by itself as in the AV (which uses "sever" in Matthew 13:49). Luke 6:22 clearly refers to a strong separation, even as some note, an excommunication, (many modern versions use "exclude"). The CV uses "sever" consistently, and this is especially fitting in Galatians 1:15 which is parallel to Romans 1:1 regarding Paul's relationship to the evangel:

15 Yet when it delights ᶜGod, ᶜWho severs me ᵒfrom my mother's womb and calls me through His ᶜgrace . . . .

Here, as he often does, Paul uses terms from the Hebrew Scriptures (as rendered in the Septuagint translation), making changes as suits his purpose and adapting them into his present flow of thought. Paul does not speak of what God did for him when he was in his mother's womb (or was given birth out from his mother's womb), as was the case of Jeremiah or the Servant of Yahweh (cf Jer.1:5; Isa. 49:1-5). He refers to God's severing of him from Judaism when God called him in His grace. This severing was like that of a baby being decisively separated from its mother's womb in birth. Elsewhere Paul speaks of that which was gain to him in flesh, both by birth "of the race of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin" as well as his development in Judaism "in circumcision the eighth day, . . . in relation to law a Pharisee, in relation to zeal, persecuting the ecclesia, in relation to the righteousness which is in law, becoming blameless. But things which were gain to me, those I have deemed a forfeit because of Christ" (Phil.3:5-7). These were a forfeit to him because God had severed him from them when He called him through His grace to unveil His Son in him.

Having told the Galatians of this severance and call, Paul recounts, in carefully wording, his avoidance (complete for three years, and qualified after fourteen years) of the apostles and leaders in Jerusalem.

Clearly, in introducing himself and his concerns, Paul makes it clear that all is directed to the progress of God's evangel concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. And in this he is set apart from his former life, and his commission is to be distinguished even from that of those former apostles who remain within the sphere of Judaism. In this way we will begin to see why he sometimes calls the evangel, "my evangel."

Paul is our apostle, and we need to give careful attention to what he says concerning the revelations made known to him by the risen Lord.

D.H.H.

GOD FILLS OUR EVERY NEED

Now my God shall be filling your every need. I can hardly think of any passage we might need more than this one, because we see so many things in our lives that we tend to think are our needs, you know, and they don't become filled, deficiencies, our own weaknesses, the trials, the things that happen to our family and friends. And we really feel that, well, we needed this person who died, or we needed this good relationship, or we needed a better habit at this time, or we needed to be this or that, you name it. Well, if it was your need for you to have had it, you would have had it, because God fulfills our every need, and it must be in His wisdom that these other things are present when they are things that are so disappointing to us.

James. R. Coram

On hearing of the death of James Coram, our friends, Daryl and Bonnie Jo Reedy, who struggle with their own serious illnesses, sent out the preceding, word for word extract from one of his recorded messages. We feel it is an ever-timely reminder for us all.

"WHEN IT DELIGHTS GOD"
Galatians 1:10-17

For, at present, am I persuading men or God? Or am I seeking to be please men? If I still pleased men, I were not a slave of Christ. (Gal.1:10, CLNT)

With these words, having completed the introductory, preparatory portion of the epistle to the Galatians (1:1-9), Paul now begins his personal defense. The dominant theme of the entire epistle is Paul's defense of his own evangel. On this behalf, he would first defend his apostleship. If he has been commissioned by Christ Himself to proclaim this evangel, then it is a true evangel. Therefore, it is to be accepted accordingly by all who are in Christ; and, it is to be heeded and personally applied by all who come under its blessing.

The epistle began with the words, "Paul, an apostle, (not from men, neither through a man. . . .)" (1:1, CLNT). Now, beginning in verse 10, Paul begins to demonstrate the truth of this initial affirmation. He does so through the word "for," which refers us to his repeated, insistent declaration, "If anyone is bringing you an evangel beside that which you accepted, let him be anathema!" (1:8,9, CLNT). That is, the reason why an "anathema" (i.e., a certain, adversative judgment) must fall upon any who bring a different evangel (cp 1:6b) to those whom God is actually blessing according to Paul's evangel, is because, in announcing his evangel, the apostle is not persuading "[as to] human beings," but "[as to] God."

Idiomatically, the Greek word for "persuade" (peithō, PERSUADE) is also rendered "have confidence" (e.g., "those who have confidence in money," Mark 10:24; cp Gal.5:7-10).

No one would imagine otherwise than that in performing his evangelistic labors, Paul was seeking to persuade men, not God. If, however, the word "persuading" is taken literally, without allowance for an ellipsis such as "as to" (i.e., "persuading [as to]"), the sense would then be merely the trite fact that Paul was seeking to persuade men, not God. In that case, however, the causal conjunction "for," in relating us back to verses 8 and 9, would introduce an illogical statement. The sense would then be that the reason why an anathema must befall those who bring a different evangel, is because, in performing his ministry, Paul sought to persuade men! Of course it does not follow from the mere fact that Paul's ministry was on behalf of all men (not God), that this constitutes grounds for the pronouncement of an anathema upon Paul's opposers.

Therefore, the elliptical "as to" ("persuading [as to] men or God?") or "in" ("having confidence [in] men or God?") must be understood when considering Paul's words here. Then, the sense is, "Am I having confidence (in) men or (in) God?" or, when expressed using the English "persuade": "Am I persuading (as to) men or (as to) God?" The point then becomes that in proclaiming his evangel, Paul is confident in (or persuaded as to) the truthfulness of his message, for his message, first of all, is God's message. And, because that is so, therefore ("For," 1:10a) it follows, "if anyone is bringing you an evangel beside that which you accepted, let him be being anathema!" (1:9, CLNT).

In proclaiming his evangel, Paul's persuasion is with God in view. Therefore, the apostle's ministry of seeking to persuade others was first of all founded upon his own persuasion as to what God had revealed to him through Christ.

Hence, Paul must further add, "If I still pleased men, I were not a slave of Christ" (1:10b, CLNT). Paul's words here should be considered in connection with his related declaration in Galatians 5:11: "Now I, brethren, if I am still heralding circumcision, why am I still being persecuted? Consequently [i.e., "In that case, then;"], the snare of the cross of Christ has been nullified."

For a time, after Saul of Tarsus (as Paul was originally known) first became acquainted with the Lord on the Damascus road (Acts 9:27), he continued on, seeking the righteousness which is in law, according to Moses (Phil.3:6; John 7:23). Saul anticipated the restoring of the kingdom unto Israel, according to the times and eras which the Father placed in His own jurisdiction (Acts 1:6,7).

During this period, Saul was a member of the ecclesia of believing Jews at Antioch. All such ones lived in expectation of Israel's promised kingdom, according to the writings of their prophets, while seeking to become blameless themselves according to the law, in anticipation of that day. Believing Jews were zealous for the law (Acts 21:20); they practiced circumcision and sought to keep the law of Moses (cp Acts 15:5). Jesus Himself had warned that any of that calling who were "workers of lawlessness," had no relationship with Him and would not enter into the kingdom of the heavens (cp Matt.7:21-23; James 2:10).

Therefore, during that early period, before Saul was severed from his law-observing brethren for the work to which God ("the holy spirit") had called him (Acts 13:2), Saul too must have heralded circumcision. In so doing, he, in a righteous sense, pleased men by doing that which those who were seeking to establish their own righteousness according to law (cp Rom.10:3, 4), rightly deemed essential to entrance into life in the terrestrial kingdom.

Were Paul, now, however, to still "please men" by continuing to herald circumcision, as he says, "I were not a slave of Christ" (Gal.1:10b).

After having been severed from his past associations, that he might now be engaged in the service of that glorious evangel of God which, apart from law, bestows a declaration of righteousness on all who are believing (Rom. 3:21,22), it would be entirely out of place for Paul still to be pleasing men by heralding circumcision.

That is, such service, now, by Paul, could only "please human beings" in the case of any who continued to deem such a rite essential for themselves, even though they erred in supposing that it should be imposed as well on the believers of the nations (Acts 15:1,5). In connection with the evangel of the Circumcision and its service, such a rite was indeed essential; even so, it has no place whatever in connection with the evangel which Paul was heralding among the nations (Gal.2:2). Hence, were Paul now to continue to enjoin circumcision even on those of the nations, doing so out of a motive merely to please those who imagined that this was necessary, he could not be "a [worthy] slave of Christ."

Today, when we ourselves become persuaded as to the evangel which God first revealed to Paul, our confidence too is in God. We can no longer have confidence in the false, human traditions which we first embraced. We must now set aside various ceremonies and observances, ones which we should never have practiced in the first place. If we would be faithful, legalistic scrutiny of days and foods, besides giving heed to sundry do's and don'ts as prerequisites to salvation, must all be repudiated. This is so, even if in so doing we should incur the *dis*pleasure of man as a result.

NOT IN ACCORD WITH A HUMAN

For I am making known to you, brethren, as to the evangel which is being brought by me, that it is not in accord with man. For neither did I accept it from a man, nor am I taught it, but it comes through a revelation of Jesus Christ. (1:11,12, CLNT)

Again, the reason why ("for") Paul was not seeking to please men, and was not still pleasing men, was because the evangel which he brought was not in accord with a human. And, in turn, the reason why his evangel was not in accord with a human, was because he neither accepted it from a man nor was he taught it by a man.

"Those who were disturbing the Galatians had no message except what they had received [and corrupted and misapplied] from the twelve apostles. But Paul is unwearied in his insistence that he received nothing from them (cp Gal.2:6). His revelation was a fresh revelation made known to him by the Lord Himself. If Paul merely proclaimed what the twelve taught, why did he not receive it through them? What need for the Lord to descend and call him on the Damascus road? Why should he be severed from the rest at Antioch? Why did the believing Jews in Jerusalem oppose his ministry among the nations?"[1]

Just as in verse 1 Paul declares that his apostleship is neither of human origin nor derivation, he now makes a similar claim concerning his evangel. Paul's evangel is not "in accord with (kata, DOWN) a human." That is, his evangel itself is not based upon some preexisting message which was already being taught by someone else. Paul—unlike ourselves, who take our evangel from him—did not simply repeat some extant message which was already in the hands of those who were in Christ before him.

This was because "neither do I accept [his evangel] from a man, nor was taught it [by a man]," but he accepted it through a revelation of Jesus Christ, and he was taught it through a revelation of Jesus Christ.

The way this text is rendered in the Concordant Literal New Testament, is expedient for the ordinary reader in an idiomatic version. Yet with the added words "it came," even as with no indication of either the ellipsis or of the parallel construction which obtains in the Greek, it lacks the forcefulness and clarity of the more precise sense, as we have sought to bring out in the preceding paragraph.

1. A. E. Knoch, CONCORDANT COMMENTARY, p.280.

Paul did not accept his evangel "from [para, BESIDE] a man," nor was he taught it by a man. The word "man" is in the singular, as in the phrase "through a man," in verse 1. In accepting and learning his evangel, since Paul did not stand "beside" any man in so doing, neither did he thus stand beside any particular man.

The emphatic intimation here, however, through the repeated, singular form, is implicative of a particular man. "It points unmistakably to Peter who figures so prominently in this recital. The circumcisionists asserted Paul's dependence on the elder apostles and the Jerusalem church. They insinuated that he had received his gospel from Peter. Whence, said they, could Paul have derived his knowledge of Christ, but from this fountainhead? This was the fulcrum of the argument which Paul foils."[2]

In a wider sense, neither is Paul's evangel in accord with man, with respect to the entirety of the human race. The Hebrew term for human being is adm ("Adam"). The Circumcision evangel is very much concerned with the human race, not just Israel, and God's purpose for it on the earth and in the flesh. So Paul has in mind to distinguish his evangel from that of the Circumcision (which is in accord with humanity). The apostle does not simply make a general contrast between a message from God that is divine in nature, and one concerned with ordinary human thinking and philosophy. It is not only that Paul's evangel was not "secular" or was not in accord with human wisdom (this is in view in 1 Corinthians 1:18-25, for instance). But Paul's evangel is also different from that of the Circumcision which has much that accords with humanity, though indeed being of God and concerned with Christ.

It seems that broadly considered, "not in accord with humanity" incorporates both these ideas: (1) not in accord with human wisdom and thinking (as in 1 Corinthians 1), and also (2) not in accord with God's message concerning Israel and the nations, the earth, and the place of humanity as promised from Adam and on through the prophets. Yet the context of Galatians makes it clear that (2) is what Paul has predominantly in view here, "at present" (1:10).

While Paul is indeed relating "his story" in chapters 1 and 2, nevertheless his account focuses on "the grace of Christ" (1:6), "Jesus Christ's revelation" (1:12), that is, "the evangel which is being brought by me" (1:11). So both Paul's story, and the message given to him, have this one pattern: not in accord with humanity, and being in accord with God and a revelation of Jesus Christ that came from God.

SEVERED FROM JUDAISM

For you hear of my behavior once, in Judaism, that I inordinately persecuted the ecclesia of God and ravaged it. And I progressed in Judaism above many contemporaries in my race, being inherently exceedingly more zealous for the traditions of my fathers. (1:13,14, CLNT)

Paul's use of the term "Judaism" in itself by no means implies any disparagement (cp his related expression, "judaizing," Gal.2:14; cf Acts 15:21). Under Judaism, Paul had been circumcised the eighth day, and, in his majority, had become a Hebrew of Hebrews. In relation to the righteousness which is in law, he had been becoming blameless (Phil.3:5,6), even if he was a member of the sect of the Pharisees, which had added many vain traditions to the law.

The point is that "Judaism" simply refers to the institutions of the Jews, the observance of the law of Moses as understood and practiced beginning with the Babylonian exile. The traditions of Paul's "fathers:" were by no means all vain traditions of men, but were, in many respects, a devout and intelligent observance of the law, as handed down from one generation to the next.

Though the expression "Judaism" was perhaps originally coined by non-Jews, of whom some doubtless used the word with a connotation of contempt it would, when naturalized among the Jews themselves, lose this idea, and even become a title of honor. The case of the term "Christian," which was likewise originally a term of reproach (cp Acts 11:25; 26:28), is a parallel case: "For let not any of you be suffering as a murderer, or as a thief, or an evildoer, or as an interferer in other's affairs; yet if as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, yet let him be glorifying God in this Name . . ." (1 Peter 4:15,16).

Paul's behavior, however, once, in Judaism, in the days of his unbelief, was another matter. As he says, "I inordinately persecuted the ecclesia of God and ravaged it." Indeed, not only had he endorsed Stephen's assassination (Acts 8:1), but he was continually "breathing out threatening and murder against the disciples of the Lord" (Acts 9:1). He had supposed himself bound to commit much contrary to the name of Jesus the Nazarene, and so had acted accordingly. He locked up many of the saints in jails, and even deposited a ballot to despatch them. At all the synagogues, often punishing them, he compelled them to blaspheme. Being exceedingly maddened against them, he persecuted them as far as the outside cities (Acts 26:9-11).

Yet it was also true that he had progressed in Judaism itself, above many contemporaries in his race, being inherently exceedingly more zealous for the traditions of his fathers (1:14).

Paul's point is that there was nothing in his former career to account for his becoming a herald of the cross. "His prechristian career was such as to exclude all possibility of his receiving any doctrine from the followers of Jesus Christ, least of all from Peter, whom, as leader of the Nazarenes [Acts 24:5], he could only regard as an arch-heretic to be hunted to death."[3] Thus the apostle proves that it was simply absurd to suggest as certain of his enemies were insinuating, that he had received his evangel from Peter.

Now, when it delights God, Who severs me from my mother's womb, and calls me through His grace, to unveil His Son in me that I may be evangelizing Him among the nations . . . (1:15,16a, CLNT).

The particle de (YET), though sometimes, as here, rendered "now," is often translated "yet," which captures more of its essence. For example, "Yet now, apart from law, a righteousness of God is manifest . . ." (Rom.3:21); or, "yet God, being rich in mercy, because of His vast love with which He loves us . . ." (Eph.2:4). Though sometimes only slightly so, de is an adversative connective, in the sense that that which follows this expression and to which it refers (e.g., God's righteousness, or, His mercy and vast love) stands against the subject which precedes it. just as God's righteousness, mercy, and vast love, blessedly stand against human sin, thus also God's "delight" to unveil His Son in the foremost sinner (1 Tim.1:15,16), Saul of Tarsus, stood against Saul's Judaism, in which, in his unbelief, he had so ferociously persecuted the ecclesia.

To clarify this point, instead of saying, "Now, when it delights God . . ." we will say, "Yet when it delights God." Then the sense becomes more apparent: It is true that, as Saul, Paul had once been engaged in Judaism, and had progressed in Judaism above many contemporaries in his race. "Yet when it delights God," He severed Paul "from his mother's womb and call[ed him] through His grace" (1:15).

Thus it becomes evident that "mother's womb," here, is not literal but figurative. Indeed, through the severing of the umbilical cord, all infants, when first born, are severed from their literal mother's womb. But Paul, in the considerations before us, was severed from Judaism. Judaism was that which had long been nourishing him, as well as being that in which he had enjoyed much growth. Hence, he speaks of it as having been his "mother's womb."

Thus, Paul was severed from Judaism, and even from those of its practitioners who were believers in Christ (cp Acts 13:2). Yet Paul was "severed for the [i.e., that] evangel of God . . . concerning His Son . . . Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom.1:1-4), which, in its most complete form, has been preserved for us in the epistle to the Romans. This evangel of God—which is also the evangel of Christ (Gal.1: 7)—was revealed to Paul by Jesus Christ Himself. Hence, with reference to the one to whom Christ had revealed this evangel, Paul termed it "my evangel" (Rom.16:25). This is the evangel which Paul brought (1:11); the evangel which he heralded among the nations (2:2).

god unveils his son

When it delighted God to unveil His Son in Paul, He simply did so. Nothing is too marvelous for Him (Jer.32: 17,27). In this, Paul becomes "a pattern of those who," even when they do not as yet believe, "are about to be believing on [Jesus Christ] for life eonian" (1 Tim.1:16). Even in the days of their unbelief, it may be truly said of them that their faith is "impending." Thus it was that "whoever were set for life eonian," "they believe" (Acts 13:48). It is those for whom eonian life has been arranged, who believe on Christ. This is because the Lord "overwhelms" the unbelief of "those who are chosen" (2 Tim.2:10), "with faith and love in Christ Jesus" (1 Tim.1:14).

I did not immediately submit it to flesh and blood, neither came I up to Jerusalem to those who are apostles before me, but I came away into Arabia, and I return again to Damascus (1:16b,17, CLNT).

Paul had not received his evangel from those who were apostles before him, and was acting under a sense of a unique divine call that admitted of neither human validation nor supplement. Therefore, rather than seeking out one or more of the twelve for any reason whatsoever, Paul instead came away into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus.

THE WORDS "God's evangel concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, for obedience of faith among all the nations, for His Name's sake," are distinguished here, as a title for Paul's letter to the Romans. It is suggested by this that all that is written in this epistle is centered in and developed from this message. Of course Paul did not set these words out this way. But it is well for us to see them thus. Indeed it can aid us greatly if we relate these words to all of Paul's letters as his leading theme.

GOD'S EVANGEL

The Greek is eua[n]ggelion Theou ("evangel of God"). There is no "the." The only modifier of "evangel" is the genitive form of "God" (of-God), which can be expressed in English by the possessive case, "God's," bringing it into an equality of prominence with the first noun, "evangel." This is also true of "Son of God" (God's Son) in verse 4, "power . . . of God" (God's power) in verse 16 and "righteousness of God" (God's righteousness) in verse 17, as well as numerous other such constructions here and throughout Paul's writings.

However, at the end of Romans Paul calls this message "the evangel of the God," referring to the evangel as it has been presented, and to the God as He has been made known in this letter (Rom.15:16).

CONCERNING GOD'S SON

God's evangel concerns His Son. Jesus Christ stands alone in the middle between God and us. "For there is one God, and one Mediator of God and human beings," and this Mediator is Christ Jesus come as a Human, Who gives Himself as a Correspondent Ransom for all (1 Tim. 2:5,6). The tendency, however, is for us to insert ourselves along with Christ Jesus (even sometimes replacing Him) in this mediatory position. That must not be.

Before we look at Romans 1:16,17, connected with 3:21-28 let us jump ahead to God's evangel as Paul presents it in Romans 5:8, where Christ clearly stands between God and us, that is, between God and sinners.

·God is commending this ·love of sf[f]His io[i]to us,

Seeing that, while we ˡare still sinners,
Christ dies ov[o]for our sakes.

God's evangel here is that He loves us, and this is made known in a particular way. That way is that He spares not His Son (Rom.8:32), Christ Jesus, Who dies, and this is for us. Paul does not say here that Christ dies for us who put our faith in Him (or us as God's chosen ones), but that He dies for us who are sinners. He does the thing that is done. We contribute nothing to God's commendation of His love except to be what we are: sinners.

Paul continues in 5:9-11 to speak of what Christ's act of dying does for us, that is, "over us" (translated into English idiom: "for our sakes"). The suffering death of Christ is the cause of justification ("justified in His blood") and the channel of conciliation in this life and present glorying ("boasting") in God along with the enjoyment of conciliation ("we may be having peace toward God," Rom.5:1). This then will be exceeded by the future salvation in the life of Christ.

All of this is to be traced to the death and resurrected life of God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. It is not due to our faith or acts of any sort (though reckoned at present to us who are believing it).

"Therefore!" Since justification and conciliation, future salvation and present glorying in God, and enjoying the peace of conciliation are all through our Lord, Jesus Christ, "therefore," the situation is "even as" the situation which entered into the world "through one human," Adam (whose name in Hebrew is "Human"). Adam, through whom sin and death entered into the world is a type of Jesus Christ in that they both affect all human beings in a radical way with opposite results. Thus all eyes are focused on Jesus Christ in Romans 5:18,19, the One Mediator between God and human beings:

18 Consequently, then, as it is through one offense

[io]for all human beings [io]for condemnation,
Thus also it is through one righteous response
[io]for all human beings [io]for life's justifying.
19 For even as through the disobedience of the one human the many are constituted sinners,
Thus also through the obedience of the One
the many shall be [l]constituted righteous.

This, then, is the commendation of God's love to us, the righteous response to God's message concerning Him of the One, Jesus Christ. That is, the obedience (submissive hearing) of that One, His faithful obedience unto the death of the cross.

In seeing this we now in the twenty-first century should be made ready for Romans 1:16,17; 3:21-28. (The Roman believers would have understood Paul already in the first and third chapters, but poor translation and accumulated tradition have gotten into the way for us.) God's evangel concerns the obedience, the faith of Jesus Christ, His death for sinners as the channel to the salvation of sinners and the revelation of God as never before made manifest.

The evangelical pattern of God first, Christ in the middle, and the human third is seen in Romans 8:3,4 and 8:32-34 as well as many other places throughout Paul's epistles (and elsewhere as well). It is our joy to encounter them. But for now we go back to Romans 1 for a brief look at God's evangel concerning His Son as it appears in verses 16 and 17.

16 For not [l]ashamed[°] am I of the evangel:
For it [l]is God's power [io]for salvation to everyone [c]who is believing it—to the Jew first, and to the Greek as well.
17 For in it God's righteousness is being revealed[°]
out of faith, [io]for faith, according as it is [°]written[°]:
[y]Now the Righteous One,Is 53:11

out of faith shall He be living[°].Hk 2:4

With these words Paul introduces God's evangel concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, for which Paul was severed with grace and apostleship for obedience of faith among all the nations. It is a message of God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it. Salvation is a work of God's power, not of human believing, but it is for those who are believing it, who, at present, are those who have graciously been granted a measure of the spiritual endowment of faith (cf Rom.12:3; 1 Cor.13:13; Phil.1:29). Paul's evangel concerning His Son is a message of power, not human power, but of God's power. What this is saying, in effect, is that the death of God's Son in pain and ignominy and weakness is God's power. "For the word of the cross is stupidity indeed to those who are perishing, yet to us who are being saved it is God's power" (1 Cor.1:18).

This is the first reason why Paul is not ashamed of the evangel. It leaves no room for the human to boast (which is contrary to all religion; it seems shameful that we do not "help out"). But it does save sinners, and this is the only way this can be done righteously.

The weakness of the cross, its shame and suffering, its darkness of forsakedness, reveals God's righteousness as it truly is. The justification of God is the issue of issues. Thus Romans 1:17 is the verse of all verses in the opening chapter. It must be in accord with Romans 5:8-19 and 8:3 and 8:32. And this can only be done by the faith of Jesus Christ. Hence we read in Romans 3:21,22:

21 Yet now, apart from law,
God's righteousness has been made manifest[°]
(being attested[°] by the law and the prophets), 22 yet God's righteousness
through Jesus Christ's faith
[io]for all (and on all [c]who are believing it), for there [l]is no[t] distinction . . . .

It is in God's evangel concerning His Son, in the exercise of God's power for salvation that God's righteousness is manifested. Previously Paul points out that in God's righteous judgment every sin of every human being is taken into account (Rom.2:5-16a). But no one is saved (Rom.3:9-20). In the death of God's Son every act of sinning of all human beings is put to death (Rom.5:18; 2 Cor.5:14) resulting in life's justifying of all human beings so that all shall be constituted righteous (Rom.5:18,19). Hence the living God is the Saviour of all human beings (1 Tim.4:10), and God is displayed as the righteous Justifier (Rom.3:26).

God's righteousness is revealed "out of faith," and manifested "through faith," and this faith which is the source and channel of this revelation is the faith of the Righteous One, prophesied in Habakkuk 2:4. The Righteous One is God's Son, Jesus Christ our Lord (cf Isa.53:11; Acts 7:52; 22:14).

This is what we are believing. It is for our faith.

ROMANS 8:3

Let us turn now to God's evangel concerning His Son as presented in Romans 8:3.

3 For ᶜwhat is impossible to the law, in which it was ᶦinfirm through the flesh—

ᶜGod, ᵀsending His ˢᶠown ᶜSon in the likeness of sin's flesh
And concerning sin,
Condemns ᶜsin in the flesh,

Here God's evangel concerning His Son appears as it serves the believer as a spiritual force in behavior and mental state. It is obvious that Paul is contrasting the impossibility of the law to rid us of sin (because of the infirmity of the flesh) with what God does in the sending of His Son. But he leaves out the verb "does" and rushes us immediately to what it is that God does. God sends His Son. God sends His Son in the likeness of sin's flesh. And God sends His Son concerning sin. In doing these things He condemns sin in the flesh.

The three principals are here, God, His Son, and the human, now represented by "sin's flesh." But the evangel focuses on what God does, and that is what we need to focus on in mind and heart.

Paul uses a fact participle, "sending," reaching forward to a fact verb "(He)-condemns." God sends His own Son in two particular ways. He sends Him "in the likeness of sin's flesh," and in doing this, He sends Him "concerning sin." And by these two features of God's sending of His Son God puts sin in the flesh under condemnation, so there He may rid us of sin in the flesh. He does what law could never do, that which is impossible for law to do because of the infirmity of our flesh.

Fact verbs do not, in themselves, identify the time of the action of which they speak. They simply speak of the fact of the action. We know that God's sending of His Son occurred about two thousand years ago. That is made clear from the scriptural context. So also sin in the flesh was condemned to destruction, to abolishment, indeed to annihilation when Christ died, and this is assured by His resurrection. But sin is still with us, in our flesh. So it is that while we continue to walk through life we need to set our minds on the facts of God's evangel. For in this there is spiritual power for growth in worthy walk and peace of mind.

Nevertheless, the way to present, worthy walk and peace is not God's evangel. God's evangel is what trains us in that direction (cf Titus 2:11-13). God's evangel speaks of what has been done—done by God in the sending of His Son. This is apart from us, and it is not at all what we would have advised Him to do (cf Rom.11:34). God sent His Son to deal with sin, not in visible power and glory but in the likeness of sin's flesh, in the likeness of the very state which brought about the trouble in the first place and which keeps us in it. He was like Adam, capable of sinning. Indeed our Lord did not sin as Adam did, but He was made to be sin (2 Cor.5:21), and this is a matter we can hardly begin to grasp.

Yet this is what is being brought before us by the words "concerning sin." These two words in Greek, peri amartias are the very words the Septuagint Version of the Hebrew Scriptures, uses for what has been traditionally translated "for a sin offering" (e.g., Lev.5:6,7,11; 16:3,5,9; Num. 6:16; 7:16; 2 Chron.9:23,24, etc. cp Heb.10:6,8), although the word "offering" is not there in the Hebrew or Greek. God's Son was sent by God as the Antitype of that offering which is called SIN.

SIN CONCERNING SIN

Perhaps no article by A.E. Knoch reaches to the heights and depths of God's evangel as the one entitled "Sin for Sin."[1] It is mainly based on 2 Corinthians 5:21, which, following Paul's beseeching, "Be conciliated to God!" is translated in the CVNT as follows:

21 For the One not ⁻knowing sin, He makes to be sin [ov]for our sakes
That we´ may become° God's righteousness in Him.

Formerly the CV inserted the word "offering" in lightface type ("makes to be a sin offering"). This was to help many of us who are not aware that the sin offering is simply referred to in Scripture as sin. But now it seems best to render it here as in Hebrew and Greek and add a footnote of explanation. The type of Christ's death in the Old Testament offerings was a sin. So also the Antitype, is made to be sin.

In summing up his study Brother Knoch writes: ". . . God settles sin by sin. Every sin is transmuted by the sin of sins into an act essential to God's highest glory and the creatures' greatest good. All the righteousness and glory and honor which are Christ's, either before His incarnation or after His glorification, do not offset sin. His undeserved humiliation and distress and shame and death are sufficient to transform all sin into righteousness and holiness and bliss."[2]

A. E. Knoch did not bring the words "concerning sin" in Romans 8:3 into this exposition, but they surely belong there to be considered under the heading, "Sin Concerning Sin." God sends His Son in the weakness of sin's flesh, and this is as (a) sin (offering) concerned with the condemnation of sin. This is God's evangel as it spiritually affects the walk of those who set their minds on it even while, like Paul, their flesh is enslaved to sin (cf Rom.7:25 where "God's law" is used for "God's evangel" by word play).

2. Unsearchable Riches vol.99, p.134.

In Romans 8:31-34, Paul sums up God's evangel concerning His Son (that evangel which is for our submissive hearing of faith) in a joyous, glorious, majestic passage in praise of God's love which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord. It is mostly focused on the present and future by "act verbs" (progressing actions), but three times, twice in verse 32, and once in verse 34, Paul employs fact verbs (expressing truth apart from time) to bring out features of the core evangel as it speaks of God and His Son on Golgotha, so long ago. (The verb "loves" in verse 37 is also a fact verb, drawing the verbs, "spares not," "gives up," and "dies" into itself).

God loves in that He spares not His own Son but gives Him up for us all. The giving up of His own Son is the giving up to death. Christ Jesus dies. Strange love! Astounding obedience! Yet this is God's evangel concerning His Son. But it is not the whole of this WELL-MESSAGE. Christ Jesus dies. "Yet rather He is roused!" He is roused from among the dead *one*s—from among all the dead ones from Abel to Lazarus, who was briefly roused and died again, and all those who have died since God's Own Son dies and is roused.

Paul speaks of God here as the One Who loves us. He speaks of Christ Jesus as the One Who dies and is roused, Who rather than condemning us because of our sins and offenses is pleading (present tense) for our sakes. We should not have to ask, but wrong teaching and established tradition have made it necessary: Who are the "us"? For whose sakes is the death of the One Who dies, and for whom is He roused?

The question has already been answered. All sin (fact verb) and are wanting of the glory of God (Rom.3:23). God rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones, Jesus our Lord Who is given up (fact passive verb) because of our offenses, and is roused because of our justifying (Rom.

4:25). Consequently, then, as it is through one offense for all human beings for condemnation, thus also it is through one righteous response for all human beings for lifes justifying (Rom.5:18).

Yes here in Romans 8:30 Paul speaks of and addresses Gods chosen ones, who are designated beforehand for a special glorification. Yet if we who have the firstfruit of the spirit are presently groaning in ourselves it is a groaning known by the entire creation (Rom.8:22,23). What is true of the chosen ones is true of all in relation to Gods counseled will (Eph.1:10,11), which shall be attained to His glory.

Nevertheless for now Gods evangel shines forth in the hearts of those who are believing it. May God make it known more and more in its purity and power, removing the crusts that have accumulated about it, mixtures of law works (which have their place in the evangel of the Circumcision, Gal.2:7) and traditions of human beings, so that we may see it truly as Gods achievement through the death and rousing of His beloved Son.

FOR OUR FAITH

We have traced God's message of gladness and triumph (so extremely welcome and desperately needed), as it is set forth in the first eight chapters of Romans by means of five passages, Romans 1:16,17; 3:21,22; 5:8-14; 8:3 and 8:32-34. These point first to God, and then to His Son, and last of all to us God sends. Christ dies. And this is for the sake of the sinner.

There are many further references to the message in Romans 1-8, and it is not left behind in Romans 9-11 concerning Israel, nor in chapters 12-16 with reference to practical matters of our present lives. It is there in every letter of Paul's, and in noting how essential and critical it is, we find it is traceable throughout Scripture. D.H.H.

IT IS GOD WHO IS OPERATING

THE EVANGEL is not good advice; the evangel is good news. Nor is the evangel some hazy thing called universalism. The evangel is that Jesus, the Nazarene, is the very Christ of God, and that since Christ has died for our sins, our sins have been died for. The evangel is that those of us who now find ourselves believing in Christ, by the grace of God were long ago already chosen for our present place in Christ as well as for our coming eonian allotment, an allotment which will surely be ours in that day.

GOD OPERATES ALL FOR GOOD

The evangel is that since God, Who is love, is truly operating all, He is operating all together for good. Therefore, this world is the best possible world, and our own individual allotment therein is exactly as it should be. The evangel is that God is our Saviour and we are not at all our own saviour. The evangel is that we owe all to His grace and that boasting in self is debarred. Best of all, the evangel is that we may be glorying in expectation of the glory of God, our God and Father, Who will finally abolish death and become All in all.

We cannot possibly give proper attention to these glorious themes, however, if we are distracted and led away from them, either through false and contrary human tradition, through pleasure seeking, or through our own jealousy and competition. Then it will be, just as surely as with the Galatians, "Where is your happiness?" (Gal.4:15; cp Gal.5:15). The evangel is good news not good advice for our behavior. But the good news operates in us with power for joy, peace and self-control.

WITH FEAR AND TREMBLING

Yet as much as we want to be rid of sin and to avoid suffering, we must not lose sight of the fact that God alone is our Saviour. We will therefore remain in our weaknesses until God graciously delivers us. We cannot "help Him out." Even so, as God's means of saving us, He may well awaken us and cause us to do many things, to "save ourselves".

"On these things meditate. In these be, that your progress may be apparent to all. Be persisting in them, for in doing this you will save yourself as well as those hearing you" (1 Tim.4:15,16). By persisting in the teachings of the apostle Paul, Timothy would be saving himself, as well as those hearing him, from withdrawing from the faith. This practical salvation is the salvation of the context (cf 1 Tim.4:1).

In no sense do we save ourselves with respect to our positional salvation, our place in the ecclesia as members of Christ's body. We neither gain nor maintain this salvation. It is ours entirely apart from our acts.

Yet practical salvation, remains very important to us, even so. This is the salvation which is in view in Philippians 2:12b: "With fear and trembling, be carrying your own salvation into effect" Here the subject is not so much our faith but our faithfulness; our obedience through faith, that we might be becoming "blameless and artless, children of God, flawless, in the midst of a generation crooked and perverse" (Phil.2:15).

Our "fear" is not a fear of divine indignation. We shall be saved from the indignation of God through Christ. This is one notable way in which God is "especially" the Saviour of those who are believing (1 Tim.4:10b; Rom.5:9; 1 Thess.5:9). It is not because we fear divine wrath, but because we are constrained by divine love that we fear to offend our God and Father. Similarly, in a spirit of reverence, not of terror, we "tremble" in His glorious presence.

It is only fitting, then, that we should approach our practical salvation in such a spirit of reverence and devoutness—"for it is God Who is operating in you [the] to be willing as well as [the] to be working." It is God Who is "operating" both our willingness and our actions, whenever we are graced to be "effecting" (or "carrying out") our practical everyday salvation!

This work of God is "for the sake of His delight" (Phil.2:13b). Many of God's operations find no place in His heart, even though they are the work of His hand, according to His wise counsels. Yet our faithfulness is also God's work, and it delights Him to accomplish it in us. The phrases "the to be willing" and "the to be working" are the strict readings, as indicated in the CV by the superior periods (for the definite articles) and by the vertical strokes preceding "Will" and "work" (in order to indicate the incomplete form).

The self-control, which, indeed, is requisite to good character and constitutes the key to its possession, is itself a fruit of the spirit, not a work of the flesh (Gal.5:23). It is only our pride, in a veiled attempt to deny the truth, that seeks to complicate this simple fact.

May it be our heartfelt privilege to join with the apostle Paul in affirming the glorious good news of 2 Corinthians 1:12: "Our boasting is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in holiness and sincerity of God, not in fleshly wisdom, but in the grace of God, we behaved ourselves in the world, yet more superabundantly toward you" (2 Cor.1:12).

PAUL EVELY

Our friend, Paul Evely, recently of Wilmore, Kentucky, was put to repose on September 12, as the age of 99. Paul was in many ways a happy man of Romans 4:8, having the happy expectation of Titus 2:13. He will be greatly missed by us, his family and many friends

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, FOURTH QUARTER 2022
BEING THE FOURTH NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED THIRTEEN

EDITORIAL

ONCE again, although late and far from what was hoped for, we bring another volume of Unsearchable Riches to a close. And as always, we are thanking God for His enabling.

Volume 113 marks the death of a co-editor, even as volume 13 did one hundred years ago. Many questions arise as to the future of this work, but we continue, and prospects are encouraging.

This issue opens with A. E. Knoch's comments (with deep appreciation) on Paul's first prayer in Ephesians. This needs to be read in instalments, it seems to me, for so much is said that it seems impossible to summarize. Yet some selected quotes may point the way: "It is our highest duty and privilege to pray this prayer" (p.148). "The spirit of wisdom and revelation is desired for . . . the special realization of the celestial faith which is now ours in the Lord Jesus" (p.149). "Our blessings are spiritual among the celestial hosts" (p.149). "We are His complement Who completes the entire universe" (p.154).

On pages 155-162 James Coram takes up the subject of our choosings, reminding us that "Our choices are not things of chance, but the effects of their causes" (p.156). Hence, "Only those who are called and chosen actually choose Christ" (p.158).

We have tried in preparing this magazine (not always with success) to keep in view what A. E. Knoch unfolds in his article entitled "The Knowledge of Good" (pages 163-174). That the knowledge of evil is necessary for the knowledge of good is a fundamental fact. "The contrast between the two is the only means the creature has for the realization of God's goodness and the appreciation of His love" (p.174).

The rest of the issue is occupied with my own studies, which have centered so long on Romans and God's evangel as Paul unfolds it "apart from law" (Rom.3:21), yet still traceable through God's prophets in the holy scriptures (Rom.1:2; cp 3:21b). Most clearly this was attested in Habakkuk 2:4, which Paul cites in Romans 1:17 and again in Galatians 3:11 (as does the writer of Hebrews in 10:38). God's power for salvation, in which His righteousness is revealed, is employed out of (i.e. sourced in) and through the faith of Jesus Christ, which is His obedience unto the death of the cross. This is the basis of all present spiritual blessings and the glories to come. Early on, A. E. Knoch noted this, but with some diffidence, and without translating Romans 1:17 with Christ in view as the Righteous One.

I believe with all my heart that the subject of the faith of Christ Jesus needs to be recognized wherever context and grammar bring it forward, even in Ephesians 2:8 and 3:12,17. It is not that we have been wrong concerning the importance of our faith, but that the clear teaching that our faith is in the evangel concerning Christ's faith has been obscured by mistranslation. God's righteousness is revealed out of Christ's faith, and this evangel is for our faith. This is the basis of all blessings. Even if we have believed this, we may have missed it in some important passages which bring it out.

We are not alone in testifying to the faithful, wise, powerful and righteous operation of God in bringing all to Himself in reconciliation and love—testifying as well that He is doing this through the faith and obedience of His beloved Son, even unto the death of the cross—and giving special testimony to God's glorious purpose for us as members of the body of Christ. Yet I feel it is well that in God's grace this little effort of magazine and translation of God's Word may continue. To God be the glory. D.H.H.

THE FIRST EPHESIAN PRAYER

> "Therefore, I also, on hearing of this faith of yours [which relates to you] in the Lord Jesus, and that for all the saints, do not cease giving thanks for you, making mention in my prayers that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may be giving you a spirit of wisdom and revelation in the realization of Him . . ." (Eph.1:15-17)

THE SPIRIT OF WISDOM

The two prayers in this epistle (cf 3:14-21) are like the two wings of an eagle which soars into the empyrean, bearing us aloft on its pinions. We do not know what it is proper to pray for (Rom.8:26). Here we have God's Spirit inditing a petition. It is the unceasing prayer of Paul and, at the same time, God's expressed desire on our behalf. It is a pattern prayer. How pleased would He be if we follow the spirit of these petitions! Let us note carefully his first request. It is for a spirit—a wise spirit, a revealing spirit. Nothing is more needed by His saints today. But how few even realize their lack!

This is not a prayer for the holy spirit. The title of those addressed to this letter and to the allotment it conveys was the spirit by which they had been already sealed. They had God's spirit in measure, just as we have it. The capacity it gave them was not unlimited, as it was with our Lord. This prayer is an appeal that its limits might be enlarged in the direction of wisdom. God's spirit alone can give capacity to enter into divine affairs. God's wisdom, as displayed in the grace glorious, would be concealed from them apart from this spirit. Such amazing, multifarious wisdom needs an especial enduement, an overflowing measure, an enlarged capacity, to entertain it.

THE SPIRIT OF REVELATION

The apostle has been imparting a secret to them which not only displays God's wisdom, but is so novel, so different, so far above the reach of mortal mentality, that their spirits not only need enlargement, but an entirely new apartment must be added, as it were, to house it properly. He prays for a spirit to accommodate the new disclosure, the new revelation. This request would be quite superfluous if those to whom he is writing had received the "mystery" while he was among them in person. He had declared the whole counsel of God to the Ephesians (Acts 20:27), but the purpose he now unfolds could not be publicly revealed during the period of his itinerant ministry.

It is our highest duty and privilege to pray this prayer. Long years ago the writer urged the believers to make this their special petition, not only for themselves, but for all saints, and particularly for himself. Since then his insight into the prayer itself has been revolutionized. He has been delivered from the tyranny of unspiritual translations. He has discovered its intimate relation to the preceding unfoldings. He has found its harmonious concord with the remaining revelations of the "mystery" in this epistle. We cannot expect such high and hidden unfoldings to blaze upon us and blind us in a moment. Let us covet this revealing spirit, so that we may gradually discern that supreme secret wisdom, which the "mystery" alone reveals.

THE EYES OF THE HEART

". . . the eyes of your heart having been enlightened, for you to perceive what is the expectation of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of the enjoyment of His allotment among the saints . . ."

(Eph.1:18)

The spirit of wisdom and revelation is desired for a specific object, the special realization of the celestial faith which is now ours in the Lord Jesus (Eph.1:15). Nor is it a mere matter of mental speculation, a philosophical tidbit for wise savants, which does not affect the practical affairs of life. It is not perceived by merely mental processes or grasped by minds of more than normal brilliancy. It is for those whose hearts have eyes, the core of whose being can photograph the ultra rays of God's revelation. The eyes of the head are limited to the spectrum. The eyes of the heart have a much wider range.

THE EXPECTATION OF GOD'S CALLING

We must remember that, at the time this was written, the destiny of believers among the nations was not at all clear. Before Paul's epistles were penned, the nations had no expectation, except as subordinates of Israel in the Kingdom on the earth. Paul brings in the truth of the Lord's presence in the air and teaches a sudden change in resurrection. Still there is no definite destiny. The prospect before them is veiled and vague. Are they to come back to earth? If not, what is their expectation? Now it is revealed that our lot is cast with Christ in His headship of the universe. Our blessings are spiritual, among the celestial hosts.

ITS GLORIOUS RICHES

This allotment or "inheritance" is supernal. High as the heavens above the earth are our blessings above the most magnificent mundane display of wealth or glory. We are denied equal participation with the Circumcision in the coming eons on the earth. They must be first down here below. The nations of that time must be inferior in place and portion. To have a similar position among the celestials would place us above the highest of the Circumcision in the Kingdom, for the meanest saint in the celestial allotment will be superior to the highest on the earth. But we are not subordinate in the heavens! We are below neither the Circumcision nor the celestials themselves. We are superior to the heavenly hosts and of equal rank with the few of the Circumcision who are members of Christ's body.

It is intensely human to desire property and position. Men literally spend their lives in pursuit of them. And then, when they are within our grasp, they afford but little real satisfaction, for they cannot shield us from corruption and death. In the coming eons, the actual wealth of mankind will be much greater than now, for they will be able to enjoy their riches and maintain their rank. In this evil eon, men hurt their health to win their wealth, and then they can't enjoy it. So they waste their wealth to hunt their health, and often just destroy it. The wisest of men tried all that rank and riches could bring and he summed it all up as a feeding on wind. All is vanity, until One Who is greater and wiser than Solomon takes the helm in the eons of the eons.

Only that is ours which we enjoy. He alone is truly rich whose eager senses claim a generous tribute from the world about him. He may not have a legal right to aught the earth contains, yet revel in its benefits and beauties beyond the power of many a millionaire. In this, the truest sense, we are the wealthiest of God's creatures. All is ours. Our estates are not confined to earth. The universe is spread before us. In Christ, the Owner and Redeemer of all, we have a double title to everything that heart can wish or heaven can provide. As joint enjoyers of the celestial allotment we have entered into an inheritance so vast that we may never fully explore its riches or compute its wealth.

THE TRANSCENDENT GREATNESS OF GOD'S POWER

> ". . . and what the transcendent greatness of His power for us who are believing, in accord with the operation of the might of His strength, which is operative in the Christ, rousing Him from among the dead and seating Him at His right hand among the celestials, up over every sovereignty and authority and power and lordship, and every name that is named, not only in this eon, but also in that which is impending: and subjects all under His feet, and gives Him, as Head over all, to the ecclesia which is His body . . . ." (Eph.1:19-22)

For the Circumcision the might of Messiah is measured by His resurrection and His return in majesty to administer the government of the earth. They also will be raised, and they will rule. So may we measure His might for us. So may we gauge the power which is operating on our behalf. It is not limited to His resurrection. It is not confined to His earthly sovereignty. The transcendent greatness of the power available on our behalf is displayed in the ascension and seating of Christ at God's right hand among the celestials, over every political power in the empyrean. It took Him from beneath the confederated forces of evil, Satan, the high priests, and Rome, from an infamous death, from the curse of God Himself, to the supremest place of power and glory. This is what it can do for us.

Blessed it is to trace the steps of Christ's descent to the cross. Every move He makes has a meaning. Every step He takes has a tongue. Much more delightful and full of significance is His return to the glory. His earthly pilgrimage was the perfection of weakness. It ended in a tomb. His heavenly march is omnipotence perfected. It attains its royal rest at God's right hand. There are three stages to his exaltation. These are His rousing, His ascension, and His rest. Resurrection brought Him back to life among His beloved disciples. Ascension sees Him again in God's presence, whence He had been sent to do His will. Rest seats Him at God's right hand when His work has been accomplished.

On that marvelous resurrection morning He meets Mary in the garden, and says, "Do not touch Me, for not as yet have I ascended to My Father" (John 20:17). Not many days later He invited Thomas to put his hand into His side (John 20:27). It seems evident that He ascended to the Father on the very day He rose, to receive the acclaims of heaven and His reward and rest at God's right hand. This is the clue for us. The forty-days' reappearance was not concerned with His heavenly kingdom but with that on earth. Even His public ascension was related to His return to Olivet rather than His celestial session.

In Acts He is active, not seated. Stephen saw Him, standing at God's right hand (Acts 7:56). In days to come He will be walking among the assemblies in Yahweh's day (Rev. 2:1). The Lambkin will stand in the midst of the throne (Rev.5:6). When He descends, His feet will stand in the mount of Olives. When all His enemies are subdued He takes His rest upon His glorious terrestrial throne. His active career on earth's behalf gives place to tranquil rule.

Power must still be exercised before Messiah sits on the throne of David. Not so in the empyrean. There He is already seated. The work has been accomplished. There is no waiting there for an apostate people. There is no patience with a wicked world. There is no necessity for delay. The superexcess of power has swept Him from the deepest depth of infamy to the highest heights of glory, and He is at rest. Such is the power appropriate to our case, which is available to those whose faith is in Christ Jesus, the glorified celestial suzerain, rather than in Jesus Christ, the rejected sovereign of the earth.

Even as the power needed for our faith (for endurance and patience with joy, Col.1:11) is greater than that of the Circumcision, so also is our relationship to Christ nearer and dearer. They are figured by a bride, we are His body. There can be no closer, no more vital or indissoluble union. The love of a man for his own body has persisted when all other forms have failed. Israel's union with Yahweh goes through many vicissitudes—coldness, rejection, divorce, reunion—but no such history is possible for the body of Christ. A man's fondness for himself is fixed in the very nature of the universe. Such is the illustration used to show our relation to Christ's celestial headship. He is Head over all to the ecclesia which is His body. This is not His headship of the body. It expresses the fact that He will exercise the headship through the body, as a man uses his members to carry out the dictates of his mind. He, with us, will administer the celestial realms.

THE COMPLEMENT OF THE ONE COMPLETING THE ALL IN ALL

". . . the ecclesia which is His body, the complement of the One completing the all in all."
(Eph.1:23)

Since sin has entered, God has put into operation the necessary agencies to cope with it, and, after it has fulfilled its function and completed its course, to remove it from the scene. The story of earth's restoration should be familiar to us all. God chose Abraham and his seed, that through them He may deal with the earth and bring it back to Himself, through Christ. This will suffice for the earth. No such provision was made for the heavens. No celestial family was chosen to reach the rest. No messengers are given this honor. Their primal place is too high for them to fully appreciate God's grace. We, who were last and are first, are alone fitted to dispense the grace glorious.

In this way Christ and His body fill up the last lack in God's great purpose of the eons. We are His complement Who completes the entire universe. No other company of saints is needed to carry God's plans into effect. Israel on earth and the body of Christ in the heavens, with Him as their head, will bring all back to God by their ministrations during the eons of the eons. Thus, in God's wisdom, shall the earth, the plague spot of the universe, supply the alchemy by which He will transform Himself from a Creator into an affectionate Father and His creatures into fond and loving children. We, uncovenanted, unconsidered, scorned by the chosen nation, become the universal complement because we are the supreme achievement of God's grace.

GOD'S OPERATIONS

A. The operation of the might of [God's] strength (Eph.1:19)
  B. The grace given to [Paul] in accord with [God's] powerful operation (Eph.3:7)
    C. The operation in accord with each one's part [in the body of Christ] (Eph.4:16)
    C. The operation which enables [Christ] to subject all to Himself (Phil.3:21)
  B. [Paul] struggling in accord with [God's] operation (Col.1:29)
A. Roused through the faithfulness of the operation of God (Col.2:12)

The "A" declarations speak of God's operation, both mighty and faithful, first in rousing Christ and then the believer from among the dead. The "B" declarations refer to God's operation with regard to Paul's dispensing the evangel and announcing Christ in accord with a secret. The "C" declarations refer to God's operations, involving human beings, first in regard to our part in the body of Christ, and then regarding the enabling of Christ to subject all to Himself.

These are all positive and glorious operations. In 2 Thessalonians 2:11 we hear of God's brief, negative operation of deception sent in response to Satan's operation through the lawless one (2 Thess.2:9) in the closing era of the current eon.

D.H.H.

CHOOSING WHAT IS CHOICE

WHEN Abram and Lot went their separate ways, it is recorded that Lot lifted his eyes and saw the Jordan basin, "so Lot chose for himself, the whole Jordan basin" (Gen. 13:8-11). When Moses's father-in-law advised him to delegate some of his work to others, we read "Moses chose men of ability from all Israel and set them as heads over the people . . ." (Exodus 18:25). When the Lord visited at the home of Mary and Martha, Mary chose "the good part" in sitting at His feet and listening to His word (Luke 10:38-42). When we choose, we choose what is presently choice to us. It is not possible for us to do otherwise, for our choices reflect the true condition of our heart, and manifest our character.

Moral, or volitional, ability must be distinguished from physical ability. No one can prefer anything which is contrary to his preference, any more than he can love what he hates. A man may well lie to others concerning his preferences, but he can never truly choose with his lips what he rejects in his heart.

There are all manner of things we would be able to do, to carry out through the use of our bodily members, if we were only able to choose to do them (in the sense of acting upon them), or at least able to choose something else connected with them which would result in their being accomplished. However, one's possession of a particular preference or ability to make a certain choice can only exist, like everything else, as the result of its own cause, of which it is merely a product.

A sinful will only reflects the much deeper matter of a sinful heart. The relative foolishness (or wisdom) of our preferences reflects the present condition of our heart (cp Prov.4:23b; Matt.15:18,19). Our choices are not things of chance, but the effects of their causes. Our choices are constantly changing, and are changing in many ways, from one moment to the next. With the exception of internal organic functions and certain involuntary or reflex bodily movements, the rest of our actions, great and small, occur voluntarily. That is, they reflect the choices which we have made.

We do many voluntary acts, however, that, in themselves, we have never chosen. Instead, we choose other things with which our deeds are connected and from which they result. Insofar as external acts are concerned, in many cases we do them even though we have not chosen them. We can never do a voluntary act, however, except as the product of a choice, regardless of what our object of choice may actually be. When we "decide to do" things that are undesirable in themselves, our decision is never made in favor of such an object, but in favor of some other thing with which it is connected, something which is desirable to us, or at least slightly preferable to all other things presently in view or under consideration.

Any statement of actual preference is an exhibition of truth. In any certain moment, either we have a given preference (and consequently effect a corresponding choice and action) or we do not. We cannot have a new preference while our old preference still exists. Nor can we make a new choice while we still have an old preference. For the act of choosing is merely the exercise of existing preference. One cannot prefer what is not yet preferable. Yet when it becomes preferable it is preferred and cannot be unpreferred.

CHOOSING CHRIST

The gospel today is nearly always presented as a transaction, as something quite available to any and all who would simply of themselves do some certain thing or things, even if others will not. Much is said of the importance of making "decisions." The idea, however, is simply that in these decisions it is man himself—not the spirit of God—which makes the difference between success and failure at present and, certainly, between happiness and horror for eternity. Indeed, it is insisted that God will do all for one man that He will do for another but that He will not do enough for any man to insure even his present pleasure, wealth or health, much less his eternal life.

It is insisted that when the lost—billions of whom either having never heard of Him or having only nominally done so—finally come into the Saviour's glorious presence, it is then that Christ Himself will command them all forever to leave it and enter into the terrors of everlasting burnings! "Evangelism" is carried on in the man-centered hope that at least a few will be strong enough to meet the divine demands.

Few realize that "No one is recognizing the Son except the Father; neither is anyone recognizing the Father except the Son and he to whom the Son should be intending to unveil Him" (Matt.11:27). Even in His personal ministry to Israel, the Lord plainly said to His numerous disciples, "'There are some of you who are [actually] not believing' . . . . 'No one can be coming to Me if it should not be given him of the Father.' At this, then, many of His disciples came away, dropping behind, and walked no longer with Him. Jesus, then, said to the twelve, 'Not you also are wanting to go away!' Simon Peter answered Him, 'Lord, to whom shall we come away? Declarations of life eonian hast Thou! And we believe and know that Thou art the Holy One of God.' Jesus answered and said to them, Do not I choose you, the twelve . . . ?' " (John 6:64-70). Indeed, "Not you choose Me, but I choose you" (John 15:16a).

Yet again, conversely, the Lord said to the throngs, "Wherefore do you not know My speech? Seeing that you cannot hear My word" (John 8:43). This was so "that the word of Isaiah the prophet, which he said, may be being fulfilled" (John 12:38a). Isaiah had prophesied long ago that unbelief would be widespread and that the strong arm of the Lord would not be revealed. "Lord, who believes our tidings? And the arm of the Lord, to whom was it revealed?" (John 12:38b).

Our closed minds must be opened up to understand the scriptures (cf Luke 24:45). Otherwise, we can no more grasp their true significance than a blind man can see the brightest of objects immediately before him. The reason for the unbelief of the Jews was that God had blinded His people: "Therefore they could not believe, seeing that Isaiah said again that He has blinded their eyes and callouses their heart, lest they may be perceiving with their eyes, and should be apprehending with their heart, and may be turning about, and I shall be healing them. These things Isaiah said, seeing that he perceived His glory, and speaks concerning Him" (John 12:40,41).

If we are wise, we too will recognize that "It is the glory of Elohim to conceal a matter" (Prov.25:2a). "For there is not anything hidden, except that it should be manifested, neither did it become concealed, but that it may be coming into manifestation. If anyone has ears to hear, let him hear!" (cf Mark 4:22,23).

Only those who are called and chosen actually choose Christ. How marvelous it is that God has revealed His Son to us: "This is My Son, the Chosen; Him be hearing" (cp Luke 9:35). No one can genuinely choose Christ who does not find Him Choice, or to be preferred above all others. Likewise, anyone to whom Christ is Choice, cannot but choose Him during the time in which He is deemed Choice. For example, when it delights God to unveil (FROM-COVER) His Son in us (cf Gal.1:15,16), and while He continues to do so, we choose Christ and cannot reject Him. For we are no longer blind; we now see Him as He truly is: choice indeed. And we are getting to know Him as well, for God has unveiled Him in us.

Many, however—to whom Christ, in fact, is not choice—out of selfish interests, can only choose to make a profession of Christ. Their faith is only simulated or "feigned" (cp 1 Cor.15:2). Fleshly attempts at self-conviction do not constitute God-given faith. A decision merely to profess Christ, or to make a supposed public "acceptance" of Him, is a very different thing from actually choosing and accepting Christ. No one can "accept" (or "take along," paralambanō) Christ who has not first chosen Him. Yet Christ can never be chosen by those from whom He is veiled. An object must first be perceived before it can be compared and selected from a field.

Furthermore, we cannot tell the unbeliever that if he will only do a certain thing, God will then in return give him faith. All such claims are false. For they represent God as a Rewarder in granting faith, as One Who has obligated Himself to "meet halfway" all who will fulfill His requirements. Since salvation is a matter of grace, it cannot also be a matter of meeting requirements. All genuine faith in Christ is graciously granted to us (Phil.1:29).

Again, no one to whom Christ is not yet choice can choose Christ. And Christ cannot be choice to anyone to whom He has not yet been made choice. When He is made choice He becomes choice and so is choice; or to say the same thing, He is chosen. This first act of the believer in which Christ is consciously chosen, is merely a consequence of his new mental preference which has been graciously granted to him by God.

THE NATURE OF VOLITION

No one can choose what he does not prefer. There is no such thing as an object being choice which has not yet been chosen. A man can no more exercise volition contrary to his understanding and disposition than a tree can bear fruit contrary to its nature: "Either make the tree ideal and its fruit ideal, or make the tree rotten and its fruit rotten, for by its fruit the tree is known" (Matt.12:33). There is no middle ground. "Progeny of vipers! How can you be speaking what is good, being wicked? For out of the superabundance of the heart the mouth is speaking. The good man out of his good treasure is extracting good things; and the wicked man out of his wicked treasure is extracting wicked things" (Matt.12:34,35).

"From their fruits you shall be recognizing them. Not from thorns are they culling grapes, nor from star thistles figs. Thus every good tree ideal fruit is producing, yet the rotten tree noxious fruit is producing. A good tree can not bear noxious fruit, neither is a rotten tree producing ideal fruit" (Matt.7:16-18). "Shall a Cushite transform his skin, or a leopard its spots? Then you yourselves shall be able to do good, who are taught to do evil" (Jer.13:23).

Since there is therefore no hope from within, let us look only to our God and Father, but not, craftily, to ourselves. Our humble prayer, serious and heartfelt, should be that God might be "adapting [us] to every good work to do His will, doing in us what is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to Whom be the glory for the eons of the eons. Amen!" (cp Heb.13:20, 21). It is glorious to know that we are making our requests known to One Who is able. And so, to the One "Who is able to do superexcessively above all that we are requesting or apprehending, according to the power that is operating in us, to Him be the glory in the ecclesia and in Christ Jesus for all the generations of the eon of the eons! Amen!" (Eph.3:20,21). Only thus can our outlook and attitude accord with the truth. May God enable us to say from the heart and with understanding, even as it is written, "He who is boasting, in the Lord let him be boasting" (1 Cor.1:31).

This is not at all to say that our efforts are not essential or that there will be nothing for us to do since it is God Who saves us from our failings. To the contrary, God graciously saves us by causing us to work, "training us that, disowning irreverence and worldly desires, we should be living sanely and justly and devoutly in the current eon" (Titus 2:11,12). But our efforts are merely a product; they are the means through which God saves us. We contribute nothing.

It is not a question of our discipline and volition, but of pride and self-reliance concerning our discipline and volition, of boasting in the flesh instead of glorying in the transforming power of God. As long as we continue to see ourselves, in a final sense, as the key to anything, we will remain proud, antagonistic to "the grace of God in truth" (Col.1:6).

It is one thing to conceive of ourselves, in a dutiful sense and relatively speaking, as "cooperating" with the Lord Jesus, as He leads us into paths of better service. It is quite another, however, proudly to fancy ourselves to be so utterly independent of the Supreme Deity Himself, the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, that even He is at a loss to change our will or walk without our help.

Christ is the Head of the ecclesia, and He is the Saviour of the body (Eph.5:23). He "gives Himself up for its sake that He should be hallowing it, cleansing it in the bath of the water ([that is,] with His declaration) that He should be presenting to Himself a glorious ecclesia, not having spot or wrinkle or any such things, but that it may be holy and flawless" (Eph.5:25-27). He is "nurturing and cherishing" the members of the ecclesia, ". . . for we are members of His body" (Eph.5:30). Though the course is often arduous, slow, and disappointing, nonetheless, the entire ecclesia is growing in the growth of God (Col.2:19). We will be made to stand, for the Lord is able to make us stand (Rom.14:4). And it is by the power of these words of faith, because of their influence upon us, that we are learning to be choosing what is choice.

PAUL THE UNASHAMED

THE only things of which man may speak without a blush or an apology are the things of God. Man may laud his achievements in certain matters. He may prate of noble buildings, mighty symphonies, famous paintings and such like products of human skill and industry, but he can hardly do so without having a lurking sense of the superficial nature of such "glories."

We learn of man's free will in theology, but the doctrine seems to be absent from history, at least in the history that Paul inscribed for us in Romans 1:18-3:20. Here, as far as man is concerned, is a law which clamps iron chains of grim necessity upon the race. Why did not at least one generation arise who by virtue of their "free will" would not yield obedience to sin's command? Why was there not one nation who would as gladly rebel against sin as the race had rebelled against God? Why did not one family arise who with their "free wills" would have broken the monotony of evil's rule over the race? And if individuals had done so why were not these exceptions to the rule noted by Paul when he penned this indictment of man? How obvious it is that Romans gives the history of a race enslaved. A race whose slavery was not enforced from without, but an internal slavery, moral and mental, a slavery to self in its finiteness and separateness from God. It does not look as if there was much "free will" to spare in the race whose deeds are recorded by Paul.

How much we should thank our blessed God for showing us the meaning of grace! A grace we had nothing to do with but to accept and then only and when that same grace gave us the will and the power to receive it. The whole alphabet of salvation by grace is an alphabet without a capital I.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOOD

BEFORE they sinned, Adam and Eve had no knowledge of good. Good lay all about them, unmixed with evil. Health, strength, honor, and companionship with one another and with God was their constant possession and privilege. Yet they knew nothing of the blessedness of these boons. This we learn from the name given to the tree which bore the forbidden fruit. To many minds it suggests only the knowledge of evil, rather than good. Yet, first and foremost, it was the tree of the knowledge of good (Gen.2:9; 3:4-14).

Thus at the very forefront of revelation we have the principle suggested which is the key to unlock the great problems that most perplex us. It is this: Our knowledge is relative; it is based on contrast. The knowledge of good is dependent upon the knowledge of evil. Hence the tree in the garden was not, as we usually think of it, merely the means of knowing evil, it was the means, primarily, of the knowledge of good. Adam and Eve had good but did not realize it because they had had no experience of evil.

The perfection of Eden's garden was greatly lacking in the one element most dear to God's heart. Adam did not and could not apprehend God's goodness. There is not the slightest hint of Adam's appreciation or thanks, or worship or adoration. He received all as a matter of course and was quite incapable of discerning or responding even to that measure of divine love which lies on the surface of His goodness. If we should suddenly be transformed into glorious sinless beings and transported to such scenes of sylvan perfection, we would exult and praise the author of our bliss. Not so Adam. He knew no joy, for he knew no misery. He knew no good, for he knew no evil.

This point is most important, and we press it because it seems to be universally ignored and misrepresented. The garden of Eden has become a symbol of perfect bliss. We are always being reminded of its delights, and the happiness of the first pair has passed into a proverb. Yet there is not the slightest reason to suppose that Adam was delighted or enjoyed the bliss ascribed to him.

The mere possession of good does not give a knowledge or realization of it. Even today, when there is so much evil to contrast with the good, many do not appreciate their blessings until they lose them. Adam had perfect health, but what was that to one who never had even heard of disease? He had abundant food, but that was nothing to him, who had never felt a famine. Even pleasure had no appeal to one who had known no pain.

The fatal lack in all the perfection of Eden was the utter absence of any note of praise or thankfulness. Knowing no good, and utterly unacquainted with mercy or grace, Adam's heart was absolutely incapable of love or adoration or worship. God's goodness did not receive the least response, because it was unknown. All that He had bestowed on Adam failed to kindle the affection for which He longed, and which is the goal of all His gifts.

How could this grave defect be remedied? There was but one way, and that way was, in the wisdom of God, provided by the tree which He placed in the midst of the garden. Had Adam and Eve known good they would have treasured God's goodness and never would have forfeited it by disobeying His command. Yet, when they did eat of the tree, they set in motion the very forces which would remedy the defect which caused them to do it. What divine wisdom do we see here displayed! God's blessings being unappreciated, they offend Him by their deed and in so doing pave the way for an appreciation which satisfies both. Love is a marvelous schemer!

Shall we pause here to insist that this primal sin is the archetype of all succeeding acts of sin? We may not realize it now, but there can be no doubt on the part of those who have a mature knowledge of God that sin is now, as then, the fruit of the ignorance of good and evil and the lack of appreciation of God's gifts. Moreover, now, as then, sin itself, in the wisdom of God, sets in operation the very forces which lead to a knowledge of good and evil and the appreciation of God and His love.

Light, then, is nothing, were it not for darkness. Love is lost but for hate. Strength is unknown where there is no weakness. Wisdom leans on folly for its display.

Where is the glory of the stars at midday? Their light is not dimmed, but they have no darkness to reveal their splendor. And we would not appreciate even the sun were it not for clouds, and its daily disappearance. All things are known by contrast. Creature knowledge is not absolute, but relative.

God did not plant two trees, one for the knowledge of good and another for the knowledge of evil. In the nature of things these are dependent on one another, and neither can be known without the other. Let us bow to the divine wisdom which planted one tree, so that it was impossible to know good apart from the knowledge of evil.

Having in mind God's great purpose to fully engage the affection of all His creatures, it is evident that the prime ingredient of their response to His love is a knowledge of Him. The process of revealing God is the problem of the eons. If God should be always seeking to reveal Himself He would never succeed in His purpose. Indeed, if infinity were needed to make Him known, then His creatures would always be infinitely short of such knowledge. God never speaks to us in terms of infinity, for we cannot understand it. He has provided a definite period for self-revelation, called the eonian times. When these are past, the process is complete, God is All in all, and all the factors (such as sin and evil) which are no longer needed, are discarded.

The great purpose of God during the eons is to provide a background for the display of His love. What would be the simplest plan to produce this? Shorn of details, all that is needed is that each of His creatures should have, according to his capacity, such an experience of evil and its fruits as will enable him to appreciate the good which God will provide after the eons are past.

Thus we have established the necessity and utility of evil in God's universe for the period of the eons. We will now consider the details of the divine operations in connection with the sinner. The groundwork of the plan is very simple. The sinner experiences evil that he may know good. He knows good that he may love God, the giver of good. The result is intensified by making the evil, not only calamities and misfortunes over which mankind has no control, but by making evil the result of the sinner's sins, and by hedging him in with law, leading to transgression, and by giving sin a quality which offends the feelings of God.

No one can, or will, object that God should be good to His creatures after the consummation—the real beginning of the perfected universe. But that goodness would all be lost on creatures who know no evil. Hence no one will question the justice of any plan for making that goodness effective by filling their hearts with gratitude to God, and in satisfying His heart by their response. So that God is just—far more than just—in sending each one of His creatures into a world of sin and sorrow, grief and pain, and in using any means which impresses upon them the lesson taught to our first parents in the garden. We must digest the knowledge of evil ere we can enjoy the knowledge of good.

The process through which God is putting mankind, in preparation for their place in the consummation, is very complex. We can best understand it by grasping first the grand outlines and leaving the dimmer details for later contemplation.

We have said that all that would be absolutely necessary for the realization of God's purpose would be the introduction of each of God's creatures into the sphere of unmixed evil for a limited time, away from God. Yet practical experience teaches us that such a method would demand a very long period and produce comparatively meager results. It lacks that great force which is the prime factor in the acquisition of all knowledge. Evil alone lacks contrast. It must be seen in the light of good. Wrong must be viewed in the presence of right. Hence the eonian existence of every man is divided into three stages characterized by destruction, judgment, and salvation. He glimpses evil in the world by the feeble flicker of conscience or human justice until it involves him in death. In resurrection he sees evil in the light of God's justice. In the consummation, he contrasts it with God's salvation. These three grades completely equip each one for the enjoyment of God's goodness and love.

It is necessary to pause at this point to vindicate God's justice in His dealings with those who are not saved until the consummation. If all mankind should die in sin and should stand before the great white throne to be judged and none saved until the consummation, the righteousness of God's way with them could readily be justified, on the grounds already set forth. The very nature of endless bliss is such that those can quaff the cup of bliss most deeply who have drained the dregs of evil. Sin is an essential precursor and preparation for endless happiness.

But strong objection has been raised to the length and intensity of suffering as unwarranted and severe. This may be met in two ways. The difficulty depends upon an exaggerated, unscriptural impression of the length and terrors of judgment and a failure to see it in its proper proportion to the bliss to which it leads.

The happiness into which the eons usher mankind will be endless. Hence, in the light of eternity, no period of suffering, whatever its limits, can be deemed excessive. Indeed, it is not at all probable that the average sinner will suffer for one hundred years, including his life on earth and the judgment period. So that even such a period, which we may practically reduce to zero in comparison with infinity, may be seen, rather than being excessive, to be absurdly short in comparison with the boundlessness of bliss.

In this degenerate age we connect all value with money. If an investment of a dollar should produce a million dollars, no one would say the initial sum was excessive. Everyone would gladly pay it, even if the outcome were not absolutely assured. No one would question the right of it even if the dollar were lost. The right amount to receive for a dollar is about six cents a year, according to human standards. All above that is more than right.

We must acknowledge, then, that God is transcendently just in His dealings with all His creatures, and that He would be warranted in making their term of suffering much longer without impairing His justice.

The severity of suffering is so varied that it is not wise to say much concerning it at this point. It belongs, rather, to the discussion of the degrees of judgment, and the varied glories of the elect. Yet we must not overlook a merciful provision which tempers the severity of sin. Evil makes men callous and obdurate. If they had the supremely sensitive nature which will be theirs in vivification for the enjoyment of good, the slightest touch of evil would make them shudder. Their loathing of sin would be unbearable. Now they almost enjoy, in a way, the bitter burden that they bear.

Were God to let mankind live in sin until they learn its lessons, it would take a long and weary life, and might never reach the desired result. Hence He also introduced the death state, lest Adam and his descendants should live on in the accumulating effects of sin. They would become old and decrepit, weak and blind, driveling and idiotic, and live on, a living corpse of corruption. Imagine what a sickening world this would be if all our progenitors still lived with all their constantly accumulating senility and disease! Can we not see the marvelous wisdom that provided that evil should make men mortal? Evil that results in death is sufficient to teach the lesson. Death is not only the result of sin. It is the intermission between one lesson and the next. It is the divine method of impressing upon the sinner the sinfulness of sin, and is the necessary prelude to the resurrection, which introduces the sinner into an actual experience of God's power and justice.

The judging of the sinner at the great white throne deals with the evil with which he is acquainted in a twofold way. By contrast with the right, its true nature becomes apparent. By a just infliction, the evil itself will be counteracted. No one should confound judging with "punishment," in its usual acceptation. Men "punish" in the crudest fashion, with the single thought of discouraging a future repetition of the act. A child is "punished" for poor lessons at school by being kept in at recess, when fresh air and exercise are the very correctives which may be needed. We must not charge God with such silliness.

God's judgments, as are manifest from those that have already taken place, impose penalties which rectify the cause underlying the offense. Thus, Adam's offense was the result of his lack of appreciation of God's gifts. Flowers, fruit, and food fell into his hands without effort. Hence he is doomed to toil and discouragement in tilling the ground, so that he may be duly thankful for God's sustaining love. This principle is always present in divine judging. It is, in fact, inherent in the very term, for judging is that which rights the wrong.

If this were not so, it would be difficult to account for God's motive in such a tremendous exhibition of power as is involved in the resurrection of the dead, and such a marvelous display of judicial force, in assigning their sentence. In each decision the sinner will gain such a knowledge of evil, by contrast with its corrective, as would be impossible in any other way. The judging of his own sins and that of all the rest will be the school in which his knowledge of evil will immensely increase.

The final consummation of the knowledge of evil is always found in bringing it into close contact with the supremest form of good. The salvation of mankind at the consummation is the final lesson in good and evil. The lessons of the latter which have been learned by experience are now enforced by the realization of a good for which their sufferings have prepared them. The God Who had been their Creator and Judge now becomes their Saviour. They are ready to enjoy His love and give Him the response, which is the basis of eternal bliss. In this light we can see how God is just in dealing thus with His creatures, and His creatures are justified, eventually, as regards their sin.

SALVATION

Thus far we have kept to the most elementary principles in outlining God's dealings with mankind. The subject of salvation has hardly been touched, especially the subject of eonian salvation, for the unbeliever has no salvation during the eons. His does not come until their close. Before taking up eonian ("everlasting" or "eternal") salvation, it will be necessary to inquire a little into the nature of the salvation of the unbeliever.

Our first inclination, when we learn of God's grand purpose to save all mankind (1 Tim.2:4), is to substitute their sufferings for those of Christ. We have been told that He bore our punishment, and we surmise that they are judged for their own sin, hence need no saviour.

But this is far from the truth. Judging may correct the sinner, but it does not give him the power to undo his sins toward other men or toward God. The murderer may be taught the utmost horror of his crime, but he cannot restore the life he took. The blasphemer may have learned to abhor his sin, yet no amount of suffering on his part will efface his offense. If judging made it possible for all men to right their wrongs then it would not be followed by, or rather, end in, the second death. Mankind fully learns the lesson of evil, yet in learning, finds itself the helpless victim of death. Indeed, this is the climax of evil. This shows the exceeding sinfulness of sin. The sinner, though raised from the dead, finds that he is unfit to live, on the ground of justice, and enters the second death.

Here is where the need for a Saviour arises. He needs to be One Who can do far more than bear the penalty of sin. If He had simply become a "substitute" for men and had taken their sins upon Him, then He must not only die, but, like the denizens of the second death, there could be no return to life except through another Saviour. Christ is no mere "substitute" to bear the "punishment" in "the room and stead" of the sinner. He died for, or on behalf of the sinner. He turns his sins into acts of righteousness. This is justification. He recalls the murderer's victim to life, restores what the thief has stolen, and harvests good from the evil that condemns them.

Thus far we have confined ourselves to the contrast between good and evil, and the basic principle that both are necessary to the knowledge of either. The same principle of contrast is used over and over again in the complex process which prevails during the eonian times. As, in nature, power and passivity qualify the one universal substance so as to produce the infinite variety which we see in the world, so good and evil are used in endless combinations and contrasts to bring out the vast variety of God's wisdom and the limitless resources of His love.

All of the eons are characterized by the presence of evil, which was not ere they began and will not be once they end. Yet the eons themselves are divided into two classes, some of which are evil, while others are comparatively good. The next eon, in which the millennium occurs, holds evil in check, and the succeeding one, the last eon, segregates and banishes it. In contrast with these, the present eon and the one before the flood are evil eons. The secret of the difference is not far to find. In the former, Christ is absent, or, when present, is crucified. In the latter He is on the throne and evil is suppressed.

The question arises, how can God be absolutely impartial in His dealings with mankind when one person finds himself in Sodom and another has the privilege of hearing the Lord Himself? The answer to this lies in the equity which will characterize God's judgment throne. It will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for the cities visited by our Lord during His earthly ministry. Judgment will be tempered by consideration of opportunity and circumstance (Matt.10:15).

The gravest problem, to some, is the fact that God, in His mercy and grace, selects some for eonian salvation, so that they do not enter the judgment at all. Is it just of Him to favor them and pass by others no more undeserving? Why should some sorry sot secure salvation and eonian glory when a pure and pious philanthropist (Christ unknown) passes on to judgment?

Even from the human side the justice of it is apparent. Shortsighted though we are, we must not let this contrast destroy the conclusion already established that, first of all, the philanthropist is not to be the subject of any injustice.

In the judging he will get his due deserts, and in such a fashion that he himself will acquiesce and acknowledge their equity. More than this, in the consummation he will be unutterably thankful, in his measure, for the judging of his pious sins. He will have no charge to bring against God in that day. Then why should we, with a beam in both our eyes, seek to remove a seeming speck in God's?

God is not satisfied, nor is it sufficient for His purpose to reveal the excessive depths of His love, to save all men at the consummation. The contrast is not great enough. The distinction is not sharp enough. Such a course would leave depths unexplored, recesses unrevealed. So He proposes to compare the good with the best. The righteousness of such a course is manifested by our Lord in His parable of the laborers in the vineyard. Right demands the payment of a just equivalent. Yet this does not debar God from giving freely when He chooses (Matt.20:1-16).

God will be more than just to all. It is only the lurking impression that He is not just to unbelievers, the non-elect, which suggests that there is an element of partiality in His favor for the few. God, having provided for a full accounting with all His creatures, which is good, proposes to display the riches of His love, which is better, as well as the exceeding riches of His affection, which is best. In fact, it is this last which has been His aim in all the rest, only it takes a pyramid of love to rear its highest pinnacle.

First of all, by what process does God save men now? Is it not, in essence, the very same process as that which will save the unbeliever in the future? They are brought into the presence of the great white throne and learn God's judgment on their sins. We are brought into His presence at Golgotha and learn the same lesson through Him Who suffered there. No scene in all the universe of time or space will ever expose the hideousness of sin as does the cross of Christ. Even the great white throne with its exposure of the sins of myriads of mankind, will not equal it. We know what sin is, not merely by our own sad experience, but by the place it gave Him. He was the Highest of heaven. It made Him the lowest of earth. He was the life and the light of all. It put Him into the darkness of death. That pole on which He was nailed is the real tree where we may gain the knowledge of good and evil. Knowing that, what need is there for us to enter into judgment?

But the cross reveals far more than the judgment. The evil is eclipsed by the good. The vivid and appalling contrasts between the limitless love of God and the wretched wickedness of man makes it both the judgment and the consummation for all who gaze upon it. He is our Judge and our Saviour all at once, and we enter into a foretaste of the bliss which will finally embrace all of God's creatures.

In God's administrational dealings we see the vast value of contrast, in order to pile up a pyramid to give expression to His grace. God did not call all nations, but chose one as the special object of His favor. With this as a background He turns to the despised aliens when His chosen people apostatize. By showing the highest honors to those who deserve the least, He has at last succeeded in producing an object lesson through which, not only mankind, but the celestial spheres as well, may learn and luxuriate in the lavishness of His love.

God Himself planted the tree of the knowledge of good and evil in the midst of the garden of Eden. As both were combined in a single tree, it was impossible for Adam to know good, apart from evil. The contrast between the two is the only means the creature has for the realization of God's goodness and the appreciation of His love. For this cause evil and sin have invaded the universe temporarily. Their presence is appalling, but their stay is brief, and their ultimate effect, not only the knowledge of good, but the enjoyment and adoration of the God of all good.

GOD'S EVANGEL FOR OUR FAITH

WE have seen that Romans 5:8, 8:3 and 8:32 express God's evangel concerning His Son explicitly:

ˊGod is commending ˊthis love of *sf*__His *io*__to us,
Seeing that, while we ˡare still sinners,
Christ dies *ov*__for our sakes . . . .
3 For ˊwhat is impossible to the law, in which it was ˡinfirm through the flesh—
ˊGod, ˉsending His *sf*__own ˊSon
in the likeness of sin's flesh
And concerning sin,
He condemns ˊsin in the flesh . . . .
32 Surely He Who spares° not His own ˊSon, but gives Him up *ov*__for us all, how shall He not, together with Him, also be graciously° granting us ˊall?

It is God's evangel that He loves us and commends this love by means of Christ's death for the sake of sinners, God sending His own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh, and sending Him as the Antitype of the sin offering, thus putting sin under condemnation. In view of this astounding love, that of sparing not His own Son but giving Him up for us all, how shall God, together with His Son, not be gracing us with all that is good, even including righteousness and glorification (cf 8:28,30)?

GOD PROMISES BEFORE

God promises this evangel before Paul had been severed from Judaism and from the apostles in Jerusalem for its proclamation and defense. This evangel is not severed from the holy scriptures entrusted to Israel as their foremost prerogative (Rom.3:1,2). It is traceable in them, although Paul, as his apostleship advances, unfolds the evangel of the untraceable riches of Christ (Eph.3:8).

This is the first point Paul makes in Romans concerning that evangel of God for which he is severed. However, the CV sets it apart in parenthesis so that we may jump ahead to the words, "concerning His Son," which are of utmost importance. Yet in seeing that God's evangel concerns His Son it follows that those passages where it is promised before concern God's Son.

SEED OF DAVID AND SON OF GOD

Most of verse 3 and all of verse 4 are in the form of Hebrew poetry, not matched in length and rhythm, but with thought parallels. Here in verse 3, the prophecy of Yahweh through Nathan concerning Solomon found in 2 Samuel 7:12 is noted. The words "I will raise up your seed after you, . . . and will establish the throne of his kingdom," are seen to apply to God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. He comes in the humility of human flesh, God sending Him in the likeness of sin's flesh (Rom.8:3; Phil.3:8), yet He shall reign. This shall occur only after His emptying of Himself and coming in sinful flesh. Here God's evangel as the message of Christ's suffering in death is confined to the word "flesh," and His exaltation is given prominence. But Paul does not dwell on this matter of future rule in Romans as he does in 1 Corinthians 15:25-28, showing its expansion beyond King of Israel to all being subject to the Saviour as their Lord, and even further in Ephesians 1:10 concerning the complement of the eras when all will be headed up in the Christ—"both that in the heavens and that on the earth." What is made clear here in Romans 1:3 is that all the process of reigning and its glorious goal of God becoming All in all, are dependent on His coming as the Seed of a very human king, good in heart but sinful in flesh. This speaks of Christ's humiliation prior to His exaltation.

Then in verse 4 where no explicit prophecy is cited, Paul speaks of Jesus Christ our Lord as He shall be designated (even proven to be) God's Son by His work of resurrecting the dead ones. This operation is clearly expounded in 1 Corinthians 15, especially in verses 20-24 with further details beyond. It is in the vivification of all in Him (1 Cor.15:22) that Christ Jesus, our Lord is designated without doubt and with full recognition to be God's Son. This indeed will take not simply spirit, but "holiness of spirit," spirit that most fully reflects God Who is spirit.

These two verses speak of God's evangel concerning His Son as it speaks of future results. But they are based solidly on the evangel of God's operations of salvation and of Christ's faith and obedience to which Paul now directs our attention.

OBEDIENCE OF FAITH

Paul and those apostles associated with him obtain grace and apostleship "for obedience of faith among all the nations." This is the object of their apostleship. Literally it is for UNDER-HEARing of faith, submissive listening of faith. This corresponds with Romans 6:17 ". . . you UNDER-HEAR from the heart the type of teaching to which you are given over," which in turn corresponds with "you are not under law, but under grace" (Rom.6:14). What Paul is dispensing is God's message of a very particular type—an evangel (WELL-MESSAGE) of gratuitous grace for our submissive hearing of faith.

The wording Paul uses here is in significant contrast to the words of Moses to Israel at Sinai: "Now this is the instruction . . . . You will hear . . . and you will observe to do it" (Deut.6:1-3). There, what is heard, is instruction which is to be carried out by Israel's doing. Now what is heard is God's evangel of grace which is something quite different from the law given at Sinai. There it was instruction for human doing. Now it is God's doing through His Son which in His grace and by His spirit He writes on the heart (2 Cor.3:3) in accord with His will and purpose. Our doing is one of believing this evangel and the enslavement of our minds to this message of power, righteousness and love which Paul calls "God's law" (Rom.7:25), that law which God Himself follows in the sending of His Son.

OUR FAITH

In Romans 1:8-12 Paul thanks God for the faith of the believers in Rome and its consoling effects, both their faith and his. This faith was being announced in the whole world, and still today it is being announced and heard, although much encrusted by tradition and human philosophy in our translations and heralding. Yet God makes at least the core of His evangel shine in the hearts of those He has chosen. The faith here is the message the believers in Rome were believing which still needed further sharing of spiritual grace from Paul for them to be established. It is given to Paul not only to announce the death, entombment and resurrection of Christ (1 Cor.15:1-4) but to make known this evangel's ever-increasing spiritual grace for mutual consolation, and thus for ourselves as well.

THE EVANGEL

We come, then, to the evangel which is called "God's evangel." There is much that is different, or at least goes beyond what had been revealed, and which will leave certain matters behind during the current era. Nevertheless, at its core, it was promised before in the holy scriptures. Where they concern Jesus Christ, they very often speak as Paul speaks here of Him. He shall reign and resurrect the dead with great power of spirit. Yet first He must come in the weakness of human flesh.

Humbling before exaltation—weakness before power—that is God's law! That is the pattern of God's evangel. Yet Paul is not ashamed of it and eagerly evangelizes it (Rom.1:14,15). And in verses 16 and 7 he tells us why.

16 For not [l]ashamed[°] am I of the evangel:
For it [l]is God's power [io]for salvation to everyone [·]who is believing it—to the Jew first, and to the Greek as well.
17 For in it God's righteousness is being revealed[°]
out of faith, [io]for faith,
according as it is [°]written[°]:
[y]Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living[°].
18 For God's indignation is being revealed[°] from heaven on [e]all the irreverence and unrighteousness of human beings. . . 23 for all sin and are wanting[°] of the glory of [·]God.[1]

Here, in two positive declarations, in contrast to one (long) negative Paul sets forth God's evangel for which he is severed and concerning which he is not ashamed. It is the same message as we hear in Romans 5:8; 8:3 and 8:32, telling us what God does through His Son, the Righteous One, for our sake. It is a message which is itself God's power for salvation for us who are believing it—but not caused by our believing it (it is God's power because of Christ's dying for us—the cause is Christ's faith).

In this message God's righteousness is revealed—righteousness that is His and always has been His and always will be His, but which is not revealed until God sends His Son in the likeness of sin's flesh to bring sin into condemnation. Thus we can see that God, all along, through the wicked eons is working out a purpose that involves evil so that His goodness of righteousness and love shall be known. All human beings sin. Christ Jesus dies. God's righteousness is revealed.

1. Romans 3:23 is attached here to Romans 1:18 as the summation of 1:18-3:20.

SALVATION AND RIGHTEOUSNESS

The first two reasons Paul gives for not being ashamed of the evangel are that it is a message of God's power for salvation for those who are believing it, and that God's righteousness is being revealed in it. This salvation and this righteousness are sourced in (they come "out of") the faith of the Righteous One, Who is God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. The salvation is directed to everyone who is believing this evangel which concerns this Righteous One, Jesus Christ, our Lord. (In 3:21,22, after all are brought before us in 1:18-3:20, Paul makes known that this is directed toward all.)

APPRECIATION OF GOD'S RIGHTEOUSNESS

The fact that God's own, personal righteousness is made known in the evangel should help open up its glories to us and strengthen our appreciation for it. The insight into God's righteousness which the evangel provides is a guard against much wrong thinking about salvation.

The idea, often vaguely felt, and sometimes clearly expressed, that salvation is a matter of God's grace but not of His justice (which is His righteousness) is mistaken. God's grace harmonizes fully with His righteousness. In fact, because of the nature of His righteousness God's grace would not be exercised apart from a sure and righteous foundation. If the death of Christ on the cross does not provide an actual, righteous basis for salvation, then it accomplishes no more than the sacrifices of sheep and goats. Christ is the Antitype of the propitiatory shelter (Rom.3:25) and of the sin offering (2 Cor.5:21) and of the approach present (Eph.2:8; cf 5:2). The types could only be a shadow of the operation of God which really brings an end to sin and offense, enmity and infirmity and death. God's righteousness in dealing fully and finally with sin is now revealed.

Salvation is all of God, entirely based on His giving of His Son. It is His power at work. But also in God's powerful work of salvation we see God's very own attribute of righteousness at work. The joy and peace of the believer grasps this revelation of God with tight hold.

PSALM 98

As he often does in his epistles, Paul employs the language of the Hebrew Scriptures here as he introduces the theme of righteousness. In this case he particularly borrows from Psalm 98 which anticipates the marvelous works of the kingdom and the praise of Yahweh the King. The psalm speaks of a "new song" (Psa.98:1) which is one of good news, and Paul speaks of the evangel of God (Rom.1:16):

Sing to Yahweh a new song,
For He has done marvelous works;
His right hand and His holy arm have brought His salvation.

For not ashamed am I of the evangel,
For it is God's power for salvation . . . .

But Paul is speaking of the message of Christ's death for sinners, not of Israel's deliverance from their enemies and from the evil they represented. God's salvation of Israel was limited in extent. Yet indeed it was given with that absolute salvation which is announced in the evangel in view. Every divine operation of salvation is based on the truth of the faithful and welcome message that Christ Jesus comes into the world to save sinners (1 Tim.1:15). None of the promises of future glory concerning Israel, and reaching to the nations of the earth as well, can be fulfilled apart from the cross of Christ. That is the real basis of all God's works of salvation and of the revelation of God's righteousness in His works of salvation. Apart from God's giving up of His Son for us all, there is no real and lasting salvation, and no possibility of a full revelation of divine righteousness.

Hence certain key words of Psalm 98:2 appear in Romans 1:17 in a wider and deeper context:

Yahweh has made known His salvation;
To the eyes of the nations
He has revealed His righteousness.
For in [the evangel]
God's righteousness is being revealed . . . .

How is it that God's work of the salvation of Israel, by His powerful arm, revealed His righteousness to the nations? God's righteousness was seen in His dealings with the idolatry and wickedness of the nations. Yet the psalm does not focus on the defeat of the enemy but on Israel's salvation from the enemy's influence of idolatry and wickedness. God's righteousness was not seen so much in paying back the enemy for its wickedness as in ridding Israel of that wickedness. In effect, the wickedness was taken away. Hence what the nations learned was that God's righteousness demanded the removal of evil. Irreverence and unrighteousness would not be tolerated.

To be sure, these displays of God's righteousness in His acts of deliverance of Israel from idolatry and its wicked associations, were impermanent and incomplete. In relation to the general situation of humanity when, in His patience and forbearance God does not execute His judgments on human unrighteousness, these works of temporary salvation gave a glimpse of divine righteousness to the world. But it was not the full orbed revelation that the evangel of God provides.

In addition of course, Israel itself was sinful, continually falling into idolatry and participating in corrupt practices. The salvation given them internally and externally was neither perfect nor permanent, and consequently the revelation of divine righteousness was limited.

But that is not the case with God's work of salvation through the faithful obedience of Jesus Christ. This work deals with all unrighteousness and does so to a finality, as the writer to the Hebrews expresses it (cf Heb.10:1-14). When Christ dies, all die (2 Cor.5:14), for all is created in Him, through Him and for Him (Col.1:16). So also God delights, in His love and righteousness, through the blood of the cross to reconcile all to Himself (Col.1:19,20).

INDIGNATION AND UNRIGHTEOUSNESS

The third reason Paul gives for not being ashamed of the evangel is that, apart from its revelation, there is no salvation. Human beings are unrighteous and God is indignant (Rom.1:18). Human beings are irreverent and deserving of death (Rom.1:32). They cannot escape God's righteous judgment (Rom.2:3,5). This includes those of the nations and the Jew as well (Rom.3:4). Not one is righteous—not even one (Rom.3:10). In view of God's indignation and His righteous judgment no flesh at all shall be justified (Rom.3:20). All sin and are wanting of the glory of God (Rom.3:23).

This is attested through the law and the prophets, even as God's evangel is promised and attested there (Rom.1:2; 3:21). But this is not God's evangel for which Paul is severed and which concerns God's Son and is a message of God's salvation, revealing God's righteousness.

God's indignation is not His power for salvation of human beings who are unrighteous, everyone of whom sins. That is a fact which goes far in explaining whyPaul is not ashamed of the evangel. But it is in third place. His lack of shame is first of all what it is (it is God's power for salvation) and what it reveals (it reveals God's righteousness).

GOD'S RIGHTEOUSNESS MANIFESTED AND DISPLAYED

With Romans 3:21 Paul returns to God's evangel itself as introduced in 1:16,17. It manifests God's righteousness, which, according to Romans 3:26 is displayed by God being the righteous Justifier (Righteous-ifier) of the human (the irreverent one, Rom.4:5) the source of which being Jesus's faith. It is out of faith into faith. The route which the revelation, the manifestation, the display of God's righteousness takes is out of Christ's faith in dying for us and then coming into our faith. Yet in view of Romans 1:18-3:20 salvation, is now seen as justification not only for us who are presently believing the evangel, but for all, both Jew and Greek, "for there is no distinction, for all sin and are wanting of the glory of God." It is for the believer (chosen in God's grace) because it is for all. But, in that God is especially the Saviour of those who are presently believing it (1 Tim.4:10) God's righteousness in constituting all righteous (Rom.5:19) through Jesus Christ's faith (Rom. 3:22) is already "on all who are believing it." It is not yet in us; we are still dying in Adam. But it is on us, which is something less and temporary like God's spirit that came on those gathered on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:4,17,18). The believers are not yet constituted righteous (Rom.5:19), but righteousness is reckoned to them (Rom.4:5,6,24) it is securely put to their account until the deliverance of what is procured and they are constituted righteous.

To sum up, God's evangel is one of salvation revealing God's righteousness by means of (out of and through) the faith of Jesus Christ, His suffering unto death. This is for all, but in a special way is for us who are presently believing it. All shall be constituted righteous while already God has put this righteousness to the account of the believer.

D.H.H.

THE RIGHTEOUS ONE

GOD'S RIGHTEOUSNESS is being revealed by means of Christ's faith. This revelation comes to us out of Christ's great act of faith in His God and Father and obedience to His Word in dying for human beings while they are still sinners. In support of this evangel the apostle Paul cites the words of the prophet Habakkuk in Romans 1:17. He sees the prophecy of Habakkuk 2:4 as having its reference to Christ Jesus in His unwavering faith through the most difficult of situations, climaxing in His death on the cross. More than any other, Christ is the Righteous One, and more firmly and enduringly than any other He believed throughout His life of humiliation what God had spoken concerning Him.

Regarding this faith of Christ Jesus, our Lord, God spoke long ago through a chosen prophet, in an era of great distress.

THE HABAKKUK CITATION

Habakkuk lived in dark days when lawlessness and misery, devastation and violence, contention and quarreling were corrupting the entire society of Judea, centered in Jerusalem (Hab.1:2,3). The law which had been given to Israel so that they would fear the One Elohim and might not sin (Exodus 20:20) was torpid, and judgment was tortuous (Hab.1:4).

In such a time Habakkuk implored to Yahweh, crying, "How long [shall this go on], and You are not saving?"

And Yahweh replied with a message to the people:

5 See, [7]treacherous[l] ones~[cs], and look,
And be amazed, be stunned,
For [7]I [l]effect~[c] a deed in your days
You would not [l]believe though it were being related.

What would not be believed even though it was being related as Yahweh's word through the prophet? It was, to begin with, that Yahweh was raising the Chaldeans, "that bitter and hasty nation," who would come from afar, "coming for violence" (Hab.1:6,9). That nation would be centered in one individual who "is making sport of every fortress" and "whose vigor is his eloah" (Hab.1:10,11).

Yet this operation of Yahweh was not to be a work of salvation. It would be violence against violence, treacherous ones against treacherous ones, misery upon misery. It was in view of this multiplication of troubles that the prophet spoke again to Yahweh (with considerable boldness), saying (Hab.1:12,13), 12 Are You not from aforetime, O Yahweh?

My Eloah, my Holy One, [s]You[ph] shall not die.
O Yahweh, You have placed him for judgment,
And, O Rock, You have founded him for correction⁻.
13 You are of cleaner eyes [f]than to see⁻ evil,
And to look⁻ [>]at misery You are not [l]able.
Why are You looking at the treacherous[l],
Are [l]silent [i]when the wicked person is swallowing⁻ up one more righteous [f]than he?

Habakkuk agreed that the judgment and correction were necessary, but what of salvation from Yahweh, Who is of cleaner eyes than to look at such things and is not able to look at misery indefinitely? Will He not bring this cycle of human violence followed by divine indignation to an end?

Hence Habakkuk stood on guard and ready for further word from Yahweh, "to see what He shall speak to me" (Hab.2:1).

2 [+]Then Yahweh is answering me and saying,
Write the vision, and make it plain on [·]tablets,
That he may run who is reading [i] it.
3 For the vision is [fr]yet for an appointed time;
And it shall [7]bud~ [>]at the end,
and it shall not prove a lie.

A vision is set before Habakkuk, and he is to record it plainly on tablets "that he may run who is reading it." This may remind us of Isaiah 40:31 concerning those who are expectant in Yahweh, who shall run and not be wearied, and walk and not faint. So also we read in Isaiah 52:7, "How comely on the mountains are the feet of the tidings bearer, who is announcing peace, bearing tidings of good, announcing salvation."

Yet the vision does not seem to be made clear in the Masoretic (Hebrew) text which continues to speak about it, but offers no message of peace and good and salvation for one who is expectant in Yahweh, no evangel for the tidings bearer to bring with running feet. The third and fourth lines of Habakkuk 2:3 seem to repeat the thought of the first two lines. The vision is for an appointed time when it will bud forth and not prove a lie. But what is the vision? What is coming at its appointed time? What is it that if it be dallying, the faithful Israelite is to tarry for it? What is it that shall come, yea come, and shall not be late?

According to the Greek translation called the Septuagint the third and fourth lines of verse 3 do not speak of "it" (that is, the vision), but of "Him" (that is, the Coming One"). The vision is of the Coming One Who shall come at the appointed time and not be late. That is an evangel of peace and good and salvation, worthy of the running feet of the tidings bearer who is expectant in Yahweh.

If this is so, then Habakkuk 2:4 also speaks of the Coming One, Who is now called the Righteous One.

With this in mind, we have presented an expanded translation of Habakkuk 2:4 as indicated by the Septuagint:

3 For the vision is [fr]yet for an appointed time;
And it shall [7]bud~ [›]at the end,
and it shall not prove a lie.
If [7]He~ be dallying, tarry for [7]Him~,
For [7]the Coming One shall come~,
[7]and[cs] [7]He~ shall not be late.
4 [bd]If He is made presumptuous,
His soul is not upright in Him;
[7]If He is shrinking,
My soul is not delighting in Him.[0]
[+]Yet the Righteous One [i]by His faith, He shall live.

With this reading we can see that Yahweh gives Habakkuk a vision of the Coming One, Who is the Righteous One Who will be living by faith. Yet the faith is no easy pathway, for the ordinary person would shrink from it and follow what would presumably be more beneficial. Yet the soul of the Coming One will be upright, and despite the immediate suffering will not be presumptuous and follow His own will. He will live "out of His faith" in accord with the word of God. In every way God will delight in Him.

In full accord with this, and surely with it in mind, Stephen, in reviewing the history of Israel's unfaithfulness, reaches a climax in shouting, "Stiff-necked and uncircumcised in your hearts and ears, you are ever clashing with the holy spirit! As your fathers, you also! Which of the prophets do not your fathers persecute? And they kill those who announce before concerning the coming of the Righteous One, of Whom now you became the traitors and murderers—who got the law for a mandate of messengers and do not maintain it!" (Acts 7:51-53).

There should be little doubt that, whatever words of the prophets Stephen had in mind, he most certainly had Habakkuk 2:3,4 in view when he spoke of the coming Righteous One. From Stephen's view the Righteous One had already come and lived a life of faith, culminating in being killed by His own people. And we may add that this faith of the One Who came opened the way to His living again in resurrection.

Later, the writer of the book of Hebrews cites lines from the Septuagint version of Habakkuk 2:3 and 2:4 in order to encourage the Hebrew believers in endurance and faith in their own days when what is expected is not what is being observed:

37 For still how very little, He ·Who is coming° will be arriving and not delaying. 38 Now My ·Righteous One [o]by faith shall be living°, and If He should ever be shrinking°, My ·soul is not delighting in Him.

In this revision of the CV of Hebrews 10:37,38, we see that the reference is to God's Son, as His Righteous One. Again, the Righteous One has already come and exercised faith to perfection. But the writer cites the words of the prophet as they were written and understood by Stephen in order to draw attention to the strength and glory of Christ's faith. The Righteous One did not shrink, and God did indeed delight in Him (cf Matt.3:17; Matt.12:18 [cp Isa.42:1]; and Matt.17:5). And thus He becomes the First and Highest Example of faith for the Hebrew believers. No one could come up to His level, but all will be encouraged in faith by keeping His faith in view.

Consequently, after presenting the vast cloud of witnesses in living lives of faith, the writer returns to Christ as the Inaugurator and Perfecter of faith in chapter 12.

This focus on the faith of the Messiah was provided in the vision given to Habakkuk. The prophet was not about to perceive the Coming One as He shall come in indignation and power, going forth for the salvation of His people

(cf Hab.3:12,13) after which the earth will be filled with the knowledge of Yahweh's glory as the waters are covering the sea (Hab.2:14). Instead the Coming One, Who would not be late, would come first as the Righteous One, Who shall live by faith. Before He comes in the day of God's indignation, with fierce and decisive action against enemies within and without, seen by all, He must come as One Who lives by faith. That is, He Himself would not fulfill the place of Conqueror and King in Habakkuk's day, but He would come at the appointed time, and even then would live under conditions where the glory is not yet realized. And when that time arrives, instead of entering immediately into the promised joy set before Him, it would be His place to live by faith in accord with the words spoken through Isaiah the prophet (Isa.53:7):

7 Hard pressed is He, and He is humbled[l],
[+]Yet He is not opening His mouth;
Like a flockling to slaughter is He [l]fetched,
And as a ewe before her shearers[l] is mute,
[+] He is not opening His mouth.

In this we see the Inaugurator and Perfecter of faith, Jesus, the Righteous One of Habakkuk 2:4, Whom Yahweh will desire to crush, and in Whose hand Yahweh's desire shall prosper (Isa.53:10). Yet as written in Isaiah 53:11, out of all this toil, God's righteous Servant shall justify many (Isa.53:11):

It is this coming, His coming, that rests on faith, that must occur before the coming Habakkuk longed for. It is because of His coming and living in faith that the prophet's prayer in chapter 3 will be fulfilled.

3 Eloah is coming from Teman,
And the Holy One from Mount Paran.
His splendor covers the heavens,
And His praise, it fills the earth.

PAUL'S USE OF HABAKKUK 2:4

Ananias of Damascus told Saul, "The God of our fathers fixes upon you beforehand to know His will, and to be acquainted with the Righteous One" (Acts 22:14). Paul, in writing to the Romans, has not forgotten Who that Righteous One is.

As for Stephen in Acts 7:52 and the writer of Hebrews 10:37,38, so also for Paul in Romans 1:17 and Galatians 3:11, Habakkuk 2:4 speaks as a prophecy of Christ, living in faith's obedience unto the death of the cross. It surely is one of the passages expounded by the risen Lord on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:27). It certainly is one of God's promises of His evangel made before through His prophets in the holy scriptures (Rom.1:2).

We do not discard the application of the passage to God's people in times of distress and, as it may be, seasons of violence and lawlessness and contention, and in fact we see how this fits our situation even more emphatically than those of Israel, for our walk is fully by faith and not by perception. Indeed we are believers who are being saved with much daily joy and peace as we retain, in faith, the evangel of Christ's faith through our lives (cf 1 Cor.15:1-3).

But what has been missed is that here in Romans 1:17 Paul solidly bases our faith on the message of Christ's faith. Our faith is in His faith, which is "the deliverance in His blood" (Romans 3:24), in His giving of Himself for our sins, that He might extricate us out of the present wicked eon (Gal.1:3).

Therefore, Paul writes regarding his present pathway of living in faith: ". . . that I should be gaining Christ, and may be found in Him, not having my righteousness, which is [out of] law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is [out] of God for [into] faith" (Phil.3:8,9).

later by faith's law. Consequently, in Romans 4 Paul will speak of accounted justification. But the basis of such a limited and temporary justification has been set before us in Romans 3:21-30, all proleptically made righteous by means of Jesus Christ's faith, for the manifestation of God's righteousness. GOD'S WONDROUS GRACE

Are you trusting in the Saviour?
Do you long for His return?
Does His word become more precious
Though the world does not discern?
There's a work for all believers
In that realm beyond the sky,
Teaching God's celestial beings
Why our Saviour came to die.

Can you glimpse God's love and mercy
In His plan for all the race?
Can you see His whole creation
Finally in His fond embrace?
If you wish to know His purpose;
It's unfolding every hour;
Just believe what God has spoken
And adore Him for His pow'r.

Life is but a fleeting moment;
Time is swiftly passing by;
Soon we'll hear our Saviour calling
Us to meet Him in the sky;
Won't you join that grand reunion
And with Him forever be;
Telling all celestial beings
How His love and grace is free?

There's a happy day awaiting,
When this world will be at peace;
All the sorrow, all the crying
Will at last forever cease:
'Tis the reconciliation
Of the universe, you know;
All will bow in adoration
To the One Who loves us so.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, FIRST QUARTER 2023
BEING THE FIRST NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED FOURTEEN

EDITORIAL

WITH thanksgiving to God, Who spares not His own Son but gives Him up for us all, we begin volume 114 of Unsearchable Riches magazine. The articles center on God and the activities of His holy spirit with a final reminder of His evangel concerning His Son.

Jim Coram writes of God, that "He sees to it that all moves toward . . . the fulfillment of His purpose to become 'All in all' (1 Cor.15:28). Whatever occurs has a place to fill toward this end" (pp.11,12).

Concerning God's spirit, A. E. Knoch concludes his three articles as follows: "The holy spirit is not a distinct personality from God Himself. Christ was born of both God and His holy spirit—one 'Person' . . . . The earnest of the spirit is the initial instalment which we receive of that plenitude which will be ours in His presence" (p.46).

It is in view of God operating all by His spirit, and of the spiritual blessing of the earnest of the spirit, by which we are sealed on hearing and believing the evangel of our salvation—sealed to the deliverance of that which has been procured—that this issue closes with some selected and expanded passages from Paul's letter, centering on Christ's faith.

TO GOD BE ALL THE GLORY

> O, THE DEPTH of the riches and the wisdom and the knowledge of God! How inscrutable are His judgments, and untraceable His ways! For, who knows the mind of the Lord? or, who becomes His adviser? or who gives to Him first, and it will be repaid him? seeing that out of Him and through Him and for Him is all: to Him be the glory for the eons! Amen! (Rom.11:33-36)

This is not a passage "to fall back on when everything else fails," but one that needs to be in the forefront of all our thinking. As with the events of Israel's history, everything that happens in our lives and throughout all the eons is out of God and through Him and for Him. What is written here concerning the experiences of one group of people is true of everyone.

Indeed, it is evident that "whatever is written before," throughout the Hebrew scriptures, is representative of God's ways with ourselves, insofar as His direction and control of human affairs is concerned. If this were not the case, those things could hardly have been "written for this teaching of ours," and it could never be "that through the endurance and the consolation of the scriptures we may have expectation" (Rom.15:4).

It is consoling and a source of joyful expectation to realize that man today is no more the master of his fate and captain of his soul than were his ancestors before him. For "the Supreme is in authority in the kingdom of mortals" (Dan.4:17), and "according to His will is He doing" (Dan.

4:35). Were it otherwise the Scriptures could never help us to endure; they would not console us, and could never afford us expectation out of our own failures and sufferings.

It is significant that the best-known Bible stories, such as Joseph and his brothers and the terrible troubles of Job, focus directly on the work of divine providence. The explicit testimony of God's Word is that He is operating all.

According to the apostle's rhetorical question—since no one at any time already knows the mind of the Lord, or becomes His adviser, informing Him of things of which He as yet had not been aware, or were in need of repayment inasmuch as they had given Him something first—this is why the riches, wisdom and knowledge of God are so deep, His judgments inscrutable, His ways untraceable. Again, none knows His mind, advises Him, or gives anything to Him first, seeing that out of Him and through Him and for Him is all: to Him be the glory for the eons! Amen! (Rom.11:36).

THE ALL

It is clear, then, that in this passage the thought is, all that is, and all that happens, is out of, through, and for God. The words "the all," in any text, refer to all that is in view, all that is comprised in the subject at hand, or true in the nature of the case. Therefore, by means of the illuminating rhetoric which Paul employs in this marvelous passage, he clearly manifests the universal scope of that which brings glory to God for the eons.

That these words are used in a limited way in certain other passages (e.g., Col.3:8), is quite irrelevant. The question is: What is the scope of "the all" in Romans 11:36?

Outside of God Himself (cp "it is evident that it is outside of Him Who subjects all to Him . . ." (1 Cor.15:27), there is no exception to this "all" of Romans 11:36, nor can there be. For if just once, even concerning a trivial matter, someone had already known His mind when He as yet had not informed him, or if at any time someone had advised Him of something of which He had hitherto been ignorant, or had given something to Him first that He had not already dispensed, then indeed some things would not be out of God. But since Paul's whole point is that such an idea could never be true, we can be sure that all is used universally in this passage.

FOREKNOWLEDGE AND PROPHECY

Since all that exists and all that occurs is out of, through and for God, it is evident that God knows all. He could hardly be ignorant concerning anything that found its origin, ultimate cause, and purpose in His own counsels. Future events are as much an object of God's knowledge as past events. Therefore, the Scriptures having explicitly declared that He does know all (1 John 3:20), there is no sound reason to suppose that anything is excluded.

What God fore*tells* He first of all fore*knows,* and it is evident He foreknows only that which He will bring to pass Himself. He can hardly rely upon man to help Him out! He fulfills His own word. Surely He has a perfect knowledge of all the great number of prophetic events recorded in the Scriptures, though these events should be ever so complex in themselves, and connected with innumerable other events of equal complexity before and after them.

Prophecy always declares that the events foretold shall come to pass, often insisting that they must occur (e.g., Luke 24:46; Rev.1:1). Though the prophetic word in itself does not cause events to happen, this fact is very far from being of any aid to the concept of free will.

The sheer existence of prophecy constitutes absolute proof that the events it predicts will be caused to happen. For events without a cause would be unpredictable, and our subject is predictive prophecy.

Events which shall and must take place can never be events of free will. Events of free will, according to their supposed nature, never have to occur, and it can never be said that one day they will happen, for there is always a "chance" they will not! In the nature of things, they would be absolutely unpredictable, even by God Himself.

By itself, therefore, prophecy constitutes a complete disproof of the theory of human free will. Furthermore, all prophetic events are connected with countless other events upon which they depend for their existence. And these events as well are themselves dependent upon countless antecedent events for their own existence, and so forth. This is true of all things, throughout all time, "up to the fountain, God," Who alone is self-existent.

To say that the foreknowledge of an event is certain and infallible and yet the foreknown event itself is quite uncertain and may therefore never occur, is completely unsound. For if the event that is foreknown to occur does not occur, the foreknowledge is not foreknowledge.

In order for an event to be known, there must be evidence of that which is to be known. But if any future event should truly be an unnecessary event, that is, one that does not have to occur, the future existence of that event would be absolutely without any evidence whatsoever. It could not be, and therefore would not be, an object of knowledge. The event would not be evident, and so could not be seen to be evident, or to say the same thing, it could not be known. One who has infinite strength of sight and infinite capacity of discernment will be able to see all that there is and all that, in fact, will be, quite perfectly indeed. Yet such abilities will not enable anyone to observe evidence which does not exist. To the contrary, they will enable the one who has such abilities to discern with absolute certainty that there is no evidence whatever of any and all unnecessary events.

To claim that things which God knows will occur may not occur, is contradictory. To say, as some have claimed, that He may have ways of knowing of unnecessary events even though we cannot conceive of such things, or at the same time that God knows a thing to be certain, He also knows it to be uncertain, is as foolish as to say that, for all we know, God may know contradictions to be true.[1]

It is impossible for anything to occur that would disprove God's foreknowledge, and thus make it fore-error. His foreknowledge must be correct; it is not enough that it simply turn out that way. At the moment it is subjected even to possible failure, it no longer has to be true. And at the moment in which it no longer has to be true, (1) it is then possible that it may become false, and (2) it then becomes quite uncertain that it is correct; that is, any convictions of it which may yet be entertained, become fallible opinion, and they are no longer knowledge.

Consequently, then, it is impossible that something even could occur which would prove God's foreknowledge mistaken. No man at any time can even possibly do a single thing that, if done, would disprove His foreknowledge. And divine omniscience would indeed be subjected to possible failure in the instant that it became possible for man to act contrary to it. Yet, as we have shown, this would make it contradictory to itself, and therefore nonexistent.

No clear mind can understand the nature of both free will and foreknowledge and believe in them both. The whole subject is really quite simple: According to the fundamental claims of its own advocates, events of "free will" never have to occur. And yet, foreknown and prophesied events always have to occur. These concepts are mutually exclusive. The latter one is scriptural; consequently, the former must be mythical. And men have been turned aside to myths (2 Tim.4:4). "As to the faith, they swerve" (1 Tim. 6:21). Yet we are not to be heeding myths (1 Tim.1:4).

1. Portions of the preceding two paragraphs were adapted from FREEDOM OF THE WILL, Jonathan Edwards, pp. 74-76: Robert Carter and Brothers (1881).

DESIGNATION BEFOREHAND AND "PREDESTINATION"

In the Authorized Version, proōrizō is translated "predestinate," as well as "ordain" and "determine before." The Concordant Version translates it uniformly as "designate beforehand." This is its sense; it simply speaks of what is designated or specified (cf Acts 11:29). Man often fails to accomplish his plans, the things he designates to accomplish. But God's plans, the things He designates to occur in His own wise counsels, always come to pass, for it is He Who fulfills them all (Isa.46:9-11).

In the Scriptures the expression "designate beforehand" is only used in reference to a few subjects, all of them of great consequence. Yet it should never be inferred from this that these are the only things God designates beforehand. For God's counsels are concerned with all (Eph.1:11). Concerning matters yet to occur, His "counsels" speak of His plans—those things which, in the nature of the case, He has designated to accomplish. The issues involved in this great question cannot be resolved by merely noting that only a few matters are directly spoken of as being designated beforehand. This is especially so when even these are not truly accepted as the work of God (e.g., Acts 2:23; 3:18; 4:27,28).

The question is this: Does God operate all (Eph.1:11)? or, absolutely speaking, Is there any other God (or Placer) except One, "the Father, out of Whom all is" (1 Cor.8:4-6)?

Along with the expression the "sovereignty" of God, "predestination" has been the traditional expression which has been employed by many in order to express their belief (or disbelief) in God's deity or subjectorship, His regulation of man's actions.

Certainly we ought to believe that it is the Deity Who regulates man's actions, for the scripture declares, "And actions are regulated by Him" (1 Sam.2:3). This is also true concerning man's "spirit" and "heart" (Prov.16:2; 21:2), "from it spring the outflowings ("issues," AV) of life" (Prov.4:23). Indeed, "Yahweh has made everything for its own outcome, yea, even the wicked for the day of evil" (Prov.16:4). "I know, O Yahweh, that it is not for a human to choose his way; it is not for a man to walk and to establish his step" (Jer.10:23). For it is our God Who directs our steps (Prov.16:9).

As Benjamin Warfield wrote, "Our difficulties with Predestination arise from a, no doubt not unnatural, unwillingness to acknowledge ourselves to be wholly at the disposal of Another. We wish to be at our own disposal. We wish 'to belong to ourselves,' and we resent belonging, especially absolutely, to anybody else, even if that anybody else be God. We are in the mood of the singer of the hymn beginning, 'I was a wandering sheep,' when he declares of himself, 'I would not be controlled.' We will not be controlled. Or, rather, to speak more accurately, we will not admit that we are controlled.

"I say that it is more accurate to say that we will not admit that we are controlled. For we are controlled, whether we admit it or not. To imagine we are not controlled is to imagine there is no God [no Placer]. For when we say God, we say control. If a single creature which God has made has escaped beyond His control, at the moment he has done so he has abolished God. A God who could or would make a creature whom he could not or would not control, is no God. The moment he should make such a creature he would, of course, abdicate his throne. The universe he had created would have ceased to be his universe; or rather it would cease to exist—for the universe is held together only by the control of God . . . .

"The only justification, for making anything is that we both can and will control it. If a man should manufacture a quantity of an unstable high-explosive in the corridors of an orphan asylum, and when the stuff went off should seek to excuse himself by saying that he could not control it, no one would count his excuse valid. What right had he to manufacture it, we should say, unless he could control it?

"It is purely this idea of control which people object to when they say they object to Predestination [or, the deity of God]; not the idea of previousness, but purely the idea of control. They would object just as much if the control was supposed to be exercised without any previous intention at all.

"They ought to object much more. For a control exercised without intention would be a blind control. It would have no end in view to justify it; it would have no meaning; it would be sheerly irrational, immoral, maddening. That is what we call Fate. Say intention, however, and we say person; and when we say person we say purpose."[2]

UNIVERSAL GRACE AND GLORY

Since God is so marvelously wise, the end which He has purposed will be a wise end; since He is good, it will be good; since He is love, it will be full of love; since He is just, it will be right.

He can never become All in any who remain all in themselves. Yet to become All in all is His very purpose. Therefore, He sees to it that all moves toward this goal, the fulfillment of His purpose, to become, "All in all" (1 Cor.

2. SELECTED SHORTER WRITINGS, Volume 1, "Some Thoughts on Predestination," pp.103-106: Presbyterian and Reformed Publishing Co. (1970).

15:28). Whatever occurs has a place to fill toward this end. Thus significance, justification and purpose are given to all; there are no purposeless events in all the universe at any time. This is our theodicy; only thus can we harmonize and vindicate even the temporary existence of evil with the goodness and deity of God.

Interminable evil simply cannot be. Indeed, it is not the justice of God that requires an "eternal hell," but the myths of man. It is God's good news that reveals His righteousness (Rom.1:17; 3:21); horrible predictions about everlasting burnings can never make it known. And the good news is, since all are in need ("for all sin and are wanting of the glory of God"; Rom.3:23), that "being justified gratuitously in His grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus" is "for all" (Rom.3:22,24)!

Then through these considerations too, besides the other plain passages of glad tidings for all, it becomes evident that the doctrine of endless punishment, even as that of unpurposed eonian evil, is perfectly false, and is impossible to reconcile with the divine attributes.

It is for these reasons, in light of these scriptural considerations, that we believe as we do. In the Scriptures, human affairs are not left to chance, but are to be accounted for on causal grounds. Indeed nothing whatsoever can be accounted for except on this basis. And since divine causality is what the Scriptures reveal concerning all, we need not apologize for the Word of God, or for our faith in its testimony. Instead, it is in a recognition of these things that we glory in God and in His Son.

May we ascribe all the glory to God for all our achievements, and with much thanksgiving, being aware that He is doing all things well, "the One Who is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will" (Eph.1:11).

James R. Coram

HOLY SPIRIT

THE doctrine of holy spirit has been concealed beyond solution in the popular versions of the Scriptures. Any attempt to criticize or correct their unwarranted addition and capitalization is sure to call down the anathemas of those who cleave to tradition. Perhaps no single feature of the CONCORDANT VERSION has occasioned so much criticism as its lack of capitals in spelling holy spirit. This calls for more explanation than has hitherto been given. It is the aim of this version to avoid all interpretation. The use of capitals for holy spirit is, in every case, a matter of judgment. There can be no real reason given why holy spirit should be capitalized. It is not a name of deity. It is God's possession, not His person. Unless it is figuratively used for God or Christ, it should always be printed and written with small letters.

Spiritually-minded translators and revisers have experienced much confusion in this matter. They seldom settled the question to their own satisfaction. J. N. Darby, who would be the last to put a small 's' where a large one should be, calls attention to this in the preface to his translation. Since he sees a glimmer of light as to the reason of this, we quote his words: "The use of a large or small 's' is of extreme difficulty in the case of the word Spirit; not in giving it when the Holy Spirit is simply spoken of personally. There it is simple enough. But as dwelling in us, our state by it, and the Holy Spirit itself, are so blended as to make it then very difficult; because it is spoken of as our state, and then as the Holy Ghost. If it be put large, we lose the first; if small, the Spirit personally. I can only leave it with this warning, calling the attention of the reader to it . . . ." Note that he calls the spirit "it," and dimly perceives the cause of the confusion, which arises from the fact that the saints share the spirit of God, and are one spirit in the Lord.

A cloud is cast over the eighth chapter to the Romans by the capital S's. For many years I could not seem to get an intelligent concept of the argument because the Holy Spirit has everywhere intruded. The very first verse is evidently wrong. "Who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" is out of balance. It is the believer's flesh and spirit here, primarily. So also in the second verse. The spirit's law of life, refers first of all to our spirit, as in the tenth verse. Verse four speaks of our flesh and our spirit. Surely "the things of the spirit" and "the mind of the spirit" cannot ignore our spirit. Note the curious contradiction in verse nine. "Ye . . . are . . . in the Spirit, if . . . the Spirit of God dwell in you." We are in spirit, not in the Spirit. That is in us. It takes both spirits to "mortify the deeds of the body" (verse 13). Surely "spirit of bondage" should be balanced by "spirit of sonship" (verse 15). Note that even the Authorized Version speaks of "the Spirit *it*self "(verses 16,26) as Tyndale did in his basic English version, which has been modified in this matter to meet the prejudice of ecclesiastical traditions.

The Authorized Version has changed greatly in the course of time. At first it capitalized quite a few nouns, such as Priest, and Sabbath, but now all such words are spelled with small initial letters. The word spirit, however, has been greatly altered in the contrary direction. In many places where they had a small 's' we now have a capital. These changes are not "authorized." The alteration of other nouns is hardly worthy of notice. It is a mere matter of printers' "style." But the change of spirit to Spirit fixes the interpretation. As a result any study of this theme in the Authorized translation is worse than useless. It is misleading.

The Revised Version has followed the same tendency as the previous editorial revisions of the Authorized Version. They use fewer capitals as a rule, yet they still further increase the number of occasions where spirit is capitalized. The result of this tendency is evident on all sides. Not only is there great ignorance on the subject of holy spirit, but editors and reviewers are quite outspoken in acknowledging the fact, though they do not see the inconsistencies in the common translations, and vehemently oppose the uniform rendering of the concordant method. The only possible remedy is the constant use of a version which agrees with the Greek and nowhere inflicts the opinion of the translator on the text by the use of capitals.

The same remarks apply to the Greek texts. Modern editors all differ among themselves, and their opinion on a matter outside their proper province is worth no more than any other man's. The uncials are all in capitals. The cursives have very few, and these are mere matters of style. In none of the ancient texts is the word spirit distinguished at any time as in the later Greek and English reproductions. This is why the Concordant Greek Text follows the most ancient evidence. This avoids even those unconscious alterations which cast a cloud over our understanding and give the traditions of men all the authority of the Word of God.

The spirit of God and the spirit of a man are often in closest coöperation, so that they ought not to be distinguished. For instance, we are God's dwelling place, in spirit (Eph.2:22). What spirit? Surely it must include God's spirit, for that is the only power which can keep us in His holy presence. Surely it must include our spirit, for this is not true except in spirit. It is in contrast with flesh. How perplexing is the Revision! We are "a habitation of God in the Spirit." Either God lives in us, who live in the Spirit, which is a strange medley of figures, or God lives in the Spirit which lives in us, which is almost as farfetched. The simple fact is that God dwells in us, not in our flesh, but in our spirit, not in any physical sense, but by His spirit. His spirit and ours are both involved in the simple phrase, in spirit. Instead of aiding us to understand, the capital precludes the possibility of intelligent interpretation.

The problem of "personality" is just as complex. The strongest passage which can be produced for the personality of the holy spirit gives it an impersonal name (John 16:13-15). In contrast with the spirit of deception it is called the spirit of truth. Truth is an abstract quality. Yet, in contrast with the false spirits which seek to lead astray, it is called a guide, which is neutral. These evil spirits spoke from themselves, but it speaks only what it has heard from God, which seems to be personal. All this refers to the paraclete, the holy spirit. As replacing Christ and opposing evil spirits it is given the attributes of personality, but when considered as opposed to the spirit of error, it is the impersonal spirit of truth. In itself it is neutral, but it reflects the character of that with which it is composed. When replacing a person it is personified.

The doctrine of the distinct personality of the holy spirit probably arose from this passage. Our Lord's figures of speech were often misunderstood by His disciples. When He spoke to them of leaven, they worried about bread. "This is my body" was taken literally, and earnestly defended by the church for a thousand years. So the personification of the spirit of truth, because it was to take the place of a Person, and was in contrast to evil spirits, has been taken literally, leading to the creation of another god in the Christian pantheon. We may rest assured that the disciples never understood it so. No Jew would believe in another deity. They looked for no person at Pentecost. They received a spirit, God's spirit, the spirit of truth, which was in them and abode with them in a manner impossible to a person.

THE VARIOUS PHRASES

In the original there are a number of striking variations in combining the two words, holy and spirit. There is holy spirit, spirit holy, the holy spirit, and the holy the spirit. A laudable attempt has been made to show that these differ in meaning. It is supposed that the longest phrase, the holy the spirit, is applied only to the "Giver" and the shortest, spirit holy, only to His "gifts." The difficulty with this is that it has no analogy in any language. The definite article does not change the meaning of the words to which it is prefixed. It cannot change a power into a person. For instance, "spirit of-God" (God's spirit, Rom.8:9, CV) differs from "the spirit of-the God" (1 Cor.2:11) in emphasis, but surely not in sense. "The God" is only a restricted application of "God." The latter is not a mere power.

In order to show that "spirit" may refer to God's spirit quite as well as "the spirit" we will give the occurrences in which it is in direct combination with the name of God. These will, at the same time, give further light on the fact that God's spirit is not a separate deity from God Himself. The two phrases are distinguished, where possible, in the latest revision of the CONCORDANT VERSION by rendering one "the spirit of God" and the other "God's spirit."

the spirit of-the God

1 Cor.	2:11	that which is of God no one has known except the spirit of God
	2:14	the soulish man is not receiving that which is of the spirit of God
	3:16	you are the temple of God and the spirit of God is making its home in you
	6:11	you were justified . . . by the spirit of our God
1 John	4: 2	In this you are knowing the spirit of God

spirit of-God

Matt.	3:16	God's spirit descending as if it were a dove
	12:28	I am casting out demons by God's spirit
Rom.	8: 9	if so be that God's spirit is making its home in you
	8:14	as many as are being led by God's spirit
	15:19	in the power of God's spirit
1 Cor.	7:40	Now I presume that I, also, have God's spirit
	12: 3	no one, speaking by God's spirit, is saying, "Anathema is Jesus."
2 Cor.	3: 3	but with the spirit of the living God [living God's spirit]

Who can distinguish between "the spirit of God" (1 Cor. 3:16) and "God's spirit" (Rom.8:9), which makes its home in us? It is "God's spirit" that leads us, not "the spirit of God." In each case the difference is entirely in the relation of the phrases to the context, not in its meaning.

If the absence of the article before spirit denotes that it is a thing, and its presence a personality, then the many passages which treat it as a quality should all be anarthrous. Yet we read of the spirit of the truth (1 John 4:6), the spirit of the grace (Heb.10:29), the spirit of the deception (1 John 4:6), the spirit of your mind (Eph.4:23), though, of course the article is usually lacking in such cases. We would also expect that personal spirits always have the article. Yet we read "nor spirit" (Acts 23:8), [a] spirit (Acts 23:9), [a] spirit (Luke 24:37), unclean spirits (Luke 6:18), [an] unclean spirit (Mark 1:23; 5:2; 7:25), etc. The article has no such function.

Moreover, the same spirit is sometimes referred to as "the spirit" and "spirit." Our Lord spoke of the spirit which the disciples were about to get, and then calls it "holy spirit" (John 7:39). Then it is called "the holy spirit" (Acts 1:8; 2:33). Later it is called "the spirit the holy" (Acts 15:8, see 11:15). So, in many instances, these variations are applied quite freely to the same spirit operating on the same occasion.

We will now give the various phrases in which holy and spirit are combined, with all their variations in grammar as well as those produced by the presence of the article. Such an analysis is needed, that those who really wish to study the facts as they are in the original may do so with ease and profit. First we give the forms without the article, later those with it. It should be observed that, in Greek, the adjective, as holy, normally comes after the noun, so that pneuma hagion, spirit holy, is the same as our holy spirit.

Luke	12:12	for holy spirit will be teaching you to hagion pneuma, the holy spirit

Luke	12:10	the one who blasphemes the holy spirit shall not be pardoned

In these passages holy is emphatic by position. In both God's spirit and its operations are involved, so that neither can be excluded. Indeed, the broad and comprehensive adjective "holy" is used in all of these passages, rather than the limiting "God's," in order to include whatever is within the scope of the context. It is not necessary, nay, it is undesirable, that we should dissect its manifestations into the "personal," and the operative, and the human aspects. All is operative and due to the contact of God's spirit with the human spirit.

1 Peter	1:12	preaching the evangel to you by holy spirit dis-patched from heaven
Jude	1:20	praying in holy spirit

It will be a surprise to many to find that most of the mentions of "the Holy Spirit," are simply "holy spirit," without the definite article. The context usually confines it to the manifestation of God's spirit in humankind. Yet it is also used in the most "personal" way possible, for our Lord was generated by "holy spirit" (Matt.1:18,20; Luke 1:35). The theory that the article is latent after prepositions has no support in fact, and is not in point in Luke. There we have a combination which ought to satisfy all that holy spirit is God's personal power. We repeat it:

Holy spirit shall be coming on you,
And the power of the Most High shall be overshadowing you.

Here it is actually paralleled by "power," and the nature of the case demands that it should be vital energy yet it is so personal that it resulted in the generation of a Person.

2 Cor.	13:13	the communion of the holy spirit

Perhaps no other passage is supposed to prove the existence of the "Trinity" so conclusively as Matthew 28:19: "baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit." But there are no logical premises for this idea whatever. Baptism was not necessarily in the name of the deity. The apostles never used this formula. They intelligently varied the name and title of our Lord because this was in harmony with the conditions into which baptism brought its subjects. It is only when the kingdom is set up on earth that this threefold formula will be used. The holy spirit is especially added in that era because it will be a day in which the spirit of God will work marvels among all flesh, and their baptism is the introduction to them. It is a special formula for a special time, not a dissection of the persons of the Trinity. So important a revelation must not be inferred from a casual statement on another theme. When the subject itself is discussed the unity of God is averred and plurality denounced.

Acts	7:51	you are ever clashing with the holy spirit

Many of these passages present the holy spirit acting as a person. We have it as the consoler; it speaks, it predicts, it appoints, it testifies, it sends forth. Yet, on the other hand, it is imparted and it falls on them, it is a seal—all outside the possibilities of personality. It is only as we combine these two thoughts, and consider it the spirit of a Person, that we can understand all of the passages concordantly.

God's holy spirit is not a distinct individual, with a will, a mind, and an independent existence. It is God at work; the localization of Himself, the means of His activities, the medium of His operations. He does all things by His spirit through His Christ. This spirit is just as "personal" as the human spirit. It is so one with God that it is His mouthpiece. The Scriptures are the word of God, yet actually inspired by His spirit. But the spirit never speaks aught but God's words, thinks aught but God's thoughts, is aught but God's manifestation in His creatures.

The problem is, how can the holy spirit have all the attributes of personality combined with the impersonal qualities of a force or power? The answer is simple: it is the power of a Personality. Spirit force is not mere material energy like the wind that figures it. It is a living, intelligent, personal power like that developed in mankind by breathing.

As we also have a spirit, we ought to be able to test the "personality" of God's spirit by our own. There are times when our spirit rejoices, and again it is sad. Only a person can be depressed or joyful. Do we therefore conclude that our spirit is a distinct personality from ourselves? By no means. Do we therefore speak of it as "he" or "she?" By no means. The human spirit, it is refreshed (1 Cor. 16:18), it is restless (2 Cor.2:13). My spirit is so intimately mine that, like the soul and body, I may speak of it as if it were myself. God speaks in just this way in order that we may understand Him. If He were speaking to spirit beings He might change His method. But to us, human beings, with spirits, He speaks as if He also were human, and His spirit like ours.

Once we see that the holy spirit is not a distinct spirit being from God, but is His spirit, the many difficulties which surround this subject vanish. This reconciles the passages in which it appears to act as a person with those in which it seems to be an impersonal power. Both are true of God's spirit, for it is the function of that spirit to operate as a power in God's creation and in His saints. If we wish to make a distinction between the "Giver" and the "gift," we will find that God Himself is the Giver, and His spirit the gift. He gives "the holy [the] spirit" (Acts 15:8; 1 Thess.4:8).

WHAT IS SPIRIT?

Spirit is the invisible, intangible power of action, life, and intelligence. It is an intelligent principle of action (Luke 9:55; 2 Cor.12:18), as the spirit of meekness (1 Cor.4:21), of prophecy (Rev.19:10), of faith (2 Cor.4:13), of sonship (Rom.8: 15), of power and love and sanity (2 Tim.1:7), of slavery (Rom. 8:15), of stupor (Rom.11:8), and of the world (1 Cor.2:12). It is used of the life principle common to animals (Ecc.3:21), and mankind (Gen.6:17). It is also applied to metaphysical beings (2 Chron.18:20) without flesh or bones (Luke 24:39), which are usually unclean or evil (1 Tim.4:1), as well as demons (Luke 4: 33) and messengers (Rev.4:5).

Its highest use denotes the divine power as manifested in His invisible, intangible operations (John 4:24), the spirit of God, that holy spirit (Matt.1:18; John 3:8; Acts 13:2) which comes on men for power (Acts 1:8), baptizes for cleansing (Acts 1:5) and unifying (1 Cor.12:13), filling for utterance (Acts 2:4; Eph.5:18), sealing for safety (Eph. 1:13), and homing (1 Cor.3:16) for permanent fellowship.

THE EARNEST OF THE SPIRIT

THE NEED for the possession of God's spirit has been felt from the earliest times. When Israel left the land of bondage they craved flesh to eat as they were wont to have in Egypt. Moses breaks down beneath their murmurings and cries to Yahweh in his distress. But divine wisdom knows that flesh was not the need, but God's spirit. So Yahweh bids Moses gather seventy elders to receive the same spirit that rested on him. A cloud, the emblem of God's spirit in those dim days, covers them. His spirit rests upon them. They prophesy.

A strange thing occurs. Yahweh said He would put His spirit on seventy. As it was, only sixty-eight are in the appointed place, standing near the tent of testimony. Two, whose names mean Affection and Affectionate-Deity (Medad and Eldad) are not there. They remained in the camp. Did God's spirit pass them by? Such a breach as this in the regular ritual of the tabernacle would be an unpardonable transgression (Num.11). But His spirit refuses the limitations of the flesh and ignores what it deems so important. Distance, and time, and place, so vital in physical affairs, are nothing to God's spirit. Eldad and Medad are not left out, though they are not in the appointed place. They lift their voices in the camp, far from the tent, speaking Yahweh's word! What must their neighbors have thought! How dared they! What an awful thing to do! It must be stopped! A young man runs and tells Moses. Joshua chimes in: "My lord Moses, forbid them." But Moses answers: "O that all the people of Yahweh were prophets! For Yahweh put His spirit on them" (Num. 11:29).

So the seventy helped Moses bear the burden of the people by the spirit imparted to them by Yahweh. We need not more than make mention of Joshua, who by this spirit brought Israel into the land Yahweh promised them: of Othniel and Gideon and Saul and David, of Elijah and Elisha, and all the prophets who served Yahweh's people as His spirit gave them capacity. The Messiah fills up the measure of the spirit's power and accomplishes all His mighty work by its anointing. "I have put My spirit upon Him," said Yahweh (Isa.42:1). Even in that coming day of blessing for this earth, the power behind material good will be Yahweh's spirit. The essence of that Kingdom does not lie, as some supposed, in food and drink, but in the righteousness and peace and joy which His spirit imparts (Rom.14:17).

THE PROMISE OF THE SPIRIT

Is Moses's wish ever to come true and all Yahweh's people receive His spirit? Ezekiel foretells a day for his people when this will be fulfilled. ". . . a new spirit will I put within you" (Ezek.36:26). What new spirit is this? "I will put My spirit within you, and make you walk in My statutes, and you will keep My judgments, and do them. And you will dwell in the land which I gave to your fathers, and you shall become My people, and I will become your Elohim" (Ezek.36:27,28). Nothing less than the word of Yahweh will bring life to their dry bones. "Behold," says He, "I will cause spirit to enter into you, and you shall live" (Ezek.37:5).

"If anyone should not be begotten of water and of spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). Isaiah bears a like testimony. The desolation shall continue "until the spirit from the height shall be emptied out upon us" (Isa.32:15). And again, "I shall pour My spirit on your seed and My blessing on your offsprings" (Isa.44:3). Peter refers to this on the day of Pentecost: ". . . and you shall be obtaining the gratuity of the holy spirit. For to you is the promise and to your children, and to all those afar, whosoever the Lord our God should be calling to Him" (Acts 2:38,39). Many of Yahweh's people, like "Affection" (Medad) in the camp of old are, physically, at a distance from the place of blessing. They are afar, scattered among the nations. They are not eligible to the physical enjoyments which the land will produce. But this cannot hinder a spiritual blessing, however it might interfere with their material welfare in Yahweh's day.

This spirit was not promised to the nations. Moses's wish went the great length, as he thought, of embracing all of Yahweh's people. God's promise, through Joel, goes further than this. It includes all flesh (Joel 2:28; Acts 2:17). Not all flesh at all times, but all flesh after the nation of Israel receives this blessing and thus becomes the channel to convey it to the other nations. The Jews had no thought whatever that the spirit would be imparted to men of other nationalities before the time mentioned by Joel, after God has judged all nations in the valley of Jehoshaphat.

THE PROMISE CONFIRMED

The greatest of all prophets born of woman was John the baptist. He was filled with holy spirit even before his birth. In spiritual capacity he was fitted for and filled the place of Elijah. As that great prophet must come and restore all things, so he came to prepare the people for their Messiah. Elijah himself shall truly come, but the spiritual power he will exercise has already been present in Israel (Matt.11: 11-14; 17:10-13). But greater and higher than all is the One Whose very generation was by holy spirit, the power of the Most High (Luke 1:35), the life-imparting Spirit on Whom the fulfillment of the promise depends. As to His flesh Christ was David's Seed. As to His most holy spirit,

He was God's Son (Rom.1:3,4). God, the Father of spirits (Heb.12:9), was His Father. But, while He was on earth, He did not fulfill the promise concerning the spirit. Ever and anon He referred to it, but deferred its fulfillment until His exaltation.

THE HINDRANCE

What was the hindrance? Strange words fell on their ears when He spoke of this and His departure. Sorrow filled their hearts at the thought of His leaving them. Yet He tells them: "It is expedient for you that I may be coming away, for if I should not be coming away, the consoler will not be coming to you. Now, if I should be gone, I will send him to you" (John 16:7). While He was with them in the world He kept them and taught them and comforted them. He was their Paraclete or Consoler (John 17:12). Lest His departure should bereave them, He promises another consoler, which would remain with them. This spirit would be their teacher and keeper and consoler (John 14:16,26).

But why not have both Paracletes at the same time? Why wait until after His departure? Speaking of it once, He cried, "If anyone should be thirsting, let him come to Me and drink. He who is believing in Me, according as the scripture said, out of his bowel shall gush rivers of living water." Then we are informed that He said this concerning the spirit which those believing in Him were about to get. For holy spirit was not as yet given, seeing that Jesus was not as yet glorified (John 7:37-39). He was the only temple of the divine spirit during His humiliation (John 2:21). He alone could furnish a draught for the thirsty. But, wonderful to relate, the time was to come when those who believed in Him should become a channel for this living water, this life-imparting spirit. Let us embed this deeply in our hearts: The spirit was not given by the "lowly Jesus," but by the glorified Christ. The measure and plenitude of the gift of the spirit is gauged by the glory that He gets.

After His sufferings He returns to them in the subdued glory of the pre-ascension days, and gives the disciples holy spirit, with authority to forgive sins (John 20:22). Yet He bids them remain at Jerusalem for the fulfillment of the Father's promise, after He Himself has ascended into the heights of heavenly glory, from whence He would send the gift.

At Pentecost Peter proclaims the exaltation of Messiah, thus removing the hindrance to the free outflow of the spirit. He proclaims the conditions on which the spirit will be imparted. "Repent and be baptized each of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the pardon of your sins, and you shall be obtaining the gratuity of the holy spirit. For to you is the promise and to your children, and to all those afar, whosoever the Lord our God should be calling to Him." This is not confined to the land. Like all the spirit's work, it is unhindered by place or distance. The sons of Israel who (like Medad and Eldad at a distance from the tabernacle) were scattered among the nations, were eligible to this spiritual blessing, as well as those in Jerusalem.

Israel knew, from Joel's prophecy, that after Yahweh's day set it, God's spirit would be extended to all flesh. Yet at this time they had no such thought, not even that it might include non-Jewish proselytes dwelling in the land. Indeed, until they once more rejected Christ in the stoning of Stephen, this blessing was confined to Israel's narrow pale and the city of Jerusalem. But after that, Philip proclaims Messiah to the Samaritans, and they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. But holy spirit did not fall on them. The kinship they claimed with Israel was based upon the flesh. The spirit repudiates the flesh and ignores its pretensions. The flesh cannot channel spiritual gifts. Only in answer to the apostles' prayers, and the laying on of hands, do they also receive God's holy spirit (Acts 8:5,15-17).

How different is Cornelius's case! Physically, he is further removed than the Samaritans. In fact, though he was a proselyte, a devout worshiper of Yahweh, the God of Israel, and dwelt in the land He gave them, he was loathed, instead of loved as Yahweh's laws commanded (Deut.10:19). Even Peter dreaded to enter his house or eat at his table, and his fellow saints were furious about it. Israel had forgotten Egypt and their bondage, so, instead of loving a stranger as themselves, they made him keep his distance.

God uses extraordinary means to induce Peter to go to Cornelius and proclaim that which was sent to the sons of Israel (Acts 10:36). But, having been convinced that God is not bound by the letter of their law, he is persuaded to go with Cornelius's messengers. His first words were not at all reassuring: "You are versed in the fact how illicit it is for a man who is a Jew to join or come to another tribe . . ." (Acts 10:28). While Peter was still telling them what Jesus of Nazareth did by the power of holy spirit, and of the pardon of sins through His name, a marvelous thing occurred. Holy spirit fell on all the aliens who heard his word! And not only so, but they spoke languages and magnified God, even as the apostles themselves had done at Pentecost (Acts 10:44,46).

The Circumcision who were present were astonished. It was too late for baptism or prayer, or the laying on of hands, or any ceremony prior to the spirit's coming. The flesh had such a large place with them that God's gracious action seemed inexplicable. Since Cornelius and his household received the spirit, Peter is forced to join them by baptism to the cleansed company at Jerusalem. Though he was chief of all the apostles, he had to answer for such a flagrant transgression as this! "You enter to men having uncircumcision, and you eat together with them!" It took much talking to stop the mouths of these believers.

Until this time the disciples, the repentant, the baptized, the proselytes, received this gift. But nowhere did God promise it to His enemies. If we read His word aright, they were to be utterly destroyed from among His people. The most malignant enemy Messiah ever had among mankind rose and wrought havoc among the ecclesias and destroyed His saints. In the very height of his rebellion Saul of Tarsus is stricken to the ground, blinded by the glorious brightness of Messiah's presence. Ananias (meaning Yahweh responds) is sent to him to restore his sight and that he might be filled with holy spirit. Saul eventually becomes a prophet and a teacher at Antioch (Acts 11:19-30; 13:1).

SENT FORTH BY THE HOLY SPIRIT

The first mission ever directed by holy spirit was that of Barnabas and Saul. Christ Himself, before His ascension, had sent out the twelve. This new ministry was not only distinct from theirs, but also from the previous service of Saul and Barnabas themselves. The holy spirit separated them. The holy spirit sent them forth (Acts 13:2-4). It is only as we see this that we realize the intensely spiritual character of the work they did.

The first extended account of this mission is concerned with their visit to another Antioch, in Pisidia (Acts 13:14-52). For the first time we hear of justification. For the first time we read that the law is superseded by faith. For the first time the nations are brought into the light and receive eonian life. After Barnabas and Paul are forced to leave, we find that the disciples are filled with joy and holy spirit (Acts 13:52). What stress is laid on the operation of God's spirit in all this! They are sent by holy spirit. The blessings proclaimed are spiritual. The disciples are filled with holy spirit.

When the mission had been accomplished, and they had returned to Antioch, from whence they started, certain men came down from Judea, insisting on the necessity of physical circumcision for salvation. In the subsequent discussion the one point which outweighed all others, and which finally decided the matter against the Judaizers, was thus put by Peter: "God, the Knower of hearts, testifies to them, giving the holy spirit according as to us also, and in nothing discriminates between us and them, cleansing their hearts by faith" (Acts 15:1,5,8,9). So it was acknowledged, even by their opponents, that believers among the nations received holy spirit by faith, when they believed, apart from repentance, baptism, or laying on of hands.

This seems to be a departure from the strict letter of the promise, for it contained no hint of spiritual blessings for the other nations until after the Lord had entered upon His earthly glories. Perhaps the reason is this: Though His glorious feet have not yet stood upon Mount Olivet nor touched a spot in Israel's land, He has come, in sun-dismaying splendor, outside that land, upon the distant Damascus road, leading to an activity (such is the meaning of the city's name), in harmony with such grace, for He claims the worship and fealty of His worst enemy.

The ministry of Saul (or rather Paul, his spiritual cognomen) is based upon and proceeds from this glorious sight. Just as John the baptist anticipated Elijah, being endued with his spiritual capacity, so Paul anticipates the mission of Israel in the coming eon, by means of his enduement with the nation's spiritual power. Messiah cannot be present in person among His people in their land, nevertheless, in spirit, He now goes outside the land, where He never could have gone while still on earth. In spirit, He now walks up and down the land of aliens, who have no claim on Him in flesh.

THE EARNEST OF THE SPIRIT

The characteristic feature of Paul's itinerant ministry was that all received holy spirit on believing. Nothing but faith was required for the gift. It was by faith in order that it might accord with grace. Consequently, while it was not, strictly speaking, the promised gift (for it was so gracious that it came to them apart from any promise) it is a gift with a promise. It is a promissory gratuity. God does not give His spirit without, at the same time, pledging Himself to further favors. Hence it is called the holy spirit of promise (Eph.1:13).

An earnest is not only a pledge of future payment, but is a part of it. It is the same in character. All our blessings are spiritual, hence we are given the spirit as an earnest. This of course is temporary, pending the deliverance of all that has been procured for us. Our heavenly honors cannot be realized until the usurping powers of darkness, who now reign among the celestials, are cast out. Meanwhile, we have not only the promise in the Scriptures, but the pledge in our hearts. We have a small foretaste of our spiritual wealth the moment we believe.

SOUL AND SPIRIT

A glimpse of the vast gulf between the soulish and the spiritual will save us from many deceptions which afflict Christendom today. Almost all religious literature gives the soul the place which God reserves for the spirit. The soul is strictly limited to the physical senses. It uses the various bodily members to function. It feels and sees and hears and tastes and smells. It is consciousness and sensation. It yearns for physical pleasure and carnal comfort. It dominates the human body now, before it is vivified by the spirit. The joy and satisfaction which are ours in Christ do not come through sweet smelling incense, or fulsome food, or solemn, stirring music, or majestic cathedrals, ornate without and beautiful within, or even through moving emotions in great mass meetings. It comes through the still small voice of revelation, striking the strings of the spirit, engaging it with the delicious thoughts divine, energizing it by the Living Word. A. E. Knoch

THE SEALING OF THE SPIRIT

In the Sacred Scriptures, a seal is the symbol of security. Back of Caesar's seal on the stone which secured our Lord's sepulcher (Matt.27:66), was the full force of Rome's imperial power. He who dared to break that seal must reckon, not only with the procurator Pilate, but with the Roman senate and the emperor himself. Opposed to the risen Christ were the custodians, or Roman watch, and these could call the host of armed men in Jerusalem and in Judea and, if necessary, the whole military force of the empire. The greatest earthly power was back of Pilate's seal. That it was broken does not disprove this, for God's weakness is greater than man's might.

The sixth chapter of Daniel gives us a notable instance of man's farcical efforts to imitate the adamantine solidity of God's determination. "The law of the Medes and Persians, which changes not" has passed into a proverb. Nothing on earth was supposed to be more inflexible or secure than the decrees of these ancient kings. They themselves could not alter or change them once they had been passed. And when the seal of the kingdom is added to this, we may well consider Daniel in the lions' den as the most hapless and hopeless of that faithful host who have laid down their lives for the faith of their fathers. The seal on the lions' den is symbolic of man's utmost limit in securing his victim's doom. But it is God's sport to hold man's majesty and might in derision. Let them put on seven seals if they will, He will frustrate all of them! Daniel shall not die! Man seals to destroy, but God will circumvent him. God seals to save, and man is impotent to prevent Him.

What a contrast when God seals! When Satan is locked up in the abyss for a thousand years He sets His seal on it, and not all the opposing powers of earth or heaven are able to loose him from his jail (Rev.20:3). When God seals a hundred and forty-four thousand (Rev.7:4) all the onslaughts of Satan and his minions do not diminish their number by a single one. They are secure in the midst of the most terrible times which earth will ever know. Were only a hundred forty-three thousand nine hundred ninety-nine saved, God would forfeit His throne and lose the lustre of His great name.

The seal upon the hundred and forty-four thousand was put on their foreheads by a messenger of God (Rev.7:4). It will save them from the torment of the locusts out of the abyss (Rev.9:4). Most probably it will be a literal, visible mark, the counterpart of the emblem which all the worshipers of the wild beast must wear on their right hands or on their foreheads (Rev.13:16).

It is most significant that, in dealing with the Circumcision in the accounts of our Lord's life and in the Acts, nothing is said of a seal for the safety of the saints. It is true that their circumcision itself should have been a seal of the righteousness of faith, as it was with Abraham (Rom.4:11). But, alas, it had degenerated into the merest physical form, without any spiritual significance whatever. The followers of Christ or of His twelve apostles were not sealed. That is why so many fell away. Most of the Pentecostal believers apostatized.

The so-called doctrine of the "security of believers" would gain much force if it were kept in its proper place. All attempts to prove that the Pentecostal believers were saved beyond the possibility of being lost are fatally weakened by the distinct statements in the sixth and tenth of Hebrews that they did fall aside (Heb.6:6) and trampled on the Son of God and outraged the spirit of grace (Heb. 10:29). At Pentecost they became partakers of holy spirit (Heb.6:4), for they were baptized for cleansing (Acts 1:5) and filled for utterance (Acts 2:4) by the holy spirit which came upon them for power (Acts 1:8), and those who repented and were baptized in water obtained holy spirit, but it was not a seal to secure them to the day of deliverance.

The first intimation of the sealing of the holy spirit is found in Paul's second epistle to the Corinthians. After expostulating that his actions are not governed by the flesh, and that his whole preaching to them was based on God's faithfulness and that Christ was the Amen to it all, he concludes, "Now He Who is confirming us together with you in Christ, and Who anoints us is God, Who also seals us and is giving the earnest of the spirit in our hearts" (2 Cor.1:21,22).

It will be noted that the seal and the earnest of the spirit are closely associated here and in our next passage, in the first chapter of Ephesians. The two thoughts have much in common. While the earnest has not the supreme sense of security conveyed by a seal, it also implies a pledge of that full measure of the spirit which comes only with our deliverance. Perhaps it would be best to consider the earnest of the spirit as the seal which secures our ultimate deliverance, for when we have the fullness of the spirit security will be beyond question.

Now let us note the contrast between this seal and that given a limited number of the sons of Israel. The hundred and forty-four thousand had a visible token on their flesh. They were a chosen company out of the nation. In the body of Christ there is no such division. All are sealed. And the seal is the invisible, intangible, life-giving spirit which is the only token given by God to distinguish His own from the sons of Stubbornness, who are actuated by the spirit of the aerial jurisdiction (Eph.2:2).

The time element is very prominent in the two remaining references to the spirit's sealing. In Ephesians we are told that it occurs when we believe (1:13) and continues until the day of deliverance (4:30). This is important. Security depends on uninterrupted vigilance. If the sealing were delayed a year or a day or even a second after believing, what assurance would His saints have of "enduring to the end?" Our salvation, past, present, and future, is wholly of God, and by His spirit. The briefest interruption in the spirit's presence would expose us to the fearful fate of the Circumcision who were partakers at one time, but later fell aside.

We should never confuse the falling upon of the spirit in the past with the present surpassing grace. The spirit is now making its home in us. Yet it is instructive to note the contrast between the tardy reception of the spirit by the Circumcision after repentance, baptism, and pardon (Acts 2:38), and its precipitate outpouring on the proselytes in the household of Cornelius (Acts 10:44,45). And in Paul's epistles the gift of the spirit is always predicated of all who believe apart from any acts or ceremonies whatsoever. Faith is the only requisite. It comes on believing.

In Paul's earliest epistle, he tells the Thessalonians that God has given them His holy spirit (1 Thess.4:8). In Romans, it is the basis of conduct (5:5) and is fully discussed in the eighth chapter. He assures the Corinthians that we have obtained not the spirit of the world, but that which is of God (1 Cor.2:12). As we have seen, in his second letter, he assures them that they are sealed by the earnest of the spirit (2 Cor.1:22). In Galatians he reminds them that they had begun in spirit (3:3). Ephesians clearly commences the sealing coincident with faith (1:13), and continues it until our deliverance (4:30).

We may rest assured that the God Whose seal suffices to secure Satan for a thousand years can safely be trusted to see that no one violates His seal in us for the brief span of our mortal existence. All the assaults of the Adversary and his hosts can do nothing to break His seal. We are invulnerable to his attacks. The weakest believer now is far more certain of ultimate deliverance than if he had been one of the twelve apostles. One of them was lost, for they were not sealed. Not one of the Pentecostal saints was sealed. Only those to whom Paul preached the message of boundless grace immediately received the seal of the spirit and the absolute assurance of salvation.

The most precious point for us is the character of this seal. The seal of faith given to Abraham was in his flesh, because his blessings included the physical. Not so this: it is a purely spiritual seal, because the blessings it guards are exclusively metaphysical. It coincides with the pledge given to those of the Circumcision, associated with Paul, whose faith was placed in Christ Jesus, who looked for His presence in the air, and whose changed destiny and new spiritual allotment among the celestials depend on its possession.

This is the key to the somewhat enigmatical statement in Ephesians 1:13: "In Whom you also—when hearing the word of truth, the evangel of your salvation—in Whom, on believing also, you are sealed . . . ." Before this the apostle has been limiting his exposition to himself and his circumcised associates in this grace. Now he includes the gentile believers. Because those of the other nations who believe receive the same spiritual seal, the same spiritual earnest, as this special remnant of believing Israelites, they are entitled to the same spiritual allotment among the celestials.

Physical differences cannot be transported into the celestial, spiritual sphere, hence they vanish. Thus we arrive at the logical conclusion which coincides with the first item of the "mystery" that the nations are joint-enjoyers of the celestial allotment. Beloved, this is where we come in. This is the first and choicest portion of the threefold secret. It reveals our relationship to God. The second deals with our relationship to Christ, as members of His body. The third has to do with our relationship to one another.

Now, if we wish, we may read the preceding part of Ephesians again, with the comforting assurance that, though, in its first intention, it is concerning Paul and those of Jewish blood, its extended arms enfold us also in its embrace! Some years before, when Paul wrote to the Galatians and to the Romans (among whom he now is), he had taught them that they were sons of God and consequently enjoyers of Christ's allotment. Wherein, then, lies the secret which he now reveals?

At that time Christ's celestial dignities had not been made known. His highest place was over all the earth. The blessings of His people were all in this nether sphere. It had been clearly defined by the prophets. The hope set before them was not in heaven but on earth. But in that sphere there could not be equality of blessing for the nations. Israel must have the first, the highest place. They must rule. Even in Pentecostal days the apostles at Jerusalem lorded it over the faithful of the nations and laid down decrees for their observance. However high their spiritual blessings, as sons of God, or as members of Christ's body, these never raised the nations to the same level or rank as Israel.

It is only after the mystery of Messiah, the secret of Christ's universal headship, is revealed, and the consequent destiny of those having the prior expectation is changed from earth to heaven, and altered from a partly material to a purely spiritual allotment—it is only then that equality is possible. This is the secret: not that the gentiles were to be heirs, but the nations are to be joint allottees, on an absolute equality with a remnant from the favored nation. The nations have become the peers of Israel! A realization of what we are and the covenant relation He sustained to them, coupled with a sense of that latest, highest destiny, in which we share, should moisten every eye with tears of abundant gratitude.

THE FILLING OF THE SPIRIT

The filling of the holy spirit is for utterance or expression. The twelve apostles at Pentecost, Stephen before the Sanhedrin, and Paul before his namesake Sergius were all filled with holy spirit to prepare them for speaking forth the mind of God. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth is talking. When the holy spirit surcharges a human heart it is bound to overflow in exultation, in denunciation, in declamation, or in melodious musings.

The filling of the spirit is one of the operations of God which comes to us through His previous activities. It characterizes the proclamation of the kingdom. John the baptist, our Lord Himself and His mother Mary, Peter and Stephen—all the chief heralds of the coming kingdom were filled with holy spirit to give utterance to the proclamation.

Before considering the effect of the spirit's filling in the present economy, it is of prime importance that we consider its previous operations. The first example is John the baptist (Luke 1:15). He was filled with holy spirit even before his birth. Yet we are told explicitly that he did no sign (John 10:41). No miracles attended his ministry. No power attested his proclamation. It is evident that the filling of the spirit fitted him for oral testimony, not supernatural demonstrations.

His parents, Zacharias and Elizabeth, both were filled with holy spirit in connection with his birth and signalized it by breaking out in inspired peans of blessing (Luke 1:41,67). The presence of the unborn Christ provoked the outburst of Elizabeth. The filling overflowed in a loud shout of exultant praise (Luke 1:42-45). Zacharias' experience is most striking. His unbelief makes him dumb and he remained a deaf-mute until the spirit filled him and loosed his tongue to prophesy (Luke 1:18-23). In an inspired poem he foretells the ministry of Messiah and the service of his son. It was the filling of the spirit which opened his dumb lips and gave him utterance.

The supreme example of the spirit-filled life is found in our Lord Himself. At His baptism in the Jordan, the spirit not only came on Him to remain, so that He performed powers and miracles and signs, but He was also filled with holy spirit in order to proclaim the kingdom (Luke 4:1). His anointing with the spirit gave Him the needed authority, but the filling gave Him utterance. Yet the leading of the spirit controlled the time and place of its exercise. Though full of holy spirit, He did not immediately go out to begin His proclamation, but was led out into the silence of the wilderness with the wild beasts.

There is a needed lesson in this action of our Lord. Even though we are full of utterance, we need not imagine that this gives us the right to public proclamation. That comes from the anointing of the spirit. Nor does the filling call for immediate relief in words. The time and place depend on the leading of the spirit. Undoubtedly our Lord was full of what He wished to say while He was in the wilderness. It may be that He gave voice to the spirit's urge even though no one could hear. But He waited till God's time ere He loosed the pent up stream of sayings upon the populace. Hence His words themselves were spirit, and were life.

It was with this that He met the Slanderer's words. It is only as we are filled with holy spirit that we refuse to entertain the suggestions of an unholy spirit. One who is not full has room for other and different spirits that use but abuse the words of God.

THE SPIRIT OF PENTECOST

It is exceedingly interesting and instructive to distinguish the three different operations of the holy spirit on the day of Pentecost. They were baptized in holy spirit (Acts 1:5) for cleansing and unity. The holy spirit came on them for power (Acts 1:8). They were all filled with holy spirit and begin to speak different languages, according as the spirit gave them to declaim (Acts 2:4). The failure to distinguish these diverse manifestations of the spirit's presence has led to serious misconceptions. Both baptism and filling have been incorporated into the present grace, modified to suit the later and higher revelation, but the coming on of the spirit has been displaced by its homing in.

As spirit baptism was the actual of which water baptism was the symbol, it stands for the cleansing of conduct and consequent unity of all thus cleansed. All God's saints have part in this. All have their hearts cleansed. At present this baptism effects the unity of the body of Christ, then it was associated with its symbol, water, in producing the body called the bride. Above all things let us not fall into the common error of associating spirit baptism with power. It is never so in God's word.

The filling of the spirit is likewise continued down to the present. It also changes in character. Only a few notable cases occur before our Lord's resurrection. At Pentecost all the apostles were filled. Later, under Paul's ministry (Acts 13:52) the disciples were filled with joy and holy spirit. The tendency is clear. It is to diffuse the spirit. It is from few to many. And it varies according to the purity of the grace revealed. Little grace calls for the filling of a few for denunciation and exhortation, such as was done by John the baptist, and Paul before Sergius. Much grace is always accompanied by a more liberal diffusion of holy spirit, yet a change in the character of its operations.

The very word "grace" is but a form of JOY in the Greek. So that the filling of the disciples was a compound of joy and holy spirit. This is the form in which it passes on into the present. Being gracious, it is joyous. Only once in the range of Paul's epistles do we read of the filling of the spirit. But then it is a positive command. And it is not the occasional and unusual, but the normal state of the beloved believer. The command to be filled with spirit is preceded by a negative charge which throws light on its fulfillment. "And be not drunk with wine, in which is profligacy" is at once an injunction to be obeyed and an illustration to be observed. He who is filled with wine becomes drunk; so he who is filled with spirit falls under its mellowing influence. But here we need to walk warily, for the fulfillment of the figure is confined to the utterances of the wine bibber and of the one who imbibes intemperately of the spirit.

Someone has defined the various stages of drunkenness on this wise: Jocose, verbose, lachrymose, bellicose, comatose. There is joy and garrulity, followed by tears and quarrelsomeness and insensibility, to say nothing of the morning after. Let us not force this figure beyond its bounds. Let us not follow the bubbling joy of spiritual intoxication with the bibulous babbling and quarreling, the stupor and headache, not to say heartache, which follow the toper's potations.

The point of the comparison is limited to the effect of wine on the tongue. It loosens and lubricates that organ until it functions perfectly. I have heard of singers who could not carry their part unless under the influence of liquor. Many a man cannot speak sincerely, unless he is filled with mellowing spirits. In the old days a man in his cups could be depended on to talk truthfully and freely. It gave a joyful release from self and a hilarious and irrepressible abandon that overflowed in speech and song.

There are altogether too many symptoms of the other stages of drunkenness among the saints of this day and generation. We have the bellicose and the comatose on all sides. But these are not within the scope of this passage. Such conditions come, not from filling with spirit, but from failing to be filled. And let us never imagine that those grotesque physical antics and contortions which excite our risibility in the case of the drunkard have any counterpart in the spirit-filled believer. Our conduct should always be decorous and dignified.

And what is the effect of the filling of the spirit? Speaking, singing, playing. It is the impulse of utterance. It fills the air with the cadence of sweet sounds. It raises the harmony of song. It wakes the instruments of music. We have all heard of the music of the celestial spheres. And now that we know that light and sound are convertible, so that we can step sound up to light and light down to sound, we may rest assured that the universe is filled with sweet harmonies. It is God's harp to accompany the praises of the celestial choir.

We need no longer hesitate as the poet has done, and say,

> What though in solemn silence all
> Move round this dark terrestrial ball!
> What though no real voice nor sound
> Amid their radiant orbs be found,
> In reason's ear they all rejoice,
> And utter forth a glorious voice;
> Forever singing, as they shine,
> "The hand that made us is divine."

To the perceptions attuned to the whole range of physical vibrations, from the lowest sound, inaudible to the human ear, beyond the swiftest speed of light, the universe will respond by the power of this same spirit, with ineffable symphonies.

The filling with spirit finds expression in harmony. It sets our speech to stanzas. It makes our measures melodious. It finds outlet in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.

We have briefly considered the doctrine of spirit. It is a power comparable to the force of the wind. It is applied to beings, good or bad, who have no flesh or bones as is the case with mankind. We are not in need of the ministration of good spirits, such as served the Circumcision. The holy spirit warns us explicitly, however, that, in this closing era, some will be withdrawing from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits and the teaching of demons. True spirituality recognizes but avoids spirits which ape the holy spirit among the saints. No one should rest until sure that such deceptive forces are not a factor in his experience. Never become the passive instrument in the hands of an unknown spirit. God calls for our active coöperation.

The human spirit differs from all others, because it is sustained by the breath and the body. Destroy either, and the spirit departs. There is no active spirit apart from the body, and there is no life apart from the spirit.

The holy spirit is the power of God. It is not a distinct personality from God Himself. Christ was born of both God and His holy spirit—one "Person."

The baptism of the holy spirit is for cleansing and unity, never for power. The sealing of the holy spirit is for safety, and was not given to the Circumcision, many of whom fell away. The earnest of the holy spirit is the initial instalment which we receive of that plenitude which will be ours in His presence. The filling of the spirit is for utterance. The coming on of the holy spirit was for power, but is entirely absent in this economy of grace, in which God's power is perfected in infirmity. It is replaced by the homing of the spirit, which is the characteristic function of God's spirit in this administration. As never before, God has His home in the hearts of His hallowed.

We are now ready to consider, once more, the spirit of wisdom and revelation which alone will open to us the portals of "the mystery."

Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, SECOND QUARTER 2023
BEING THE SECOND NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED FOURTEEN

EDITORIAL

In the opening "meditation" of this issue of Unsearchable Riches A. E. Knoch conveys "a tremendously transcendent truth" that "virtually none" are preaching today. Thus our brother writes: "Now that we have discovered our own distinct destiny and the unparalleled favor which is involves, let us join the apostle in his prayer for all the saints who belong to His body" (p.51).

This is followed by James R. Coram's article, "Boasting in God's Will" (pages 63-70). Here again is a subject seldom preached: "God's operations are concerned with all, all that exists and all that occurs. There are no exceptions to what is out of, through and for God, and to His glory" (p.69).

Then in what is called a "devotional" study when it was reprinted in 1969 (vol.60, p.255) from its first appearance in 1920 (vol.12, starting on page 41), Alan Burns turns our attention to "Christ's Supremacy" (here abridged on pages 71-74). This is a theme, which, if not neglected in preaching, is nevertheless much opposed by the Adversary and denied by the wise of this eon. Yet for us: "On such a sublime subject we cannot take less than the whole Bible for our text" (p.71).

My own article, "The Singular Faith of Christ," which follows on pages 75-86, concerns an important matter that has been covered up by tradition and translation. This, too, calls for special consideration and prayer. It is not new to the pages of this magazine, but still calls for renewed clarification and expansion in accord with God's evangel set before us by Paul in his epistle to the believers in Rome. It is carried through all his letters, (and given support through all of Scripture). God's operations and blessings are founded on Christ's faith unto the death of the cross, not on our faith in Him. In the matter of faith, Christ's faith is supreme. Our faith is centered on His faith. The expectation of our calling, and the riches of the glory of a celestial allotment, and the transcendent greatness of God's power are in Christ and based on His faith. They are for us who are believing this evangel, but the evangel is a message sourced in and channeled through Christ's faith, and His alone. So also God's will in His operations of all that exists and all that occurs always is carried out through Christ's faith, His faith, not human works or even human faith (which is graciously granted to us in measure).

Abraham is the great example of faith, but at first it was much flawed and imperfected where he serves as an example of human faith. It is not until Genesis 22 that we see his faith as "Faith Perfected" (see pages 87-96). There his faith was that "God was able to rouse [Isaac] from among the dead (Heb.11:19)" (cf p.87). In this we can perceive a picture of Christ's faith, Whose faith is perfect. Hence Paul testifies of Abraham that "he believes [the promise] of the God Who is vivifying the dead" (Rom.4:17), in which "the promise of God is not doubted in unbelief, but he is invigorated by faith, giving glory to God, fully assured also that what He has promised He is able to do also" (Rom.4:20,21). Do we not perceive in this a picture of Christ's faith?

Although this parallel of Abraham's perfected faith with Christ's faith is not noted by Brother Knoch, he closes this article with reference to "the One Whose faith led Him from the highest heights of glory to the deepest depths of shame, and has called us to share the fruits of His faith with Him, by blessing us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials."

CELESTIAL SOVEREIGNTY

EPHESIANS 1:17-23

THE JOINT ENJOYMENT of the allotment among the celestials is such a tremendously transcendent truth that no one is able to receive it without a special spiritual enduement. The apostle knew this. We ought to realize it far more keenly, for nearly two millennia have passed, and practically no one seems to have enjoyed this secret, and virtually none are preaching it today. There is no hint in ecclesiastical literature, so far as we are aware, that any theologian, from the early fathers to the latest commentaries, had grasped this grand foundation stone of the present secret administration of grace. It certainly calls for prayer! It calls for prayer today! Now that we have discovered our own distinct destiny and the unparalleled favor which it involves, let us join the apostle in his prayer for all the saints who belong to His body.

Paul prays that we may perceive the expectation of God's calling, the riches of the glory of the enjoyment of God's allotment among the saints, and the transcendent greatness of God's resurrection power, operative in Christ and in us while we are believing.

God has given us a special call or invitation. What is its expectation? He has endowed us with an allotment. What are its opulent glories? He has exalted us with Christ. What is the measure of the power of this tremendous transaction?

We have seen that the whole epistle is devoted to three subjects, the three articles of the secret. In general, it seg-regates our relation to God, to Christ, to one another. In a secondary sense, these divisions are repeated in discussing each subject. This is true of this prayer. As a whole, it concerns our joint allotment, which comes to us from God, but in detail, this is divided into the same three aspects. It is God Who calls us, the saints who enjoy the allotment with us, and Christ in Whom its transcendent power is displayed (cf chart, vol.53, p.138).

OUR CELESTIAL CALLING

The prospect presented by this special revelation has been degraded to an indistinct idea that all good people go to heaven when they die and become angels or members of the celestial choir. Nothing is known of Christ's headship. Blessedness is entirely selfish and not based on blessing others. This is a travesty on the truth. Before Paul received his revelations, what human dared to dream of dwelling in the heavens? In the ancient myths, a man must be deified before he could claim a heavenly home. Even Elijah did not go into the heavens, as our version suggests. He simply went in that direction. More we are not told. Our Lord alone ascended into the heavens. There is no reason to believe that any saint of the Circumcision ever went or will go into heaven. His blessings come from there, but he enjoys them on the earth (cf Acts 2:34).

We are not looking forward to a Mohammedan paradise, with every sensual delight and selfish dream. Our joy will not spring from soulish sensations but from spiritual dignities and activities. Above "angels," or messengers, we shall not only rule in the heavenly regions, but bring to them the blessings that can come only through such as we, who are the most perfect picture of God's grace, and the best example of the lavishness of His love in all creation. We shall be blessed in blessing. Such is the prospect of the calling of the present secret administration.

Its most precious phase, as well as a true index of its graciousness, lies in the fact of its fulfillment before Israel's hope is realized and before the fearful inflictions of Yahweh's day. It is first in time as well as foremost in rank. It is a present, an imminent expectation. There are no signs to prevent its instant fulfillment. It is a most wonderful thought that, at every moment of our lives, we are on the very threshold of our glorious future. We are waiting for the door to open. We do not know when this will be, but its constant imminence should keep us in a state of expectation. There is nothing between us and its realization. Even death, so far as our consciousness is concerned, is immediately followed by His glorious presence.

OUR CELESTIAL WEALTH

In the present day wealth is measured by legal possession. In reality we have only what we enjoy or can donate to the enjoyment of others. In both ways we are supremely supplied. The height of human avarice seeks to own the earth. But if we should succeed in making all here ours, we would be very poor, indeed, compared with the illimitable possessions of the celestial realms. In Christ all this is ours. We need no title deeds, for no one can dispute His right. All is ours to use and to enjoy, in Him. But this is but a tiny fraction of our wealth. Mere material possessions do not satisfy the spirit. It is the prestige that wealth gives, and the place that it provides in human society, the associations to which it leads, which are its true glory.

Our glorious riches not only give us entrance into the presence of God Himself, but to the highest and most exclusive social set in the universe, the society of His saints, who are the ruling aristocracy of the eonian times. Our wealth was not tainted in the getting, nor will it be a curse to us in the withholding. It was gained in glory and will be given in greater and grander glory. We will have limitless stores of that spiritual sort which increases with its dispensation. Our wealth will not impoverish creation. We will enrich all to whom we are sent. The knowledge of God's grace, which is our most precious deposit, will add to the wealth of every creature in the universe.

CHRIST ROUSED FROM THE DEAD

Some day we shall be ever with the Lord. Meanwhile we cannot do better than to anticipate that overflowing joy by the spirit's enablement. But before we find Him on His present seat, let us trace more leisurely the steps that led Him there.

All of the forces of evil, headed by Satan, aided by Rome, the sovereign of the world, and abetted by the nation of Israel, were combined to accomplish the death of Christ. The Adversary knew that God had sent His Son to undo his work and to destroy him. So he strains every nerve to bring about His death. Judas did not betray his Lord of his own accord. Satan entered into him. So every actor in that dreadful drama, on the side opposed to Christ, was but a puppet in his hands; he was the moving cause of all, he was the spirit that impelled the dull clods of earth to fulfill his dark behests.

Our Lord well knew that they were not aware what they were about. Satan alone, of all His enemies, had some conception of what was involved. Rome did not realize that she had everything at stake. Messiah is the rightful ruler of the earth. Even in their stupidity they acknowledge it in the superscription Pilate wrote. Satan, their spiritual overlord, their true Caesar, made sure that the Roman power is pitted against God's Christ. The high priests, who should have worshiped Him, seem most malignant of them all. Though they pose as Yahweh's representatives, urged on by Satan, they mock Him with a trial, and loudly demand

His death. The great power of God, which once shielded Him, seems now to stand aside.

Satan's unseen hosts, the Roman legions, and Israel's religious leaders comprise a full array of all the enemies of God. All the powers of evil combine to accomplish His death and thus defeat His God. And there was every indication of their success. They had bound Him in the chains of death and they would keep Him bound! If God had given Him into their hands, who could deliver Him from them? But, in reasoning thus, we show our ignorance of that great sacrifice, and the vast change it wrought.

Why did God allow them to crucify His Son? Yea, rather, why did He abandon His Beloved in His hour of direst need? For His enemies He cries, "Father, forgive them, for they are not aware what they are doing" (Luke 23:34). God's ear is open to this prayer. But not for long. He is on the accursed tree. He is made sin. Soon a dense and dreadful darkness hides the scene, feebly figuring the hiding of God's face. Christ bears not only the fierce offensive of the forces of evil, but God Himself, true to His word, sends fire from above to consume the Sacrifice. The arrows from His quiver find lodgment in Messiah's heart. Himself so sinless, He becomes sin. He is not only shut out from God's presence, but is the object of His furious indignation. God Himself becomes His enemy.

But God did not cast Him off forever. Even as the darkness of nature passed away and the sun once more smiled upon that sight, so does His spirit again enjoy the radiance of God's face. "My God! My God! Why do You forsake Me?" could not have been uttered in those three hours of darkness and distance and estrangement. God would not have lent His ear to any cry He could have made. Now, as the Sufferer recalls their awfulness, what does He remember? Not the gibes of men, not the roars of Satan, but the silence and desertion of His God. Fire has consumed the sin He bore. God's smile beams upon Him once again. In His very death He commends His spirit to His Father's care.

Now that sin's Sacrifice has been accepted, Satan's triumph is short-lived. The high priests see that Caesar's seal secures the dead, and Caesar's soldiers guard the lifeless form, so that all of evil's power is present to keep the Christ in the clutches of death.

HIS ASCENSION

Christ arose! The high priest's guards, affrighted, flee! He breaks the seal of Caesar! He escapes from Satan's jurisdiction, death! With victorious and majestic calmness He carefully strips off His swathings, the tokens of their temporary triumph and lays them in their appropriate place. He comes forth the Victor over the vast confederacy of the forces of evil!

HIS REST

In Matthew's account we are told that all authority in heaven and on earth is given to Him (Matt.28:18). Yet it is so foreign to that account to enter upon His celestial glories, that His ascension is not so much as mentioned. His earthly exaltation is anticipated by His ascent into a high mountain. The Son of David's Kingdom has not yet come.

Mark, speaking to us of His service as the Son of God, sets before us a completed course, a finished work. His part of this ministry was fulfilled, and its proclamation also was accomplished according to the creation commission that He gave before the gospel was put on record (Mark 16:20). Therefore it is that we read, at His ascension, that He is seated at God's right hand (Mark 16:19). This rest is confined to the service of which Mark's evangel speaks.

Luke presents us with a picture of Adam's greater Son. The very fact that Acts takes up the unfinished thread of Luke shows that this aspect of His work is incomplete. In view of this we need not be surprised when Stephen sees Him standing. There is no seating of the Son of Mankind until He comes in His glory to rule the nations of the earth (Matt.25:31).

Let us seek to understand these various attitudes of Christ. Let us not miss their true spiritual import by a strict insistence on their literally. A king may be aspiring to a throne or he may be warring in its defense. In either case, he is not seated. When all the authority which the throne represents is truly his, when all opposition has been broken down, when the regal and judicial functions which pertain to it are in undisputed exercise, then he is seated.

This does not mean that he continually occupies the piece of furniture called the throne. He may be far from it, visiting in distant parts of his empire, and yet, while thus absent, find a continual acknowledgment that he is upon it. The kings of earth feebly figure Messiah. But Christ has many glories. On earth He is still rejected. He certainly is not seated on its throne. Only in a spiritual sense, as the Son of God, and as swaying over creation, is He seated. Every aspect of His work as Son of God is finished; every aspect of the human side still bides its proper season. This is the key to the seemingly contradictory attitudes in which He is presented to us. Mark says the Son of God sat down. Luke says the Son of Mankind is still standing.

John's evangel presents a distinct aspect of His ascension, as the Son of God, which we should not ignore, for it is a prelude to the present grace far more fitting than the subsequent public scene on Olivet. Even as He, as the Son of God, partially anticipated Pentecost by breathing the spirit on them beforehand, so He also ascended on the resurrection day. Mary was forbidden to touch Him because He had not yet ascended (John 20:17). Thomas was asked to touch Him on a later occasion. It is not so very strange, then, that the later ascension is not recorded in John's account. The spiritual tendency of the narrative forbids it. The ascension of which He spoke to Mary is the one for us, before the forty days sojourning, before any human contact.

Interesting and important as these various aspects of His ascension are, it is of still greater profit to note that this Ephesian epistle contains not the slightest reference to the forty days during which He manifested Himself on earth after His resurrection. There is no recognition of the ascension scene in the book of Acts. In relation to us and the spiritual blessings He has wrought for us, and has brought to us, His work was completely finished when He rose, and on that day, as He intimated to Mary, He ascended untouched into God's presence, and sat down at God's right hand. All opposing forces have been defeated. His work is finished. The Son of God is seated.

CELESTIAL SOVEREIGNTY

Christ descended into the depths at the mercy of Satan and Caesar, of Pilate and the priests, of the centurion and the soldiers, of the Pharisees and the people, and was the scorn even of the crucified robbers at His side. None so lacking in power, in influence, in authority, none so far from God, so helpless and weak, so poor and vagrant, none so guilty as He! But when He arose, not only was every shadow of sin forever gone, but God exalted Him above His every enemy.

When He was on earth He had no allotment for His own. Now, as the Son of Abraham, every inch of the promised land is His. The jackals had their burrows, the winged creatures had their roosts, but the Son of Mankind, their rightful Head, had nowhere to pillow His head. Now all of Adam's lost authority is vested in the erstwhile homeless Nazarene. The One Who left His riches in the glory to become poor has returned to become the Owner of the universe. The weakness that permitted His arrest in Gethsemane has given place to a personal power and presence of such awful intensity and force that it fells His beloved apostle at His feet (Rev.1:17). The Man Who submitted to Pilate's petty power and Satan's suzerainty has seized all that and vastly more. Satan once offered Him the sovereignty of the earth if He would but worship him (Matt. 4:1-10). Soon He will receive it from the hands of God.

These were but earthly dignities. Earth's rulers are the unsuspecting tools of higher spiritual powers. Satan claimed—and Christ did not deny his claim—that the kingdoms of this world, with all their pomp, belong to him, and to whomsoever he might give them. At times the veil is lifted which hides these spiritual powers from our sight. A parallel is apparent between earth's sovereignties and spiritual suzerains. A messenger sent to Daniel is hindered twenty-one days by "the chief of the kingdom of Persia" (Dan.10:13). He is aided in his warfare by Michael, one of the head chiefs, who is also called "the great chief, standing over the sons of your [Daniel's] people" (Dan.12:1). Like those of earth, the heavenly rule and influence is apportioned by various grades. The highest are called "princes" or "sovereigns." Their dominions are first-rate powers or empires. The Authorized Version calls them "principalities," but this name is now used of a third rate power, below the rank of a kingdom. This is not the thought. They are the highest among the heavenly hosts.

Like those of earth, however, they are divided into lesser jurisdictions, with delegated power or authority. Pilate is a good example of such rule, exercised on behalf of a superior. They told him if he let Messiah go he would not be Caesar's friend, and thus would lose his office. Pilate also imagined that he derived his ultimate authority from Rome, and could do just as he wished, provided it was pleasing to the emperor. But our Lord pointed out his error when He said, "No authority have you against Me in anything except it were given to you from above" (John 19:11). He, and his overlord in Rome, were only underlings, obeying the behests of spiritual forces they did not even suspect.

Israel's Messiah still waits for the actual transfer of earthly government to His shoulder. But in the highest heavens He is already seated at God's right hand, up over every sovereignty and authority and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this eon, but in that also which is future (Eph.1:21). God subjects the whole universe beneath His feet and gives Him headship over all. Peter, viewing this from the standpoint of the future kingdom on the earth, sets Him above messengers and authorities and powers (1 Peter 3:22). He cannot, from his standpoint, speak of sovereigns being subjected, for as yet Satan holds his heavenly place and is supreme above all earthly powers. But we can see that even Satan, though he seems opposed to Christ, is preparing the apostasy predicted by God, which is the necessary prelude to the kingdom.

Messiah's headship over all the earth was a mystery long known and the delight of many an initiate in Israel. Now it is our privilege to anticipate and enjoy His heavenly honors, which were not revealed until His earthly headship seemed hopelessly deferred. The coming Kingdom awaits the repentance of His earthly people, but His spiritual kingdom waits for naught. We, His celestial saints, already realize, by the spirit He has given us, what it means to be rescued out of the authority of darkness and to be transported into the kingdom of the Son of His love (Col.1:13).

These thoughts, these kingdoms, do not clash. The future realm to be set up on earth replaces earthly kingdoms. He will rule His people as the Son of David and all others as the Son of Mankind (Dan.2:44). The kingdom now in force is opposed, not to any earthly government (for we are bound to be subject to such), but to the spiritual overlordship of which Satan is the sovereign. It does not lead us to acknowledge Christ as David's or as Adam's Son (though we gladly hail Him these as well), but as the Son of God, the true Suzerain of the spirit realm. All hail to the Son of God, the Sovereign of the universe! All hail to His God and Father, Whose power has placed Him at the summit of creation!

HEADSHIP OVER THE ECCLESIA

Sin is not confined to the earth. It existed long before its presence in Eden's paradise. The heavens are not clean in the sight of the Deity. Sin has invaded the whole cosmos, and has drawn away a host of God's celestial creatures from allegiance to His will. God's great purpose to reconcile the universe to Himself (Col.1:20) implies that they have been alienated before they can be brought back. Enmity must always precede reconciliation. Before perfect friendship can be restored sin must be restrained. There must be subjection. The celestial realms must be administered as well as those upon the earth.

In the process of earth's restoration many are associated with Messiah in its administration. Only the saints of the Circumcision will have a hand in its government. The twelve apostles will rule the twelve tribes, the hundred forty-four thousand will wield the iron club among the other nations. Messiah will administer His millennial reign through the priest nation. So, also, will it be in His far greater celestial sovereignty. His body, composed of saints of this present secret economy, will be His subordinates, the executives of His throne. He is Head of all to the ecclesia which is His body (Eph.1:22,23). This body is the hope of heaven, as well as heavenly in its hope.

This is the key to high heaven's restoration. Christ's blood not only avails for all, but fills the throne of the universe with the dregs of earth. They become the wonder and amazement of the celestial throng, for they display the unfathomable depths of God's wisdom, the plenitude of His power, the overwhelming redundance of His grace and love. Through them, His name, His fame, will form the theme of praise from the pole star to the southern cross.

Here, then, we have the final arrangement necessary for a complete and finished universe. The earth is Messiah's footstool, and He will win it back to God by means of His chosen people. Then heaven, too, will be subject to His sway. The ecclesia which is His body is the means of its administration. Thus this becomes the "fullness that filleth all in all," or, more clearly rendered, "the complement of the One completing the all in all" leaves nothing still unattended to. It is the finishing touch which will round it out to its consummation.

The figure of the body is not new. Paul had used it before in writing to the Corinthians and the Romans. At that time he stressed the mutual relation and dependence of the members on one another. This is also the prevailing aspect in Ephesians, though it has now been made a joint body. In Colossians the salient feature is our relation to the Head. So it is in this passage in Ephesians. It is concerned with the transcendent greatness of God's power as displayed in the exaltation of His Christ to the place supreme. This is the power which is ours in Him. It has no parallel. It is appalling. Maggots of the dust are made the mightiest monarchs in the empyrean.

May this meditation aid us to grasp, in some degree, what is the transcendent greatness of the power which operates in this administration for us, for it is the same as the mighty strength which operated in Christ, and roused Him from among the dead, and seated Him among the celestials (Eph.1:19,20).

BOASTING IN GOD'S WILL

IN LIGHT OF our own pride it is well to remember the account recorded by Daniel concerning King Nebuchadnezzar: In His wisdom, God brought the great king to utter abasement, and caused him to make his abode with the animals of the field. He was shoved from among mortals, and ate herbage even as the oxen; his body became streaked with the night mist of the heavens till his hair increased as vultures' feathers, and his claws became as those of birds. God did this "to the intent that the living may know that the Supreme is in authority in the kingdom of mortals" (Dan.4:17), "and He gives it to whomsoever He will" (Dan.4:32). This was needed. For Nebuchadnezzar had said (and no doubt believed for many years), "Is not this Babylon the Great that I myself have built for the royal house with the might of my safeguarding walls and for the esteem of my honor!" (Dan.4:30). Yet "While the declaration was still in the mouth of the king, there was a voice that fell from the heavens: 'This has been decreed for you, King Nebuchadnezzar, that the kingdom has passed away from you'" (Dan.4:31).

Yet at the end of the appointed days, rather than complaining of this tremendous judgment, when his understanding returned to him, Nebuchadnezzar lifted his eyes to heaven in praise: "Then I blessed the Supreme, and I lauded and honored Him." The king found that God's jurisdiction is not an occasional thing but is "an eonian jurisdiction, and His kingdom is with generation after generation" (Dan.4:34). Nebuchadnezzar continued, "All those abiding on the earth are reckoned as naught; according to His will

He is doing with the army of the heavens and with those abiding on the earth. And there is no one who shall stay His hand and say to Him, 'What have You done?'" (Dan. 4:35). "Now I, Nebuchadnezzar, am lauding and exalting and honoring the King of the heavens, since all His deeds are verity and His paths are adjudication, and He is able to abase all those walking in pride" (Dan.4:37).

God is the Maker of good and the Creator of evil (Isa.45: 7). And, righteous is Yahweh in all His ways, and benign in all His works (Psa.145:17). To the illuminated believer, when he learns of God's wisdom and perceives His purpose, this becomes evident even in those things which are so terrible in themselves. It is not at all sinful for God to create those evils which are men's sins. Rather than this being wrong, in light of evil's necessary yet salutary ministry for permanent and universal good, it would be wrong were He to fail to do so.

If God is good, able, and knows what is best, and if it is best that evil should not exist, then it would be necessary for Him to make its existence impossible. For in order to retain one's attributes, one must act in accord with them. Since God is good, able, and knows what is best, and since evil does exist, it must be best that evil should exist.

If it is best that evil should exist, there can be no doubt—instead of leaving its existence to chance—that it is also best that God alone should create and superintend it. Otherwise, if it should even come into being at all, it might well dissipate before accomplishing its mission or, alternatively, overflow its bounds altogether.

Likewise, if we would experience good, it follows that God is the One best suited to determine the times in which we should enjoy it, and all the particulars attending it, lest our enjoyment of it be less than ideal or even never occur at all.

Would we not far prefer to have what is best according to the only and wise God, instead of what merely seems best in the eyes of shortsighted and sinful man?

Yet even these meditations concerning our own best interests must never be our main concern. The greatest thing—what we desire the most—is that all should be for God's glory and according to His purpose: "Yahweh has made everything for its own outcome" (Prov.16:4). "Out of Him and through Him and for Him is all: to Him be the glory for the eons! Amen!" (Rom.11:36). Our own unique experience of good and evil is only of secondary importance. Only in the wisdom and goodness of God, for His own glory, can we find our own perfect blessing.

FATALISM IS FALSE, EVEN AS FREE WILL

God is operating all. His operations, however, accord not with fatalism, but with the counsel of His own will. The divine will includes the human will. God's will does not eliminate man's will. To the contrary, it creates it. God imparts to men's hearts whatever is needed that they might do His "opinion," that is, whatever He has wisely concluded is best and has decided should occur.

This principle is well illustrated for us by the leading events which will occur in Babylon in the Lord's Day, during the time of the end, the conclusion of the eon. We read that the ten kings will be led by God Himself in their opposition to His will!

The messenger is saying to John, " 'These waters which you perceive, where the prostitute is sitting, are peoples and throngs and nations and languages. And the ten horns which you perceive, and the wild beast, these will be hating the prostitute, and they will be making her desolate and naked, and they will be eating her flesh, and they will be burning her up with fire, for God imparts to their hearts to form His opinion, and to form one opinion, and to give their kingdom to the wild beast, until the words of God shall be accomplished' " (Rev.17:15-17).

"The Jews in Babylon will be supported principally by the toil of the great masses in the Western nations. The enormous interest on the national debts will make the people comparative slaves of those to whom the interest is paid. When it becomes known that the greater part of this money is used by the Jews in Babylon for their luxurious magnificence, it will arouse the hatred of the peoples and the governments who are under a perpetual tribute, as there is no possibility of paying off the principal. This hatred will lead to the unanimous opinion that Babylon must be destroyed. The wild beast upon which Babylon rests, after being obsessed by the dragon, becomes her implacable enemy. This is God's means of destroying the apostates in Israel.

"By a bold figure of speech God is said to have an 'opinion.' The ten horns pride themselves in forming their own opinion and in carrying it out, when, as a matter of fact, they are obliged by the purpose of God to think and act as they do. Man is moved by ulterior motives. God provides these, and men, conscious only of their own selfish aims, accomplish His end. God wants Babylon destroyed: They gladly do it for their own sakes, not for Him."[1]

It is important to recognize that the truth on this theme repudiates fatalism as much as free will. The idea that God's will shall prevail and the things He intends occur without or regardless of our own wills is fatalism. This is not the scriptural position. According to God's operation of all, however, events do come to pass just as inevitably as they do according to fatalism. (After all, at least fatalism is not so foolish as to deny causality.)

Let us consider an example: A man is extremely ill with a terrible disease; apart from the power in his medicine (an excellent one), he will surely die. Yet, if he takes it, he will recover. And, God knows he will take it, and has even designed that he should do so, and then recover. The man is free to do whatever he wants. All these things are true. Thus it becomes obvious that apart from and except for man's essential choices and actions a given state of things cannot and will not be achieved.

1. Concordant Commentary, p.400; A. E. Knoch.

Under God's operations, what we choose and what we do are no less essential and vital than under the mistaken concept called "free will." Avoiding laziness and being industrious are just as important as we always thought they were. In the example, though the man will surely take his medicine, and cannot fail to do this, he is still free to do as he pleases. And, due to all the causal factors with which this is connected, whether heredity or early childhood training, internal or external considerations, inclinations or disinclinations toward certain things, or special immediate circumstances, the man will do this very thing, and not something else.

That which he does will be that which he wants to do, at least at that moment. Or at least it will be something connected with his wants, of which his actions are a consequence. It will be the product of all the factors, from within or without, distant or immediate, which cause him to act accordingly.

Prayer remains essential. Indeed, God will provide it whenever this is so. For many things are only given to us in response to our requests in prayer. It certainly is true that in many cases, not having been given to ask, we have not because we ask not. God graciously sustains us in any case, but for believers much of His provision is directly related to prayer.

Let us consider a further example: My child becomes injured in some type of accident. We are miles away from all help, and I do not know what to do to save his life, though one who was well trained to care for such injuries would know just what to do to take care of this matter ideally. Now I believe that since this has happened, ultimately speaking this is only because God has given us this experience. And I also know that in themselves all men are useless and incompetent, including myself. Yet if the proper emergency care is not given, my child will soon die. It should be added that I also believe God has already decided what is best. Whether my child should recover or not, God will bring to pass His own will in this matter.

In ourselves, my child and I are absolutely helpless. Actually our case is always this very way continually, apart from God's saving hand. We are always in need of salvation, whether for preservation or deliverance. Not at any time, nor in any situation, can we say, "I have no need of You." But we are often simply too unenlightened to realize this.

However, because God has given me at least some uprightness of mind, I do not want my child to die. Indeed, I cannot even bear the thought. Yet he will die if I do not do something about the matter immediately. It is not at all that he will either recover or die whether I do anything or not, or whether I do the right thing or the wrong thing. No, I must choose to do and then actually act to carry out the proper choice. Yet I do not even know what that may be! But God knows, and He is able. So being the person I am, as God has shaped me, I make my request—my urgent plea—known to Him. With much heartfelt concern and anguish, I ask Him, if it be His will (cf Matt.26:39), to cause me to do whatever is necessary to save my child, or that He otherwise provide for his deliverance.

Since I am aware that prayer is essential, I have not a thought toward the neglect of prayer. Besides, I love God and am glad to pray to Him. In fact, I instinctively cry out to my God, Who alone is able to save. Nor do I pause to entertain any fancies concerning the glories of free will, craftily asking the Deity to help me only in part, so that I might still remain the key to it all, and have a glory of my own, and a tremendous one at that! I am not interested in either fatalistic or freewill foolishness—I want my child to live!

Let us be no more fatalistic than autocratic. Let us make our plans and have our goals. And when we have made and even accomplished some of them, let us account for this as due to the providence of our God. For He is doing all things well. God's operations are concerned with all, all that exists and all that occurs. There are no exceptions to what is out of, through and for God, and to His glory. Indeed, the passages that declare this can have little practical value to us apart from this realization.

Though to the calumniator and to the immature our teachings may somehow appear to promote laziness and apathy in particular, and sinfulness in general, they actually do no such thing. Whatever weaknesses we have had along these lines may still remain in us, but they are certainly not made the worse by our faith. To the contrary, many have been given special strength through their reliance upon God alone, while recognizing that any good they may achieve is due entirely to His gracious work in them: "For our boasting is this, the testimony of our conscience: that in holiness and sincerity of God, not in fleshly wisdom, but in God's grace, we behave ourselves in the world, yet more superabundantly toward you" (2 Cor.1:12).

It is "not that we are competent of ourselves, . . . but our competency is of God" (2 Cor.3:5). To those who are "puffed up, one over the one, against the other," Paul says, "For who is making you to discriminate [differ]? Now what have you which you do not obtain? Now if you obtain it also, why are you boasting as though you do not obtain?" (1 Cor.4:7). In this way the apostle guides us to boast, like Nebuchadnezzar after his experience of humiliation, to boast in God's will and the glory of His ways. Only such convictions as these can deal effectively with our pride and reliance upon the flesh. They afford us a special happiness which we can otherwise never know.

ACCORDING TO THE PROMISE

Let us now consider Paul's allegory, based upon the story of Hagar and Sarah, which he places before the Galatians (Gal.4:22-31). As a preface to his allegory, however, the apostle first declares, Tell me, you who are wanting to be under law, are you not hearing the law? For it is written . . . (Gal.4:21,22a).

That is, if the Galatians wished to become such ardent devotees of the law, Paul would ask them only to comply with its own dictate (viz., Drive out this maidservant and her son; Gen.21:10), as recorded in the story of Hagar and Sarah, of Ishmael and Isaac. Essentially, the story teaches that works of the flesh, under a system of bondage, rather than being the key to God's allotment, are the lock which debars entrance into God's allotment.

The allotment which the Galatian believers longed for (even as we ourselves who are believing today) was salvation out of this present wicked eon (cf Gal.1:4), and salvation into glorious life and joy, in the presence of Christ Himself, in the oncoming eons.

Paul would have us know that God has promised this allotment to us, doing so in His grace. He chose us for it before the disruption of the world (Eph.1:4), in accord with His own purpose and the grace which is given to us in Christ Jesus before times eonian (2 Tim.1:9). Accordingly, He has designated us beforehand for it (cf Rom.8:29), having not appointed us to indignation, but to the procuring of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Thess.5:9).

The allotment of life eonian is our expectation, not merely our hope, for it is Gods gracious gift to us (cp Titus 3:7; Rom.6:23). Thus it is that Paul declares that we who now are blessed according to his evangel, even as Abraham, Sarah and Isaac of old, are "enjoyers of the allotment according to the promise" (Gal.3:29). That is, we are enjoyers of the allotment which God has for us according to the promise which He has made to us (cp Titus 1:1,2).

This is the evangel of our salvation. The evangel is not at all the foolish notion to the effect that if (and only if) we will keep the law satisfactorily (or otherwise engage in sufficient upright behavior) we then will be granted eonian life.

CHRIST'S SUPREMACY

ON such a sublime subject as this we cannot take less than the whole Bible for our text. Not that we shall do more than lightly touch upon certain portions of it.

So uniquely exclusive are the claims of Christ that they will not be satisfied with a mere percentage of our time, or our thoughts, or a portion of ourselves. ALL it demands, and ALL it will ultimately possess. "Eventually, why not now?" The place that Christ is given in modern literature is that of an ALSO rather than an ALL. Suppose an allusion is made to the great religious leaders of the world. There you have the catalog: Buddha, Krishna, Confucius, Muhammad, Moses, and somewhere in the middle of the list, or maybe at the tail end, an allusion to Jesus. To the modern literary and religions world He is one of many. Know here and now that you cannot say He is good. He must be BEST. You cannot say He is great. He must be GREATEST.

The supremacy of Christ in the Old Testament is a prophetic one. That supremacy lay enshrined in the promise that Eve's Seed would crush the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15). For more than a thousand years that one verse was the Bible Prophecy of the race. We now have Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Daniel and a host of others, but for many centuries the human race had just one little verse of prophecy. We have John's great Evangel and Paul's mighty exposition to the Romans, but all the evangel the race had then was contained in a sentence or two. Little do we appreciate the overflowing abundance of revelation with which we are blessed. Those sentences however were pregnant with as yet unuttered truths concerning the Coming One's supremacy. This verse was revelation. All succeeding prophecy and gospel was but added explanation.

The reader is familiar of course with the way Hebrews 12:24 brings out the supremacy of Christ's shed blood in contrast to that of murdered Abel. The latter cried aloud for vengeance, but the former petitioned for peace. What marvel is this, that the blood of a murdered man may shield his murderers from the penalty of their crime! History gives us no comparison. Christ is supreme over all analogy!

Again, was not His unique supremacy shown forth in the ark? Ark, mind you, not arks. It was not one ark amongst many. You had no choice in the matter. It was the ONE ARK or NONE! Nor did that one ark have two doors—only one. And when Christ Himself was speaking He did not say "I am A door" as if He were one of many, but I am "THE door" (John 10:7,9). He gave His hearers no alternative choice. When the law was given it made a demand that none but the Supreme One could comply with. The types in their incompleteness required a sacrifice which none but He could offer. The prophecies are silent without Him, and the Psalms lack music and meaning.

The New Testament opens with an account of His antecedents. Some of them we would gladly expunge from our records. If Rahab were in our family you would not find her name in the family Bible. Nor would we care to perpetuate the remembrance of Uriah's wife. Yet there they are, and the remainder of the New Testament shows how gloriously supreme was Christ over all His antecedents.

Herod plots, but He is supreme over the enemies' plotting. Satan himself appears at a later date, but He rises supreme over every bribe to leave the pathway of obedience. Again, through Peter, does the Serpent hiss out his suggestion to avoid the cross, but He rises supreme once more and cries "Get thee behind me Satan!" (Matt.16:23).

And then upon that mount where He was transfigured, we see Moses and Elijah and Christ, but the first two dissolve and leave the Master supreme. The disciples, we read, "saw Jesus only" (Matt.17:8). Reverse the words and you describe what He means to a world that sees in Him "only Jesus."

And now let us look at what seemed the eclipse of His ministry. The cross itself was like a burning glass that focussed a myriad scattering rays into a scorching point. The "fiery darts" of the Adversary must have been showered upon Him by His envenomed antagonist. Not a possible weapon in all of Hell's offensive armory but was employed in this the last crushing attack upon the defenses of His soul. Listen now to that word "Father" as it comes from torture-wrung lips commending His spirit to His God. "Father" He cries (Luke 23:46), and rises in majestic supremacy over DOUBT. "I claim Thee as Father" cries the Suffering One "in spite of this cross, this darkness, and this pain."

Let us listen again. "Father, forgive them" (Luke 23:34). Thus, did He rise supreme over MALICE. They had scourged Him, and mocked Him; their spittle smeared His blessed person; and they had nailed Him to the tree. "Now," Satan would suggest, "get even with them!" "Father, forgive" is the Sufferer's reply.

And that mystery of God's silence through it all! The heavens seemed as brass. They had opened before, at Jordan, and upon the mountain. God's voice had come proclaiming the divine Sonship of the Man. And now the Man needed God as He had never needed Him before. And Heaven was silent! "Father"—thus does He rise supreme over the silence of God.

If the Gospels reveal to us the story of His personal supremacy, the Epistles continue to reveal its rising tide. In Romans we have the righteousness of God in Christ rising superior to the unrighteousness of man, and the grace of God rising supreme over human sin. Consider all the wars and murders, and lies, and uncleanness, and what a vast filthy ocean of sin it is. Yet over all this the justifying grace of God rises supreme. The supremacy of His wrath as revealed in Revelation is but auxiliary to the supremacy of His righteousness as displayed in Romans.

In Colossians the grace of God in Christ rises over the creature's enmity and hatred. Through His Son, God reconciles the universe unto Himself. In 1 Corinthians the life of God in Christ rises supreme over death in its every aspect. The supremacy of His life is such that it will quicken the Universe and expunge death from His domains. Lastly we remind ourselves of Philippians—the heart of the New Testament writings—and there we learn anew of Christ's supremacy. Then, in that scene of universal worship and praise, the Christ of God will not be one amongst many; the Supreme One of Calvary will be recognized as Lord in all His gracious and glorious supremacy "to the glory of God the Father" (Phil.2:9-11).

He will be supreme THEN.

It is our privilege to recognize His supremacy NOW.

REPOSING

Born deep in lumber country, Charles Willis Booher (1920-2022) worked Oregon's mills, fished her coastlines, and with his wife Dorothy, raised a big family, reveling in the truth of the evangel. Late in his life, Chuck liked to tell people that "if we are believing that Jesus died and rose, thus also, those who are put to repose, will God, through Jesus, lead forth together with Him" (1 Thess.4:14). "It's just that simple," he'd add. Dorothy was happy to explain that her favorite scriptural word was All.

Chuck and Dorothy Booher were beloved to a cohort of believers who learned of concordant truth through their faithfulness and suffering in the evangel—"appearing as luminaries in the world, having on the word of life" (Phil.2:15). Chuck was put to repose on January 27, 2022—his one-hundred and second birthday. Dorothy predeceased him by twelve years. This is the epitaph on their gravestone in the Comstock Cemetery, Curtin, Oregon: "Asleep until we are called to rise to meet our Lord in the air."

THE SINGULAR FAITH OF CHRIST

"THE FAITH OF CHRIST is brought before us in the otherwise enigmatical statement 'from faith to faith' (Rom.1:17 AV). Literally this is 'out of faith into faith.' There are two faiths in view. The latter is our faith; the former is Christ's. Justification is founded on His faith; it is conferred on our faith . . . . Hence we find the statement (which is so often referred to us who believe) 'the Just One shall live by [His] faith.' This refers to One only, not many or all, however aptly it may be 'applied' to them . . . .

"Just as it was in Abram's case, faith and righteousness are inseparably linked together. Not only that righteousness will be ascribed to us as it was to Abraham when we, too, believe God, but the faith of Jesus Christ is always put as the basis out of which this blessing flows."[1]

So wrote A. E. Knoch in 1916. Such clear and positive application of this verse to Christ as the Just One of Habakkuk 2:4 must have been surprising to say the least. (Yet several theologians in Germany and England had made similar claims, and surely other students of the scriptures had understood and taught along this line independently without leaving a written record. For indeed the context of Romans and the parallel with Romans 3:21,22, as well as the grammar give the strongest of support to this application).

However, when the first edition of the Concordant Version was published in 1926 there were no initial capital letters on "just one" and no indication in the explanatory notes for verse 17 that Christ was in view. Nevertheless, the note for Romans 3:22 read as follows:

1. Unsearchable Riches, vol.7, pp.266,267.

"The channel through which we may obtain this righteousness is the faith of Jesus Christ. He alone of all mankind, not only did good and kept the law, but He believed God even when He smote Him for our sins. It is out of His faith for our faith (Rom.1:17)."[2]

Finally in 1938, in an article entitled "Jesus Christ's Faith," Brother Knoch explains how he came to this understanding.

"I do not remember ever reading of Jesus Christ's faith until I began to read my Greek text. Then it impressed me very much in my studies of the third of Romans. Nevertheless I was rather diffident in regard to it and said little until I was forced to translate this phrase in the version. Then the question arose, Am I mistaken as to the force of the genitive here? It does not seem possible that it denotes the faith of others in Him, as usually rendered, but perhaps it denotes the faith, or body of belief, which is derived from Him, not His own believing.

"But it is not a translator's duty to interpret, yet he ought to preserve distinctions, especially in connection with such an important matter as faith, so there was no way but to bring over the genitive into the English, leaving the student to decide this by means of consistent renderings."[3]

Later in the same article (p.380), Brother Knoch takes up the matter of Christ's faith in relation to Romans 1:17, under the heading OUT OF FAITH INTO FAITH: "It is only as we take it of Christ in the first place, the Just One because of His faith (though He did not need to be justified from sin through faith), the source of the revelation of God's righteousness, and make our faith the object (as the grammar of the Greek), that we can understand that,

2. These notes are presently published separately from the Version as the CONCORDANT COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT.
3. Unsearchable Riches, vol.29, p.375.

in both cases, a just one is living by faith. Indeed, the word just is in the singular here, as it is in Habakkuk 2:4, so that its first application may be to Christ Himself."

THE RIGHTEOUS ONE ALONE

It will be noted that there was less certainty about the "just one" in the 1938 article than in that of 1916. Earlier Christ alone was identified as the Just One. Later, albeit in the first place, He is presented as sharing this title with the believer (which is still an advance over the long-held view which sees the believer only in Romans 1:17). There are two faiths in Romans 1:17a (this is correct and the only understanding that accords with the whole context. "Out of faith" points forward to "the Righteous One, out of faith" and "for faith" back to "everyone who is believing.") But are there two singular just ones in 17b? This cannot be. God's evangel as promised before through the prophets in the holy scriptures concerns God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord (Rom.1:1-4). So also the evangel of Romans 1:15-17, which as verse 16 makes clear is the evangel of our salvation spoken of in Ephesians 1:13, concerns God's Son. The revelation of God's righteousness is "out of" (sourced in, founded in) Christ's faith. The promise of the Just One in Habakkuk 2:4 concerns the Coming One of Habakkuk 2:3 (as rendered in the Septuagint, cf Heb.10:37,38). It is "out of" His faith that He is to be living. (It is best to use the English word "righteous" in Romans 1:17b to show its association with the word "righteousness" in 17a. It is the Righteous One Who, by His faith and obedience unto the death of the cross, reveals God's righteousness in all its purity and power.) The singular designation, the Righteous One of Romans 1:17b refers to One alone, and that is God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Paul speaks in the singular of that One's singular and flawless faith.

Brother Knoch wrote of this faith often without identifying it by the term, "Christ's faith." A good example of this is the following where this is seen in Gethsemane and then on the cross.

"It is evident on the surface that the latter part of our Lord's ministry was weighted with His impending doom, which even caused a clash between Himself and one of His disciples. But it is not till we reach Gethsemane that the veil is torn aside and we get a glimpse of the awfulness of the cross as it affected His fellowship with God. Hitherto the will of Christ was in perfect parallel with that of His Father. True, He did not do His own will, but He acquiesced in the divine will cheerfully and with His whole heart. But now He begs the cup pass from Him. His will was not at all in line with the will of God. But the will is not the final arbiter. The heart may furnish motives deeper and more powerful. So He adds 'Not My will, but Thine, be done' . . . .

"We are now concerned only with those most mysterious and terrible of all His sufferings, the loss of fellowship, the averted face, the active hostility of God Himself, which wrung from Him the orphan cry 'My God! My God! Why do You forsake Me?' The terror of those three hours of darkness when the Sun of His life was hid from His soul surpasses the power of the pen, yet the psalmist compares it with the power of fire and water and the sword."[4]

This is Jesus Christ's faith. Paul presents this faith as the mindset[5] of humbling himself and of obedience which is in Christ Jesus "Who, being inherently in the form of God, 4. Unsearchable Riches, vol.15, page 134,135.

5. The word "disposition" which the CV used in previous editions is not misleading, and serves well concordantly. But in its present usage it speaks of a mental tendency, while the relatively new English word "mindset" is more in accord with the word "faith" with regard to a settled conviction (cf Heb.11:17).

deems it not pillaging to be equal with God; nevertheless He empties Himself, taking the form of a slave, coming to be in the likeness of human beings, and found in fashion as a human, He humbles Himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Phil.2:5-8).

OUT OF FAITH INTO FAITH

We have thus seen that Romans 1:17 speaks of Christ's faith, first of all by the words "out of faith" and then by the words 'the Righteous One, out of faith." God's righteousness is being revealed out of Christ's faith. Its revelation is sourced in Christ's faith in His God and Father even unto the death of the cross. (We can understand why some who see this use the word "faithfulness." Indeed true believing involves faithfulness to what is believed. Our own faith does not appear to reach this standard. But the point is that Christ's faith does.) Then (in Romans 1:17b) this is repeated as it was promised in Habakkuk. Christ Jesus as the Righteous One lives out of faith, that is, His faith is the source of His living when He emptied Himself and came in the likeness of humanity unto death, and when He was roused from among the dead ones, no longer dying, but living to God (cf Rom.6:12; 1 Cor.15:14,20).

This evangel of Christ's humiliation, suffering and death is what we are believing. It is only that most believers have not seen this evangel here in the words "out of faith," and none of us perhaps have seen it as clearly and fully as it is presented here in connection with other wordings of God's evangel. We have a great way to go in tracing out the prominence and dominance of this message.

Now let us review some of the evidence that Romans 1:17 directs attention to Christ's faith, doing so for our faith:

1. God's evangel concerns His Son (Rom.1:1,3). We should expect that in telling us he was not ashamed of the evangel, Paul would make reference to God's Son.

2. So also, where God's evangel was promised before through His prophets the promise would have concerned God's Son. Indeed without parenthesis the words "concerning His Son" are connected directly to such a promise. If the evangel concerns God's Son, the promise would concern God's Son. So already we see that Habakkuk 2:4 concerns God's Son; it is a "Messianic" promise.

3. The remarkable parallel of Romans 3:21,22 with 1:17, extending to their associated verses, matches "God's righteousness revealed" with "God's righteousness manifested" and "out of faith" with "through Jesus Christ's faith" among other parallels. Clearly Romans 3:21,22 takes up in repetition and expansion what was said in 1:16,17 after the long section on God's indignation and righteous judgment of Romans 1:18-3:20. What is in view in 3:21,22 is surely in view in 1:17, and a consistent understanding of Paul's presentation of God's evangel directs us to understand the words "Jesus Christ's faith" as a reference to His humbling Himself to the death of the cross. It is in this that God's righteousness is made known.

4. But not only does this open up the critical connection of Romans 1:16,17 with 3:21,22, but it opens up the harmonious connection between the opening chapters of Romans with chapters 5-8. The teaching to which we have been given over (Rom.6:17) is God's evangel concerning His Son ("apart from law," Rom.3:21). It is the message of the Righteous One's faith, which says (in one later wording of God's evangel), "God is commending this love of His to us, seeing that, while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sake" (Rom.5:8).

It is not our faith that reveals and manifests God's righteousness, putting it on display. It is the Righteous One's faith, God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord's faith in dying for our sakes that reveals God's righteousness in His operation of the justification of the irreverent. (The believer's faith is flawed, yet, in God's grace, it is the channel through which God reckons already to us what Christ Jesus gains for all). Consequently whenever we read of Christ's faith we should see God's evangel concerning His Son.

This is true of the three citations of Habakkuk 2:4, twice in Paul's letters (here in Romans 1:17b and then in Galatians 3:13) and once in Hebrews where the Septuagint version of Habakkuk 2:3 is reflected along with 2:4 (Heb.10:37, 38). It is true of the passages noted in A. E. Knoch's 1916 and 1938 articles where the noun "faith" is followed by a reference to God's Son, our Lord in the genitive case (faith of Him, that is, His faith). These are: "Jesus Christ's faith" (Rom.3:22); "the faith of Jesus" (Rom.3:26); "the faith of Christ Jesus" (Gal.2:16); "the faith of Christ" (Gal.2:16); "faith of the Son of God" (Gal.2:20), "Jesus Christ's faith" (Gal.3:22); "His [Christ Jesus, our Lord's] faith" (Eph.3:12); "the faith of Christ" (Phil.3:9); and "the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ of glory" (James 2:1). To these may be added "My faith" (Rev.2:13) and "the faith of Jesus" (Rev.14:12).

These passages where Christ's faith is explicitly stated are expanded by other passages where only the word "faith" or the phrases "out of [Christ]," or "through [Christ]" appear in their contexts. Without attempting to defend this claim in any full way, I would like to trace some of these passages as indicated by the proposed Concordant Version of the New Testament.

ROMANS 2:16b

Starting with Romans 2:1 Paul writes of the revelation of God's righteous judgment which stands in contrast to the revelation of God's righteousness made in God's evangel of salvation sourced in the Righteous One's faith (Rom.1: 1-17). There is no salvation in God's righteous judgment which is based on what the human being does in accord with the standards of law. For both Jews and Greeks are all under sin; not one is righteous—not even one (Rom. 3:9,10). Out of works of law, no flesh at all shall be justified (Rom.3:20). This was a foregone conclusion already in Romans 2:16a where it is declared that in God's righteous judgment even the hidden things of human beings will be taken into account.

It is at that stern and bleak point almost exactly halfway through the long dissertation of Romans 1:18-3:20 that Paul inserts the cryptic words "According to my evangel, through Jesus Christ" (Rom.2:16b). In all the 63 verses of this diatribe this is the only use of the word "evangel" and the only reference to Jesus Christ by any terminology. Paul interrupts his consideration of God's indignation on and judgment of human irreverence and righteousness with the shout (surely he shouts!) of Romans 2:16b. The desperate need of humanity's salvation and of the revelation of God's righteousness is the third reason Paul is not ashamed of the evangel: (1) it is a message of salvation. (2) In it God's righteousness is revealed. (3) The human situation is hopeless and God's righteousness remains a mastery without solution apart from this evangel.

Paul cannot wait to bring us back to Romans 1:16,17, when he has reached the terrible truth of Romans 2:16a, and before he has finished its application to the Jews. He turns toward his readers face to face and declares with his full soul "According to my evangel [which is God's evangel for which I am severed], [God's righteousness is manifested] through [the faith of] Jesus Christ!" In this way he connects Romans 1:1-17 to 3:21-26 and beyond.

There is no room for boasting in Paul's evangel. There is no place for human beings to make a contribution. There is no human "part." And Paul is not ashamed of it as much as the religious person thinks it is shameful.

ROMANS 3:3-8

There is one more positive connection of Romans 1:18-3:20 to the resumption of the evangel in 3:21. Near the close of this dissertation, Paul contrasts God's faithfulness with the Jew's unfaithfulness and God's righteousness with Jew's unrighteousness (Rom.3:3-8). Here Paul draws attention to God's righteousness, which was introduced in Romans 1:17 and is about to be given detailed consideration starting with 3:21.

God's righteousness in His judgment of the Jews is not God's righteousness in their salvation when "all Israel shall be saved" (Rom.11:26) and the Rescuer comes out of Zion and God eliminates their sins (Rom.11:26,27).

Paul points in Romans 3:3,4 to the testimony of God's oracles to God's faithfulness as a matter of being true (Psa.116:11), associating this faithfulness of God with His righteousness (Rom.3:5) as was done in Psalm 143:1. All this prepares us for Romans 3:21-22. All humans beings, including the Jews, are sinners who stand in need of God's righteousness now manifested through Jesus Christ's faith in His death for their sake, that faith through which God's faithfulness to all His promises is assured.

[21] Yet now, apart from law, God's righteousness has been made manifest[◦] (being attested[◦] by the law and the prophets), [22] yet God's righteousness [made manifest] through Jesus Christ's faith [io]for all (and on all [ˑ]who are believing it), for there [l]is no[t] distinction, [23] for all sin and are wanting[◦] of the glory of [ˑ]God.[6]

This is an extremely important passage where every point is critical to our understanding and appreciation of God's evangel. It does not stand alone but collects from what has been said and directs forward to what follows. The parallels with Romans 1:16,17 assure us that this is the evangel of which Paul was not ashamed, being resumed after 1:18-3:20 which is not evangel but which makes the evangel so very good and welcome.

6. This is the translation of the proposed CVNT except I have added in brackets the words "made manifest" in verse 22 as probably to be understood. D.H.H.

The "yet now" tells us that the passage speaks of something in contrast to what has been said in 1:18-3:20 (except for the exclamatory interjection of 2:16b).

The "apart from law" explains why Paul said he was not ashamed of the evangel (Rom.1:15), for law had been so essential to God's message to Israel that had dominated previous scripture. So we are now being brought to a new and fuller understanding of justification (explained in 3:24) which had been greatly limited to "the doers of the law" in 2:13, and in 3:20 declared to be an impossibility.

What is now being evangelized (but previously attested) is first of all that God's righteousness has been made manifest. This directly repeats the happy announcement of 1:17 that God's righteousness is being revealed in the evangel. And this leads forward to what is said in Romans 3:25,26 concerning the display of God's righteousness, and is even brought back into the picture in Romans 9:30-10:13 where Paul considers Israel's present stumbling and future rescue.

But now, God's righteousness is being revealed and has become manifest in the evangel being heralded by Paul. It is apart from law, although attested by the law and the prophets. Paul had previously noted this at the beginning of this epistle. God's evangel for which Paul was severed was promised before in the holy scriptures. In particular Paul cites the prophet Habakkuk and soon he will turn our attention to Abraham and his experience in Genesis 15 as a type of what the evangel says about faith.

THROUGH JESUS CHRIST'S FAITH

With this reminder in view Paul returns to the matter of God's righteousness which has been made manifest through Jesus Christ's faith. The preposition "through" replaces the "out" of 1:17 but was prepared for in 2:16b by the phrase "through Jesus Christ" and continues in 3:24 by the words "through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus." God's righteousness has been made manifest through Jesus Christ's faith which led Him to the cross and thus is the means of deliverance from sin and death and to the expectation of the glory of God, of which glory we all are now wanting (that is, lacking), as sinners. All human beings sin, and all are now wanting of the glory of God. So it is that the manifestation of God's righteousness is through Jesus Christ's faith, which speaks of the deliverance which is in Him, in His suffering and dying, is "for all." This accords with Romans 5:18,19 where we read, "Consequently, then, as it is through one offense for all human beings for condemnation, thus also it is through one righteous response [to God's will] for all human beings for life's justifying. For even as through the disobedience of the one human the many are constituted sinners, thus also through the obedience of the One, the many shall be constituted righteous."

A PRESENT SALVATION

The justification which manifests God's righteousness and comes through (and is sourced out of) Jesus Christ's faith is for all as must be if it is a righteous operation. It is presently on (but not yet in) all who are believing, who are sealed with holy spirit of promise which is an earnest of the enjoyment of our allotment to the deliverance of that which has been procured (Eph.1:13,14) through the faith of Jesus Christ. This is a matter of present salvation given to those who are believing it (Rom.1:16). Justification is reckoned to us (as it was to Abraham in view of what his Seed would do, Rom.4). We have a special salvation as believers. But the salvation itself is because we are part of the all for whom Christ died. God is the Saviour and this is due to Christ's faith.[7]

God's judgments are righteous, but in that no one is saved through them, they do not reveal or manifest or display God's righteousness. It is made known out of and through Christ's faith. Thus not one will be left out of this justification—not even one.

It is thus that God's righteousness has been made manifest. In that Christ dies for all, all die (2 Cor.5:14). The old humanity is put to death, proleptically to be sure, but certainly in God's own time, for it is through Christ's faith, in dying for the sake of sinners.

There are special callings along the way (and most transcendently gracious is ours in Christ), but all shall be vivified in Christ, and God shall be All in all (1 Cor.15:22,28).

D.H.H.

7. This is also true of Israel, but their special salvation in the promised, terrestrial kingdom, is granted on faith and backed up by signs and miracles and works of law.

WITH FAITH AND EXPECTATION

Three widows of "Concordant" teachers, rejoicing in Paul's evangel and the salvation of all, have recently been put to repose in faith and expectation of the time when we will all be together with our Lord.

Helen Niemeyer died September 22,2022 at the age of 92. She, her husband Fred and their family immigrated from the Netherlands to Ontario, Canada in 1959 already believing in God's ultimate purpose.

Susanne (Friesen) Goerzen was born in the Ukraine and lived much of her youth in Siberia. She was enabled to immigrate to Alberta, Canada after World War II, where she met and married Jacob W. Goerzen. Supporting him in domestic matters and in faith, they raised seven daughters. She died January 19, 2023 at age 97.

June Bowerman aided her husband, Leonard, in a ministry in Lansing, Michigan, joining with him as he grew in understanding of God's grace and purpose. She died at age 96 on June 12, 2023.

FAITH PERFECTED

THE UNFOLDING FAITH of Abram went through many phases before it was perfected by the offering of his only son, Isaac (James 2:22). Each of these had a special quality and has been characterized by giving it a name. We will copy these, and seek to improve on them if possible. The obedience of faith brought him to the promised land (Gen.12:4). The humility of faith gave Lot the first choice (Gen.13:8). By the strength of his faith he conquered the kings (Gen.14:15). The firmness of faith enabled him to believe when all hope of an heir seemed futile (Gen. 15:6). The boldness of faith led him to intercede for Sodom (Gen.18:23). In the joyfulness of faith he named the son of promise (Gen.21:3). By the loyalty of faith he submitted to Sarah, and expelled Hagar and Ishmael (Gen.21:14). In the gratitude of faith he planted a tamarisk (Gen.21:33). In its perfection he offered up his only son (Gen.22:2).

It is said that the Canaanites, among whom Abraham dwelt, made a practice of propitiating their deities by sacrificing their dearest possessions, even their children (2 Kings 3:27). But, in his case, it seemed to be directly contrary to all of Yahweh's previous promises, besides being an only son, the fruit and fulfillment of faith. Yet many tests had shown him that God could even bring back from death. He himself had been deadened before he generated Isaac. Abraham was quite prepared to actually slay his son, for he reckoned that, even so, God was able to rouse him from among the dead (Heb.11:19). Thus we are given a parabolic representation of the important fact that the chosen nation is the fruit of faith, and the resurrection power of God, but not of the flesh.

PROBE, NOT TEMPT

The AV reading, that "God did tempt Abraham," may have been allowable when it was first translated, but, like, "lead us not into temptation" (Matt.6:13), it throws a dark shadow on the divine character. Elohim was not inducing Abraham to act contrary to His will, but was probing him to prove to all concerned that be would obey Him, even when it was contrary to his own desires. His reaction to this test entitled him to his high place among those who are famed for their faith (Heb.11:17).

MOUNT MORIAH

Mount Moriah was the eminence on which the temple of Solomon was later built, where millions of sacrifices were offered, which prefigured the supreme sacrifice of God's Son. It may have included Golgotha, the place of a skull (Matt.27:33, Mark 15:22, Luke 23:33, John 19:17), which is north of the highway which borders the temple area. Otherwise, it is not clear why it was necessary to travel the long way from Beersheba, perhaps a two days' journey northward, to where Jerusalem now is. Ordinarily an altar could be built in any location. Doubtless Abraham had one near his tent, and offered flocklings upon it, for Isaac knew of this (Gen.22:7). The distance is given as fifty-four miles. But, as it is measured by days, a time period, each of them may represent an eon, for the Lamb of God was sacrificed in the middle of the third of the five eons, that is, in the symmetrical center of the eonian times.

THE ASCENT APPROACH

The character of the offering is of prime importance here, for Abraham possessed God's righteousness, and had no need of a sin-, or a trespass-, or even a present-approach. Being justified by faith, there was no necessity for one of these. He had access into the divine presence, so required no approach gift. The only one he could offer was an ascent approach. It is remarkable, and most significant, that the ascent approach comes before us in Genesis only when Noah (who also was a just man) brings it after the deluge, and in this passage, when Abraham offers Isaac and the ram (Gen.8:20; 22:2,3,6,7,8,13). It all ascended to God as an act of pure worship, and may be brought only when there is no need for minor sacrifices, or when they have already been offered.

Today, such an ascent approach can be brought only by those believers who know that, in Christ, all the other sacrifices have been offered for them, and there is nothing to hinder them from worshiping God, not even their shortcomings and failures. These His divine alchemy transmutes into His own righteousness, for He uses them as a foil to reveal the opposite in Himself.

WORSHIP

Abraham's faith assured him that, even though he should offer up Isaac as an ascent approach, his son must later be alive to fulfill Yahweh's promises concerning the seed, seeing that "In Isaac shall your seed be called." "He reckoned that God is able to rouse him from among the dead, also, whence he recovers him in a parable . . ." (Heb.11: 18-19). This is evident from his words to the two lads who were left behind: "We will worship and return to you." (5). Usually, Abraham is represented as terribly distressed, his heart sorrowing in anticipation of the loss of his son, and shuddering at the thought of shedding little "Laughter's" blood. But that is not the reaction of faith. That is the fruit of unbelief. No, he seems to have given no sign of unbelieving trepidation, because he had the assurance that, whatever he did, Isaac must live to fulfill God's promise.

ELOHIM WILL SEE

They went together, Isaac carrying the load of wood, while his father had the fire and the knife. Isaac evidently realized that they were about to offer a sacrifice, so was perplexed as to the victim, for that prime essential seemed to have been forgotten. Very diffidently, he asks permission to speak. When his father assents, he points out that they have the wood and the fire for an ascent approach, but no flockling. His father's reply was such as no one without perfect confidence in the Subjector could have expressed: "Elohim will see for Himself . . ." (8). He knew that this must be so, but how it would be done he could not say, and he did not venture to express a conjecture. It was doubly fulfilled, once at the time, by a divinely provided ram, but not fully till the death and resurrection of the great Antitype, God's beloved Son, our Saviour.

The usual reading, "God will provide himself a lamb" is not warranted by the text. Isaac did not see any sacrifice. Abraham did not say that Elohim will provide one (Isaac), but that He is seeing, or will see, this apparent lack, and implies that they mast leave that to Him. He saw the ram (and He saw the Lamb), but they could not.

It is hard to imagine how Abraham could help being perturbed while making the actual preparations; building the altar, arranging the wood, trussing LAUGH-causer, stretching out his hand, taking the knife, and—but he is not allowed to raise it, for a voice calls out his name repeatedly: "Abraham! Abraham!" Thus, at the last instant, the Subjector, having attained His object, reverses His previous command: "You must not stretch out your hand on the lad, and you must not do aught to him . . ."

FEARING GOD

Even in this day of transcendent grace, we are exhorted to carry our salvation into effect with fear and trembling (Phil.2:12). So long as we are in our mortal flesh we cannot help having a holy awe in view of the fact that, apart from faith in Christ, and reliance on God's grace, we are not able to do a single thing or speak one word, with absolute confidence that it measures up to the divine ideal, and is perfectly acceptable to our Creator and Subjector. To do that which we ourselves would doubly dread to do, in fact would not dare to do, at the divine behest, must have a powerful motive. No man could have persuaded Abraham to sacrifice his son. Only the fear of Elohim could cause him to commit such a murderous deed as this.

GOD PROVIDES

As Abraham had told Isaac, Elohim saw the need of the sacrificial victim, but it was not a flockling, as Isaac proposed. There were different grades of ascent offerings, which correspond to the faith of the offerer. The highest was taken from the herd, the second from the flock, the third from the flyer. Elohim's opinion of Abraham's faith, and the value He put upon His offering is shown by the ram which He Himself had foreseen. This was the highest, for it closely foreshadowed the supreme sacrifice of His Own Son on Golgotha (Lev.1:2,10,14).

EVIL

This transaction has a close bearing on the so-called problem of evil. Was it good or evil for Elohim to charge Abraham to do this? Was it not an evil merely to truss up his son and then act as if he were about to murder him? But this was only a typical preview of that future scene in this very vicinity, in which Elohim's own Son was not merely trussed up, but cruelly crucified, not only menaced with a knife, but pierced with a lance head, and not simply threatened with death, but actually forsaken by His Father and left to die. This, the greatest evil ever committed, was due to the deliberate decision of Elohim, so that it could actually be rehearsed here long before it took place. Yet, out of this, the greatest of all evils, will come the greatest and grandest good.

THE ANTITYPE

Such a memorable place as the scene of Isaac's sacrifice deserved a name, so Abraham calls it Yahweh-irae (Yahweh-is-See-er) which implies, not that He merely observed Abraham's offering of Isaac, but that He saw the ram which Abraham saw and sacrificed later, and He also "saw" the future Antitype, His only begotten Son, which was to be seen later in this mount. This led to the proverb "In the mount of Yahweh it will be seen." (Gen.22:14). It can hardly be interpreted as Yahweh sees, or is seen, or appears. He was not Himself present, but sent a messenger. Even the following promise, perhaps the most memorable and magnificent that Abraham received, was relayed to him through a mediating messenger. In the great Antitype, Christ Jesus, He already saw the sufficient Sacrifice, fore-ordained before the eons, ample for all.

At Beersheba (WELL-SATISFY, or -oath) Abraham had sworn by Elohim. Now, however, that Yahweh swears to Abraham, by whom can He swear? Men swear by a Greater, but there is no greater one than He, to swear by, so He swears by Himself (Heb.6:13). No assurance can be more certain than that. And no list of Abrahamic blessings can be greater than that incorporated in this oath. Being based on faith, it includes all who believe, not only his physical seed on the earth, but also Abram's innumerable celestial star-seed as well.

THE STAR SEED

Abram was assured of a seed as numerous as the stars on two occasions. After the conquest of the kings and the blessing of Melchizedek, and after the refusal to take any of the goods of Sodom, when Abram feared that he would have no heir, then he is told of a numberless star seed (Gen.15:5). Then it was that he was justified by faith. Later, once again, after the severest test of his faith, in the offering of his son, the promise is renewed (Gen.22:17). It seems clear from this that the star seed is connected with his faith, and consists of that great and glorious company who believe God during the eons, as Abram had done, not merely those of His physical progeny, many of whom did not believe. As was most fitting, this promise was renewed to Isaac, when he was about to go down to Egypt (Gen.26:4).

THE SAND SEED

On this occasion Abraham is also assured of a sea shore seed (Gen.22:17,18). This is most appropriate, for it was not a question of the faith of Isaac, but of his physical life. No doubt he did believe, and may belong to the star seed. Yet it is as sand seed that Israel will rule over their enemies in the kingdom. But it is principally as believers that they will bless all the nations (Gen.22:18) in the day of Yahweh. Later this promise is repeated to Jacob, when he feared the wrath of Esau, as he was returning to the land, as he recalls this promise (Gen.32:12).

CELESTIAL

The secret of a celestial seed (1 Cor.15:51) was not made known to Abraham. The soil of the land and the sand of the sea may suggest their presence on the earth. Abraham's name is brought in nearly twenty times when justification by faith is taught and enforced in Paul's preparatory epistles. This grand theme is illustrated in the fourth chapter of Romans by seven references to the patriarch (1,2,3,9, 12,13,16). To sum up, we are told that the righteousness which was reckoned to him will be reckoned to us also, who are believing on Him Who rouses Jesus, our Lord, from among the dead. But nothing is said of any further blessing, beyond this, among the celestials. It is only after the celestial calling is revealed by Paul, that we see the aptness of this illustration when referring to the saints in this secret administration.

In Galatians we may see the same truth, when in conflict with the flesh. Circumcision signified the cutting off of the flesh. They were trying to make it the completion of the flesh (3:6,7,9). Here, again, the blessing is confined to the justification of believers of the nations. This is the blessing of Abraham which comes to the nations by faith. The law, which came later, and the present celestial blessings do not subtract or add to the justification by faith that we have in common with Abraham (14,16,18,22,29).

THE GATE OF ENEMIES

Israel according to the flesh, the soil and sand seed, did not always tenant the gateway of its enemies (Gen.22:17). This picturesque phrase is based upon the fact that the elders, the rulers of a city, sat in the gateway. They held court there and ruled the city from its entrance. Literally, faithful Israel is to govern its foes, and thus be at peace. The reason they have not always done so is that this promise is limited to those who had inherited Abram's faith as well as his flesh. In the days of David and Solomon, who had this faith, this was the case. And it will be so in the future when Israel, as a nation, will accept its Messiah. Even today we can see the plight of the Jews in unbelief. Even though they are the sand seed, they are threatened by their enemies because they refuse to put their faith in the Messiah Yahweh has given them.

Beersheba (Bar-shbo WELL-oath) was the southernmost city of consequence in the land of Israel. Indeed, "from Dan to Beersheba" is the common phrase for the whole length of the land (1 Sam.3:20). It lies in the center of the Negeb, or south rim, on the regular road through central southern Palestine to Egypt. It remained the headquarters of the patriarches, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, until the latter went to Egypt. Now it seems to be once more within the boundaries of the nation of promise. Dan is also inside the northern boundary, so they may speak of having the land from Dan around to Beersheba, though much of that lying between, including ancient Jerusalem, is in the hands of their bitter enemies.

DEATH OF SARAH

Sarah, like Abraham, must have been rejuvenated when she bore Isaac, for she was beyond the normal age for childbearing. So she lived on to the age of a hundred and twenty-seven years. It seems that Abraham no longer lived in Beersheba, but somewhat northeast of it at Arba (Arbo FOUR), sometimes called Kirjath (Kirth CALL, town) of Arba, or Arba-town. It is here identified with Hebron (Chbr-un JOINed), in the foothills that lead up along the road to Jerusalem. It was in the land of Canaan (Knon SUBMITter), given to the grandson of Noah (Gen.9:25). The inhabitants were descended from Heth (Chth Dismay) whose name seems to indicate that they were daring and defiant men, who would be difficult to deal with.

ABRAHAM BUYS A TOMB

Abraham calls himself a sojourner and a settler, not a "stranger," as the AV has it. The word sojourn comes from STIR, to move about. But he was not continually moving either, and seems to have remained in some locations for a long time. This would give him the right to ask for a tomb, for he could hardly carry a corpse with him. But he wanted a permanent possession for a tomb, so he asks for a holding. Land tenure in the Scriptures is of various kinds. The principal methods were tenancy and holding. Israel as a nation never acquired, or bought, or owned, or held, or possessed, the land, for it belongs to Yahweh Elohim, and they were only tenants at His pleasure, and were evicted when they did not serve Him, and will never be safe as long as they refuse their Messiah.

A tomb should not be a transient abode. It should last until the resurrection. Abraham did not get a temporary tenancy, but acquired (23:17) a holding (23:4,9) and weighed out four hundred shekels (250 ounces') of silver (15), which confirmed it (17) as his. It included the field of Ephron (Ophr un SOIL-er), in which is the doublet cave which is adjoining Mamre (Mmra CHANGE or Bitterness) with all the trees in its boundary by acquisition, before the eyes of the sons of Heth to all entering the gates of the city. Is there any other transaction of this kind in the Scriptures in which such extraordinary emphasis is laid on its permanence? What a contrast to the rest of the land, which had been promised to him, of which he did not own enough to place one of his feet? And several hundred years had to elapse before his seed could take over its tenancy.

In conclusion, may we look beyond the picture presented by Abraham and Isaac, to the inaugurator and Perfecter of faith Who, for the joy lying before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now seated at the right hand of God (Heb.12:2). Isaac was only a type, a dim shadow of the One Whose faith led Him to descend from the highest heights of glory to the deepest depths of shame, and has called us to share the fruits of His faith with Him, by blessing us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials (Eph.1:3).

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, THIRD QUARTER 2023
BEING THE THIRD NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED FOURTEEN

EDITORIAL

THE MOTTO of this magazine is "For God and His Word," and in accord with this A. E. Knoch writes that "The end and aim of all things is the revelation of God" (p.109). Taking up the astounding passage of Ephesians 2:1-10, our brother expounds on the glories and transcendent riches of grace of the joint allotment for the members of the body of Christ.

So also, James Coram writes of the word of "the deity of God, His sole subjectorship" and of the making known of this truth (p.113). "If we would do well to emphasize and keep before us the truth of our security in Christ or the ultimate salvation of all, why should we not be similarly edified by a constant awareness that all things are of God, especially in light of the ever present practical importance of this revelation?" (p.116).

Much of the last two articles center on Romans 3:21-26. However, there are differences in detail between them especially regarding the faith in view in verses 25 and 26. Brother Knoch writes from the CV as he had "compiled" it (just as he does of course in his first article), and I write from it as presently rendered in my revision which is given on page 134 (the revision of Ephesians 2:1-10 is also given on page 99). The whole matter revolves around the question: Whose faith is in view in its five uses in Romans 3:21-28? And this applies also to Ephesians 2:8 (as well as further passages in Romans, Galatians and other places). It was A. E. Knoch who introduced this matter of Christ's faith in the pages of this magazine (see its development as traced in volume 107, pages 49-63 along with later testimony of others throughout this second quarter issue of 2016). Yet he did not extend the thought much beyond those passages where our Lord is specifically referred to as the subject of faith. Yet now that further evidence such as that of the Septuagint translation of Habakkuk 2:3,4 indicating a Messianic interpretation of that prophecy and a reexamination of the grammar and the contextual development of Paul's thought, it seems apparent that often when "the faith" or even "faith" by itself appears it refers to Christ's faith.

This is so important that the words "the faith" in Romans 3:25 are rendered as "'His faith" in the CVNT and a lightface "His" is inserted in the translation of Ephesians 2: 8 (see my article entitled "Whose faith?" in volume 112, pages 111-118, Unsearchable Riches, second quarter, 2021).

This of course calls for adjustment not only in translation but in many of our explanations of the relevant passages. The CV has always made it clear that "faith of Jesus Christ" in Romans 3:22 refers to His faith, and should not be rendered "faith in Jesus Christ" as done by many modern English versions.

So also we ought to read Romans 3:25 as speaking of Christ's faith and the suffering of His soul (which is in the blood).

Accordingly, whenever I hear or read the words "justification by faith" I mentally insert reference to Christ, whether as God's Son, or Jesus, or the Lord, or combination of designations to Him, thus: "justification by [Jesus Christ's] faith." In certain cases I suggest in footnotes, how I would adjust Brother Knoch's wordings, while leaving his own wording intact in the article itself. In doing this it is my hope that we may be growing in appreciation of God's evangel.

SEATED AMONG THE CELESTIALS

> "And you, being dead to your offenses and sins, in which once you walked, in accord with the eon of this world, in accord with the chief of the jurisdiction of the air, the spirit now operating in the sons of stubbornness (among whom we also all behaved ourselves once in the lusts of our flesh, doing the will of the flesh and of the comprehension, and were, in our nature, children of indignation, even as the rest), yet God, being rich in mercy because of His vast love with which He loves us (we also being dead to the offenses and the lusts), vivifies us together in Christ (in grace you are ones having been saved!) and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials in Christ Jesus, that in the oncoming eons He should display the transcendent riches of His grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus. For in grace are you ones having been saved through His faith, and this is not out of you; it is God's approach present, not out of works, lest anyone should boast. For His achievement are we, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready beforehand, that we should walk in them."

THE exaltation of Christ is God's most notable exhibition of power (Eph.1:19-23). Let us remember that we are reminded of it in order to give us an intimation and an example of God's power on behalf of those who believe. If the Head of the body is exalted, then the members must be likewise. The power that raised Him has raised His members also. It is to this aspect of the present grace that we now address ourselves. As in the first chapter of this epistle, there are two classes here, you, the Uncircumcision, and we, the Circumcision, both of whom believe Paul's message and, because of the utmost grace which it displays, are united by its reception.

The long and involved sentence (Eph.2:1-7) which presents this truth has been a trial to translators. They usually insert hath he quickened (AV), or did he make alive (RV). This is quite correct, yet a true rendering of the rest of the sentence requires the repetition of these words in the fifth verse. It is better to leave it as it is in the Original. The connective also is confused. It is simply the dative case, not in your (AV) or through your (RV) trespasses and sins, but to your offenses and sins. Both in and through suggest a period when each individual actually sins, whereas the passage deals with two classes in relation to sin in the abstract, whenever committed. As a matter of fact we were dead to the sins in the death of Christ, but not dead in or through them until after our birth.

It is true that Vaticanus has added the preposition in when dealing with the Circumcision, making them "dead in the offenses and the lusts" (Eph.2:5). As this reading is not well supported, and may easily have been added after the truth had been lost, we have decided that it also should read "to." The in should be omitted. It is not an individual death recurring each time a sinner receives the evangel, but a figure embracing all who are in the body of Christ. It took place concurrently with the fact of Christ's death and His vivification and rest at God's right hand. Death is a figure of oblivion. We were oblivious to our sins when Christ died and was roused and vivified and seated in the heavens.

To get the controlling thought of the passage, let us leave out the secondary clauses. "And you . . . we also [3] . . . God [4] . . . vivifies us together in Christ [5] . . . and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials [6] . . ." It is, in fact, an expanded statement of the second item of the mystery—the joint body—and, by the repetition of the Greek sun (together or joint), enlarges on the fact that Jew and Gentile are united in death and vivification, and are seated together in Christ among the celestials.

In connection with the joint allotment, we were chosen in Christ before the disruption of the world to be holy and flawless in His sight (Eph.1:4). Our saintliness was ours in God's purpose long before we had sinned. So it is with this grace also. When Christ died, we died with Him. When He was roused and vivified, we were in Him, and we ascended and sat down among the celestials in Christ Jesus. Let us not blur this marvelous truth by imagining that all this occurs for each individual after becoming dead through sin, or in trespasses. Death is oblivion. We were dead to everything before we were born. All these high honors were ours before we could make or mar them. They are absolutely independent of our conduct.

JEW AND GENTILE JOINED IN DEATH

"The love of Christ is constraining us, judging this, that if One died for the sake of all, consequently all died" (2 Cor. 5:14). It is impossible to view the death of Christ aright without coming to the conclusion that the One Who bore its bitterness was not receiving His own deserts, but suffered on behalf of others. In its effects, His death was not only for them, but was their death in relation to sin and to offense. In this reckoning there can be no discrimination between Jew and Gentile, for death allows of no degrees. This is the sad yet solid basis on which our equality with the Circumcision rests. A dead Jew is no better than a dead Gentile! His advantages disappear in death, yet all the more in His death, which ought to have repealed every promise or benefit ever conferred on the Circumcision.

Death is the great equalizer. The death of Christ, involving the death of all others, is the one plane on which the Circumcision can claim no preëminence. Yet it is not death in the absolute sense which is in view. It is death relative to sin, to offenses, to lust. These things, if allowed a place, would debar us from all blessing. It is marvelous to escape the consequences by faith[1] in the blood of Christ. But it is ineffably more precious to realize that God thought of us before we were sinners and bestowed all these rich benefits and high honors upon us long before we proved our utter unworthiness of them by our life. The power, the wisdom, and the grace thus revealed are calculated to draw out our most heartfelt love and ardent adoration.

Once more the common version obscures this precious truth in verse 2 by translating pote, as in time past, and periepatêsate, the indefinite walk, by the past walked. The Revisers corrected the first, but not the second. Dating from the death here spoken of, our walk was future, rather than past. With reference to the present it is past. So it is well expressed in the aorist, which we indicate by prefixing a horizontal bar to the verb form "walked," since "once walk" may seem odd in English. The only possible way to express the truth is to render it "in which once you ¯walked."

A slight inaccuracy in translation has robbed us of the grand truth of our death to sin in His death. It has substituted the popular but erroneous "dead in trespasses and sins" and applied it indiscriminately to all sinners, who are not in view in this connection at all.

We are now called upon to consider the conduct of those who form the body of Christ, before they believe. In keeping with the theme, the walk of the Gentile is treated separately from that of the Jew. The nations are under the influence of the world and the evil spirit of the air; the Jew was influenced by the flesh and the comprehension. The possession of the divine oracles seems to have separated them from the world and shielded them from the spirit operating in the Gentiles, yet they were just as stubborn and equally subject to the divine indignation. Their great advantages increased their responsibility rather than lessened their offense.

1. In context Paul speaks of Jesus Christ's faith as in v.22 as expressed in His blood, (see p.138) D.H.H.

THE EON OF THIS WORLD

The present is a wicked eon (Gal.1:4) because it coincides, in time, with a world, or kosmos, or system of things which is opposed to God and devoted to the deification of man. Both the eon and the world began after the deluge, and will end with the change in the constitution of earthly affairs brought about by the advent of the Son of Mankind. The two terms, eon and world, are not interchangeable, but they synchronize. The time occupied by each world is its eon, and corresponds in character with the kosmos with which it is associated. The point is that the members of Christ's body were all born at a time when the world was estranged from God, and they became a part of it and were in harmony with it. They were, by nature, introduced into the sphere which deserves, and will yet receive, the divine indignation. This is in contrast to God's previous purpose for them in Christ.

There is a sense in which this charge was not true of the Jew, for he moved in a modified "world," or order of things, in which God was at least superficially recognized. Instead, the charge against him is that he conducted himself in line with the flesh (Eph.2:3). The Gentile was surrounded on all sides by that which made him an enemy of God; the Jew found the enmity in himself. Consequently, he also was "by nature," a child of indignation. The difference between the two is one of externals. The system into which the Jew was introduced by birth was largely divine, and had his flesh responded to it, he would not have entered into the same condemnation as the nations.

Let us avoid the false deduction that there is something radically wrong with human "nature" or instinct. If that were the charge, it certainly would be just as true of the Gentile as of the Jew. The phrase "by nature" in this passage merely limits the thought to natural processes, apart from the operation of grace. Human instinct, or "nature," is not corrupt. It is still arranged against sin (Rom.1:26). By the correctness of their instinct it is actually possible for the Uncircumcision to exceed the Circumcision in fulfilling the law's demands (Rom.2:27). It is a law written on their hearts (Rom.2:14). Scripture knows nothing of an "old nature" or "new nature." Our natures do not make us children of wrath. The Jews were such, not because of their instinct, or nature, but by the natural process of birth and upbringing.

Let us not imagine that the nations are left to themselves. They, like the Jews, are under the influence of unseen spiritual powers. God made Himself known to Israel, and gave His Word to guide them. Their lack was mental. They did not understand Him. Their darkness was in themselves. The nations are also led, and pursue a path chosen for them by a higher power. Since Eve hearkened to the serpent, until the dragon is chained in the abyss for a thousand years, the real sovereign of the earth is the chief of the aerial jurisdiction, the spirit now operating in the sons of stubbornness (Eph.2:2); his is the hand that reaches "through darkness, molding men." He who first estranged mankind from God has arrayed it against its Maker ever since; he is the great deceiver of the nations. One of the chief blessings of the thousand years is the withdrawal of his deceptive influence over humanity (Rev.20:3).

The hateful history of mankind may be summarized, in a sense, by that strange statement, "Satan entered into Judas" (Luke 22:3). After that he became the medium of the Adversary and betrayed his Lord. So it is with the nations. They are unconsciously the puppets in the hands of unseen spirit powers, which are urging them on to oppose or counterfeit all that is of God and of His Christ. Latterly they have even succeeded in enlisting the nominal church in the schemes for human betterment and aggrandizement, which God plans to perform only through His Christ in the coming eon. Mankind is stubbornly against God and His Word, not because of a defective or sinful "nature," but because of the superior spirit forces which control its actions.

Sometimes there is actual "possession" or obsession by demons. These extreme cases serve to show what is true of all in a more moderate degree. The victim does not follow his own bent or volition, but is forced to act as the demon dictates. In ancient times the nations seem to have had a clearer consciousness of this, for they worshiped and served the demons, as the arbiters of their destiny. The apostle warned the Corinthians that "that which the nations are sacrificing, they are sacrificing to demons and not to God" (1 Cor.10:20). With this agrees the psalmist, "They also sacrifice their sons and their daughters to demons" (Psa.106:37).

Our Lord connects the demons with the dominion of Satan (Matt.12:26). They are probably under his jurisdiction. There is no hint that they are heavenly beings, for they seem always associated with the earth. Their ascendency and possession of humanity will cease when the Kingdom of God is established on the earth. When the sixth bowl is emptied, demon spirits are sent out to mobilize the kings of the whole inhabited earth for the battle of the great day of God Almighty (Rev.16:13,14). As a result the next bowl is poured out on the air, and great Babylon is overthrown, to become the dwelling place of demons and a jail of every unclean spirit. Thus the air is cleared of the unclean spirits which have mobilized mankind against God from the beginning (Rev.18:2).

The various divinities of ancient and modern times are too often dismissed as mere figments of a vivid imagination. Yet Paul assures us that there are many gods, though, for us, there is only One. The spirits of the air are real beings, into whose charge Satan has put the details of human affairs. God's messengers will not accept divine worship (Rev.22:9), but these demons crave the worship of their dupes. They can perform real miracles, as is evident from the power of Jannes and Jambres, who withstood Moses. We are distinctly told that they will do so in the future, to induce earth's kings to mobilize at Armageddon. To most of mankind the supernatural is a synonym for the divine. Hitherto these spirits have been accorded the worship of the greater part of the race. The goal to be gained is to bring all to the worship of the dragon, their chief.

The fact that the Jews as well as the Gentiles are children of indignation is fully sustained and exemplified by the fearful judgments in the book of Revelation. The few who are faithful are shielded from God's wrath, but the apostates of the chosen nation are overtaken by judgments more terrible than those which visit God's displeasure on the nations. Thus, once again, we have the Circumcision leveled with the Uncircumcision. They are both sunk in sin. God's purpose operated on their behalf when they were dead to these sins. Salvation is not an afterthought with God. He plans to save, and uses sin to make it possible. We were dead to sin before we became dead in it or through it. This is Godlike and grand. It is a fitting foundation for the gracious structure which is built upon it.

In tremendous contrast to the conduct of the members of His body is the career of Christ Himself. He came into this sinful eon, but was not carried along by its current. He met the chief of the aerial jurisdiction, who appealed to His flesh, but failed to swerve Him from His fealty to God. Far more than this, on Golgotha He was made sin in order that we may become God's righteousness in Him. He brought God, as it were, under such heavy obligations, He has enriched Him with such a vast store of glorious wealth, that God is engaged to recompense Him for His work. His deserts are high, yet not higher than His rich reward.

God rouses Him from the dead. He gives Him immortality. He seats Him at His right hand among the heavenly hosts. Glorious to relate, the Jew or Gentile whose faith lays him low with Him in death—both were roused and vivified and seated together with Him. This is the fullest expression of God's rich mercy, the supreme revelation of His vast love! (Eph.2:4-6).

It is not merely together with Christ, however. It is the believing Gentile together, conjointly, with the believing Jew. The mother of Zebedee's children could form no greater wish than that her two sons might sit one on His right, the other on His left, in His Kingdom. He could not promise that. But suppose this, the highest earthly honor, were given to a gentile cur! How excessive were such grace! Even as the heavens are higher than the earth, so also is His heavenly throne exalted above His earthly sovereignty. And this, the loftiest place in all the universe, is reserved for an election out of the nations as well as a remnant out of Israel! Surely they will have the honor of His right, and we shall revel in a place subordinate at His left! Not so! We are peers in these celestial dignities! We are not merely members of His body. We are fellow members. It is a joint body. This is the secret! This is the truth that God concealed from previous generations! As members of the joint body of Christ, the believers among the nations are of equal rank with those out of Israel who are chosen for this high honor.

Leveled in the dust of death, the physical differences which divided us have passed away. This exaltation is an exclusively spiritual grace. The flesh has no place in it at all. We are not members of "the body of Jesus." He has a glorious physical frame. He has flesh and bones as real as our own. But we are in Him only in His official role, as God's Anointed, Christ, the Messiah. We are members of the joint body of Christ. We cannot claim kinship to Him, like Israel. We are joined by the one spirit, which is our common life.

Let us note that the secret here revealed is not "Christ Mystical," by which is meant the figurative body of Christ. That had been made known years before to the Corinthians (1 Cor.12) and to the Romans (Rom.12:5). These earlier uses of the figure of a body were by no means intended to bring out the heavenly equality of the nations. The figure was confined to the spiritual relations of individual saints to one another in their behavior down here on earth. That body is not a joint body. Christ is not seen as its Head. This is the same figure—a human body—but it is now applied to the relationship of the two great classes, Jew and Gentile, and makes Christ the Head. The same Christ, the same apostle, the same saints, the same body, but the relationship of each is rearranged to reveal the secret hitherto unknown.

SAVED IN GRACE AND FOR GRACE

The parenthetic ejaculation of the apostle, "in grace are you saved!" is one of those high pinnacles of faith that few ascend. Our translators, in rendering it "by grace," have not reached any higher than that elevated peak in the Roman epistle. Were it in the text, we would gladly expatiate on the marvels of such a salvation. "Therefore it is out of faith, that it may accord with grace" (Rom.4:16) deserves a sermon by itself. But we must not allow it to rob us of this far greater grace, which is much more in keeping with the transcendent nature of the context. Literally, we read that it is to grace. Salvation by grace is past. Salvation in grace is our present and future position. There are glories awaiting us which are ours as freely and gratuitously as the gift of life when we believed.[2]

There are many who wish to work for salvation. They cannot have it on such terms. Many who have it by grace, through faith,[3] imagine that all further blessing must be earned by their own efforts. There will be a reward for faithful service, but this could never include the supernal glories which are in store for us. These are the common lot of all who are members of His body, not because of their attainment, but because God's love gives it to them before they had any deserts, either good or bad, and apart from their faithfulness or service.

It will help us to realize the gracious character of God's dealings with us if we forget ourselves for the moment and consider one of His motives in this lavish outpouring of His favor. The end and aim of all things is the revelation of God. In order to display His attributes He first allows mankind to discover its weakness and folly and hate in the past and present eons. Then He intervenes, and in the coming eon He discloses His power and wisdom and love in His mercy to Israel and to the nations. The fruitful earth, with curse restrained, will teem with plenty. What an exhibition to show what He can do! Yet in that day, and in the still more glorious eon when a new creation reveals His heart in far fuller measure, what will be His most prized gem of grace? Will He point us to these scenes to learn the power of His love? Not so. He points us not to them. He points them to us!

2. Unsearchable Riches, volume 31, pages 141-142, deals with the grammatical evidence for our rendering "in grace" in Ephesians 2:5,8.

3. Whatever the measure of grace, it is surely based on Christ's faith. D.H.H.

FAITH FINDS FAVOR

The oncoming eons will be freighted with blessing, yet they will look to us to learn the transcendent riches of His grace. Such a redundant wealth of favor is not an outgrowth of the grace that has saved us. It does not spring from our efforts. It is not a reward for our faithfulness. It is naught of ours. It is God's oblation, not of works, lest anyone should be boasting (Eph.2:9).

It is precious to ponder the goings of grace. Full of comfort is the fact that righteousness flows from faith,[4] apart from works. Moreover, where sin abounds, grace superexceeds. Grace reigns! For us there is no condemnation. Being justified, we shall be saved from future indignation. Whether watching or drowsy, we shall live together with Christ when He comes. All these footprints of grace are good—far better than we know. Yet they are only the symptoms and beginnings of the amazing grace which the future shall unfold. All of these leave us naught to boast of. And so shall be the future favor. It is God's oblation. He alone will be able to boast.

The use of the word dōron, oblation, commonly confused with a simple gift, is a most exquisite and appropriate touch of the Divine Author. It is a special gift offered to win another's favor. It is the equivalent of the Hebrew corban (Mark 7:11). This is the approach offering, or oblation, of Leviticus 1:2. It was not concerned with sin, but was intended as a present with which those who approached the Divine Majesty sought His favor. This is the term applied to the gifts of the wise men (Matt.2:11). Is it not astounding to discover that, far from God's favor depending on our oblations, He has turned the tables, and makes that very favor His oblation by which He wins our regard! This, we submit, is grace beyond our fathoming.

4. Once again faith refers to Christ's faith, for our faith. D.H.H.

HIS ACHIEVEMENT

To everyone who knows a little of the plague of his own heart, and has a hint of the impotence of his own hands, there is intense satisfaction and exultation in the contemplation of ourselves as His achievement. We do not feel worthy of taking His name upon ourselves, and consider our own efforts at self-improvement so far from our ideal that the less attention drawn to us the better. But this is not our permanent condition! It is the best preparation for that future day when God Himself will be proud to own us as His handiwork, the highest specimens of His skill.

We have been created for good works, which God makes ready beforehand in order that we should be walking in them (Eph.2:10). Our desire to render acceptable service shall be gratified. It may not be fulfilled on earth, for this is not the normal sphere of our activities. What good deeds are these for which we have been created? What employ will be ours as the glory-laden eons roll their bounty to the feet of God? How strange that we, who look to spend the eons with our Lord, should have so little knowledge of our future work! All we need to know is what is His employ. If we learn this, then we have the knowledge that we seek. So intimately are we one with Christ that His official duties are ours as well. An unselfish interest in His work and exaltation is enough to stir our hearts to study this. But when we see that He is not alone in all He does, that we share in His activities, how much the more should we search the future glories that are His!

This is the alchemy that transforms the dull and heavy page of prophecy into a program of intense delight, a bulletin of future bliss. More blessed is the blesser than the blessed. So, if we read of blessing that is not for us, we share the happier portion of the blesser. Not only is the future fully known to God, but every detail has been prepared and arranged by Him to fulfill the purpose of the eons. Our every step is chosen for us as for a child who follows in his father's footsteps across a muddy street. We do not need to scheme and plan to improve the condition of mankind. Our Head has done all this in His own inimitable way, and He, unlike poor creatures such as we, can carry out His plan. He will not waste His efforts now, but do it in its proper time, through the instruments He has chosen and fitted for the task.

We do not need to scheme and plan our own work for Him, as though we were "workers together with God," as the common version mistranslates. We are not fellow workmen by any means. He is our Master. We work for Him. He lays out the task we are to do. Our wisdom lies in conforming to His plan, in seeking light from Him at every step, in order to achieve the consummation of His purpose. Let us exult that He has prepared our good works for us and created us in Christ Jesus so that we are competent to perform them.

Thus closes the divine discussion of the second item of the secret. Jews and Gentiles had already been closely associated by Paul's evangel. They were members of the body of Christ. But now that Israel as a nation is temporarily repudiated, all blessing is based on spirit and transferred to celestial realms. This relieves the Circumcision believers of their preëminence, based on flesh, and puts all the members of the body on the same plane of transcendent grace. There is no figure in nature to illustrate this. The members of the human body are variously esteemed. Some are far more honorable than others. So a new figure must be invented to adequately set forth this most glorious grace. It is called a joint body, in which each member is equally and preëminently exalted, in order to display the transcendent riches of God's grace.

HERALD THE WORD!

THERE ARE TIMES when the Word is held back rather than heralded. For example, some believers who hold to the teaching of the ultimate salvation of all feel that even though the teaching of the deity of God, His sole subjectorship, is true, its being made known will be more of a hindrance than a help to those to whom it is proclaimed. Although this teaching is considered important, they tend to set it aside. And even when it is considered in some measure, they may not speak of it with the openness and depth which other teachings enjoy.

It should not be assumed that there is never a place for such an approach, especially when we consider the dangers attending human pride when antagonized. Moreover, the power of tradition is great, and if we would contend against it, we must do so carefully and wisely. Indeed many of us, to our shame, have sometimes been imprudent and ungracious in sharing the Word of God with others. Yet though the importance of the manner in which we present truth must not be minimized, it should not be an excuse for not making the truth known.

Our motive for so doing is very important as well: Do we seek to glorify God and build up our brethren in the faith, or do we seek to exalt ourselves while being unmindful of the feelings of others? This is not to suggest that reserve is to be our constant companion. But there is a time for everything.

An extensive printed exposition such as the present work, which is prepared for the purpose of teaching and of encouragement in faithful service, can hardly have the advantages which are afforded private words among friends. So we commit it, as well as ourselves and all our brethren, to God, "and to the word of His grace which is able to edify" (Acts 20:32).

Things good in themselves, and very helpful to some, may not be helpful at present to those who are not yet ready for such "solid food" (1 Cor.3:2). "Now solid nourishment is for the mature, who, because of habit, have faculties exercised for discriminating between the ideal and the evil" (Heb.5:14). The ideal is to be "pursuing that which makes for peace and that which is for the edification of one another" (Rom.14:19). It is not that we are to be seeking peace at the price of truth, but that peace is to be our desire and active pursuit, for it is essential to the welfare of all. Still, there is a time, as Paul found with the immature Corinthians, when it becomes needful to present vital revelations in a plain way, even at the risk of offense.

Some have said it is inadvisable to make various teachings known to young people, certainly including this one, as if it were somehow better for them to be instructed in error, or at least left to its influences. Surely this is a mistaken approach, for all scripture is beneficial (2 Tim. 3:16), and the sacred writings are founded upon and filled with this teaching.

We seek to give no one cause to stumble in anything, even if we should fail in this at times. Besides, we can only serve others well, or at all, where God opens a door, an "operative" one (cf 1 Cor.16:9; cp Col.4:3). This is all we wish to do, having no taste for iconoclasm, or desire to disturb anyone. Yet it is important for us all to remember, "He who is not with Me is against me, and he who is not gathering with Me is scattering" (Matt.12:30).

THE STRUGGLE

Wherever truth of such great importance is opposed or neglected, in God's wise counsels there always seems to be a struggle involved in making it known. And there is always a danger, due to the pressure of having been critically perceived as doing so, that in our own weakness we will indeed be driven to the point of overemphasis or of becoming reactionary, or at least somehow become less than edifying in our presentations. Yet if this should occur, it would be more helpful if criticism—constructive criticism and support—could come from those who freely teach the truth. We trust that where God gives us grace to present this truth in wisdom, in a good spirit and with patience, there will be little danger of actual overemphasis. Indeed, boldness is needed, and, so is loving-kindness.

By practicing protracted reserve and employing ambiguity of expression out of loving concern and a fear of offending certain ones, we fail to provide the instruction which is vital to the growth of those whom God may graciously enable through instruction to think sensibly and fairly, and receive the clear declarations of Scripture. Boldness is not without draw-backs, yet it has a great many advantages. These thoughts are not presented as a criticism of any approach, but as observations taught through experience.

It is a very difficult task to herald and teach the word concerning these matters. "And for this, who is competent?" (cp 2 Cor.2:16). May God be adapting us to do His will, "doing in us what is well pleasing in His sight," that we may be offering divine service to Him (cf Heb.12:28; 13:21).

Let us not assume that some teachings are just "too dangerous" to be helpful. There is not a major revelation of Scripture which some have not appraised thus. Though it has often proved dangerous for truth to be placed in the hands of foolish men, in itself it is error, not truth, that is dangerous. Indeed, if men will wreak such havoc from the possession of truth, what will they do when entrusted with error?

If we would do well to emphasize and keep before us the truth of our security in Christ or the ultimate salvation of all, why should we not be similarly edified by a constant awareness that all things are of God, especially in light of the ever present practical importance of this revelation?

If indeed we do live our lives by these principles, we also need to make this known to others in order to set an example and to help them do the same. In order for the heart to be touched, the mind must be instructed. Otherwise, we can do no more than "put on a fair face in the flesh" (cf Gal.6:12).

THE PHARISEES AND THE GALATIANS

This is the very point of the Lord's figure, "whitewashed sepulchers," concerning the hypocritical Pharisees: Outside, indeed, they are "appearing beautiful," yet inside they are crammed with the bones of the dead and all uncleanness. "Thus you, also, outside, indeed are appearing to men to be just, yet inside you are distended with hypocrisy and lawlessness" (Matt.23:27,28). Paul told the Galatians, "So foolish are you? Undertaking in spirit, are you now being completed in flesh?" (Gal.3:3). The Lord's order of things is, "Cleanse first the inside of the cup and the plate, that their outside also may be becoming clean!" (Matt.23:26).

Those whose arrogance is apparent do not even have a fair face, and do not even appear to men to be just. It is those who seem modest who are found commendable. Pride and self-righteousness, however, are not at all confined to those who are offensive and constant in talking about their own virtues and generally obnoxious about it, but include as well all who appear humble in manner but who nonetheless fail to believe that all good character, especially their own, is solely due to the grace of God, without any help from man. The self-righteous are those who "have confidence in themselves that they are just" (Luke 18:9). For this reason, though they may well go through the motions of thanking God for their virtues, practically speaking and to no small degree, they pray these things toward themselves (Luke 18:11).

They boast of "letting" the Lord work in them, and insist on having a "part" in it all, especially in the formation of personal uprightness. When all that God will do for them is finished, their salvation remains unfinished, awaiting their help to turn defeat into victory. Many are, so to speak, glad to travel "the sea and the dry land to make one proselyte" (cp Matt.23:15), zealously proclaiming, "Christ is the answer" while singing of "victory in Jesus," but do they actually believe it?

The truth is, nearly all believe that it is not Christ at all, but some type of human cooperativeness that is the final solution to weaknesses of the flesh. Similarly, stripped of outward forms and nominal claims, victory is actually seen to consist not in the all-sufficient grace which is in Christ Jesus, but in the independent power that is said to inhere in the human will.

Such an approach is the essence of popular Christianity, ancient and modern. In fact, these are the Pharisees and Galatians of today. They may be friends of the Lord, but they are "enemies of the cross of Christ" (Phil.3:18). They are opposed to the sufficiency of Christ's sacrifice in effecting salvation, and are antagonistic toward the glorious consequences which it alone ensures. For they boast of what they have done to be saved from wrath, or at least of what they must contribute if they would avoid an unworthy walk. "Now may it not be mine to be boasting, except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Gal.6:14). May it not be, through this present exposition, as with the Galatians toward Paul, that I "have become your enemy by being true to you" (cf Gal.4:16).

The Galatians had been "bewitched" (Gal.3:1), they were "under a spell" and in "the trap of the Adversary, having been caught alive by him, for that one's will" (2 Tim. 2:26). They had been transferred from the evangel of grace which Paul had first taught them, to a very different message (Gal.1:6), one in which the flesh had a vital place, that of "finishing up" what Christ had left undone.

Yet they were persuaded of this false message anyway, instead of the truth (Gal.5:7,8). Their only accord was with these deceptions. As to the evangel, "they [knew] nothing but to do evil" (cp Ecc.5:1). However well-intended and innocent in appearance it may be, evil includes—whether in word or in deed— all that is destructive, all that is the opposite of good. Therefore, Paul avers, "if ever we also, or a messenger out of heaven, should be bringing an evangel to you beside that which we bring to you, let him be anathema!" (Gal.1:8).

Paul had no illusions that, of themselves, the Galatians would respond to his entreaties. Instead, his prayer was that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ would be with their spirit, enlightening them anew (Gal.6:18). God "manifests His word in its own eras by heralding" (Titus 1:3; cp 1 Tim.2:6). And our hope is always, May this be the day, and our message the way.

Eventually all in the province of Asia turned from the apostle Paul (2 Tim.1:15). By today's foolish standards of success, the apostle to the nations would be an abject failure. "Howbeit, the solid foundation of God stands, having this seal: The Lord knew those who are His, and, Let everyone who is naming the name of the Lord withdraw from injustice" (2 Tim.2:19). Injustice is not confined to external deeds, but includes what we believe and what we say as well. It is important, then, for us to be "sober, grave, sane, sound in the faith, in love, in endurance" (Titus 2:2).

SUFFERING EVIL WITH THE EVANGEL

If we would fully follow the apostle Paul, we will need to follow him not only in his "teaching, but in his "motive, purpose, faith, patience, love, [and] endurance." We will also find ourselves identifying with him in his "persecutions [and] sufferings, . . . persecutions such as I undergo, and out of them all the Lord rescues me" (2 Tim.3:10,11).

"The Lord is near" (Phil.4:5b), but we need to realize this and be aware of it. Let us not look to ourselves, but instead make our requests known to God concerning our need for this important realization and awareness. For we know and are certain that He shall be filling our every need, in accord with His riches in glory in Christ Jesus (Phil.4:19). But concerning any particular need, we cannot say whether it will be met next week or in the next eon. We would have Him fill our needs whenever His own wisdom and purpose dictates, not every time our foolishness wishes to beg for an immediate deliverance from suffering.

Paul was afflicted in everything, perplexed and persecuted, yet he was not distressed, despairing or forsaken (2 Cor.4:8,9). This was so, for the Lord was with Him: "Yet the Lord stood beside me, and He invigorates me, that through me the heralding may be fully discharged, and all the nations should hear; and I am rescued out of the mouth of the lion" (2 Tim.4:17). In spirit, by faith, we are aware that the Lord is with us as well, standing beside us in the work which He gives us to do. We find that He indeed invigorates us, and that we accomplish all that He intends, if not all that we desire.

It is His work, not ours (He is our Saviour, in grace are you saved!), to make His Word live in us, and to open our hearts to heed what is spoken by Paul. It is much better to wait upon Him and to trust in the ability of the word of His grace, "in its own eras," than continually to conceive of ourselves as the key to success, and then fancy that we have achieved it simply because many of our acts may be upright.

It simply will not do to point to all the good that is present in men's behavior and then give credit to the flesh for the existence thereof. What an insult this is to God! No human virtue is due to ourselves, but is a resultant phenomenon produced by the spirit of God which effects good characteristics to some degree in the lives of all.

Galatians 5:19-23 contrasts what man in his present state is able to do of himself ("the works of the flesh"), with what the imperceptible power of God is able to produce in him ("the fruit of the spirit"). The figure "the flesh" points to our own inherent weakness. The figure "the spirit" (pneuma, BLOW-effect, "blast" or "wind") points to God's great power.

Just look at the shameful sins of the flesh and consider what we can do! The works of the flesh are adultery, prostitution, uncleanness, wantonness, idolatry, enchantment, enmities, strife, jealousies, furies, factions, dissensions, sects, envies, murders, drunkennesses, revelries, and the like of these. If we did have a "part" in it all—if we had been called upon to assist in our own salvation—the works of the flesh would be our only offering.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT

So let us turn away from a consideration of man's depravities to gaze upon the glory of those marvels which God alone can create even in such ones as ourselves. The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, and self-control.

Here we see the practical value of heralding the Word. It is an exercise that dwells on the glory of God and His achievement. Joy and peace especially are the fruit of confidence in the Deity, and of assurance that He is doing all things well. The conviction that His love is fully triumphant is a genuine source for the walk of love. That all is of God leads to genuine meekness, and that all is for good to kindness, goodness and faithfulness. The assurance that God is in full control is the proper and only effectual motivation for self-control.

There is a world of difference between fleshly discipline and spiritual self-control. True self-control, in the scriptural sense, is a thing of purity, for it is a fruit of the spirit. Unless good deeds are performed under the influence of God's love or because of the assurance of His deity, they are actually works of the flesh. Inner motive must be distinguished from outward result. Even if many of his deeds are disciplined, "he who is sowing for his own flesh, from the flesh shall be reaping corruption" (Gal.6:8a). External morality is often the product of sinful motives. Stronger lusts of the flesh merely restrain weaker ones when the latter fail to serve the purpose of the former.

The apostle presents these striking contrasts between the flesh and the spirit for the consideration of the Galatians. They were under the delusion that they themselves were capable of "completing" if God would only "begin": "So foolish are you? Undertaking in spirit, are you now being completed in flesh?" (Gal.3:3).

The contrast is not between, as popularly imagined, the deeds of "Christians" and "non-Christians," but between that which proceeds from the old humanity in itself and that which God is able to produce in such ones nonetheless—whether they be believers or unbelievers.

Though it is humiliating to the flesh, if we are to do what is pleasing to God, God must see to it that we do so. He not only does not need our help, but He will not have our help. He will bless us as He intends and when He intends, not otherwise or before.

"The Lord will be rescuing me from every wicked work and will be saving me for His celestial kingdom" (2 Tim. 4:18a). Salvation and glory and power is of our God (Rev. 19:lb). This is the word which we herald; it has even become the testimony of our conscience (cp 2 Cor.1:12). Our God is great, and greatly to be praised, "to Whom be the glory for the eons of the eons. Amen!" (2 Tim.4:18b).

THE VALUE OF CHRIST'S BLOOD

WHO will place an estimate on the value of the sufferings of Christ? Who will dare to limit the preciousness of His outpoured blood? Justice may indeed demand the loss occasioned by sin, but the sternest righteousness cannot complain when it overpays the "price" with such rich redundance that it not only fends against all future failure, but adds an infinite superabundance of richest grace and glory to those who are beneath its shelter. It does not return us to Adamic innocence, but brings us God's own righteousness, beyond the reach of condemnation, and leads us into fullest harmony with the heart of God. No mere equivalent could do this.

A CONTEMPLATION

ONCE one contemplates the absolute miracle of just being in existence,
THAT every day granted to us is an outright miracle,
THAT after this life we have an eternity of perfect life, perfect joy and perfect love, NOTHING, and I mean absolutely nothing in life is too difficult.

FORBEAR—JUSTIFY—PROPITIATE

NOAH IS A JUST MAN. Noah finds grace in the eyes of Yahweh Elohim. With the Subjector walks Noah (Gen. 6:8,9). These lines concerning the ancestor of all who live in this eon are startling statements which give us a very different introduction to this eon than was true of Adam, in the previous one. It is too radical a change, and too far-reaching to be grasped from the simple statements, so we will enlarge on it by casting a glance over this and the next eon, and considering the subjects of justification by grace and the walk connected with it. As a contrast to these we will consider God's forbearance, and propitiation, which also have a large place in these periods, as well as their relation to evil. But justification by grace will be the controlling theme, for this is not only connected with Noah, but is also our own peculiar portion in the present parenthesis between Yahweh's dealing with the nation of Israel.

God's relationship to His people during the two central eons may be summarized by the words, forbear—(justify)—propitiate. Under the law covenants, He displayed His forbearance in passing over the penalties of sins through the sacrifice of animals, in the past. In the future He will be propitious to His people, and not remember their sins in the Kingdom, because of the sacrifice of Christ. But at present, under grace, He is just when He justifies us apart from law, through the deliverance in Christ Jesus. To fully grasp these important parts of God's plan, let us look at them from His side, and consider all three and their differences, so that we may be able to adore and worship Him for His justification, and its importation to us now, and to all at the consummation.

The differences between forbearance, propitiation and justification are seldom understood today because His people are far more concerned with their own salvation than with God's glory. They think of little beside their own welfare. In fact, the weak and confused ideas of "atonement," or "forgiveness" or "pardon," etc., and the fearful mixture of these in the popular versions, has made it practically impossible for them to fully enjoy the greatness of the grace which is ours in Christ Jesus, as expressed in the terms justification and reconciliation. As justification is usually confused with propitiation, it may help to contrast these two, and discover their proper places in God's plan.

CONFESSION AND FORGIVENESS

In John's first epistle we read of the position of the Circumcision saints in verse nine: "if we should be avowing our sins, He is faithful and just that He may be pardoning us our sins. . . ." This seems to be the position taken by many serious saints today. But the question arises, how can we possibly know all our mistakes? For example, those who appeal to this text today, do they realize that this act itself is a serious error? Moreover, it may make us self-centered, concerned with our own failings, instead of exulting in the transcendent truths that God has justified us through what Christ has done, and freed us from our sins and from ourselves.

VERSION VARIETIES: PROPITIATION

Four forms of the stem -il- are translated in so many different ways in the later Scriptures that it is less than useless to study the subject by means of the popular versions. But it may be helpful to give their translations just to show how confusing they are. The first rendering below is that of the AV, and the second is the Revised Standard. The last is the Concordant Version.

Matt.	16:22	Far be it from thee. God forbid. Propitious be it.
Luke	18:13	merciful. merciful. make a propitiatory shelter.
Rom.	3:25	propitiation. expiation. propitiatory shelter.
Heb.	8:12	merciful. merciful. be propitious.
Heb.	9: 5	mercyseat. mercy seat. propitiatory shelter.
1 John	2: 2	propitiation. expiation. propitiatory shelter.
1 John	4:10	propitiation. expiation. propitiatory shelter.

In three cases the AV had it correct, but the RSV has actually perverted, rather than revised it!

SHELTER

Shelter is the thought which underlies the word propitiation, while vindication may be the nearest synonym for justification. The basic idea of shelter was almost entirely ignored or expunged from the Hebrew stem kphr, from which springs the word propitiation, by translating it pitch, atone, forgive, merciful, pardon, purge, put off, reconcile, cleanse, disannul, and ransom. However it can still be dimly discerned in such terms as appease, pacify, village and bribe. The word's background is impending danger or disaster. A village, for instance, is a cluster of habitations which shelter the inhabitants from the elements. Only when not used of the sacrifices the renderings are usually nearer the truth, as appease, pacify, satisfaction, etc. Thus the translators themselves have shown us the impropriety of rendering it "atonement" at any time.

THEORIES OF THE ATONEMENT

This may have been dimly seen by some who have tried to explain its force by its derivation, at-one-ment. But this meaning is now obsolete. The dictionary defines it as:

"The saving or redeeming work of Christ wrought by His obedience, personal sufferings, and death. Prior to Anselm (d. 1109) Christ was thought to have paid a ransom to the Devil by His sufferings and thus wrought the deliverance of those who believed in Him. But since that day the leading theories are:

a. The Anselmian, or the vicarious, or substitutional atonement. This is the generally accepted orthodox view, and is held by Roman Catholic and by Calvinistic theologians. According to this, the righteousness of Christ was accepted by the Divine Father as a substitute for the righteousness of mankind lost through the fall, and the suffering and death of Christ were accepted as an equivalent of the punishment justly incurred by mankind; men being consequently released from punishment, on condition of their acceptance through faith of Christ's sacrifice.

b. Governmental atonement, a theory originated by Grotius (d. 1645) the Dutch statesman, but common among New England theologians, that violated law must be followed by punishment, for the deterrent effect on the community as in the penalties inflicted by human society, and that Christ's death as a spectacle to the universe serves this purpose of warning, and obviates the necessity of the punishment of man.

c. Moral atonement, set forth by Maurice (d. 1872) and Robertson (d. 1853) in England, and Bushnell (d. 1876) in America. Christ, it is held, reveals by His holy life and love-inspired suffering, the nature of God, and so wins man to repentance and the pursuit of holiness, which is the only satisfaction God requires."

We do not usually give so much space to human theories, but, in this case, we hope to show how contradictory and confused Christendom is on this simple subject, and what a false impression it produces in respect to God's righteousness and grace and love. The great and glorious truth that all is out of God and is designed to glorify Him and reveal His love is nearly eclipsed by all the theories of the atonement, even in the orthodox Bible schools today. We hope our readers will rid their minds and hearts of these false theories, so that they may be able to grasp and enjoy the rich truths which replace them.

SUBSTITUTION

by calling Christ a "Substitute" for those who believe on Him. He "took their place" and "suffered in their room and stead." The writer preached this as the gospel to unbelievers for a while, as he had been taught. But when he failed to find the word "substitute" in the Bible, and began to consider closely what this involved, he had to stop. If Christ had suffered in the place of those to whom He preached, then it would be the most flagrant injustice if they were not saved. As comparatively few believed, the theory of substitution was false, because it was unjust. Christ suffered and died for us, not instead of us.

The idea that past sins can be "atoned for" by future good conduct is absolutely unscriptural and irrational. Even human adjudication does not recognize it. If a man steals a thousand dollars, he cannot atone for it by stealing no more. The use of this expression in theology is most unfortunate, and has led to much obscurity in understanding God's dealings with humanity. It bolsters up the idea that salvation is due to human efforts rather than the sacrifice of Christ.

One reason, and probably the principal one, why so few really grasp the full import of justification, is the prevailing view that God's attempt to salvage mankind is a huge failure. Only a small percentage will be saved, and the vast majority will suffer everlasting punishment. If that were true, then God is not just Himself, and how can He justify others?

SHELTERED FROM THE FLOOD

We are given several instructive pictures of the shelter afforded by propitiation in the Hebrew Scriptures. The earliest and simplest occurrence refers to the sheltering coat which was put on Noah's ark to keep it from leaking and sinking in the deluge. It is usually rendered pitch, although there is nothing in the original to indicate what material was used. That is quite immaterial. Here we are given the basic idea of falsely called "atonement," really propitiation, in tangible form. Noah's ark, although intended to preserve him and all soul life through the flood, was in dire danger, for it might become waterlogged and sink with all on board. The ark represents Christ. With the sheltering coat it includes His propitiatory sacrifice. This shelters from impending judgment.

JACOB PROPITIATES ESAU

Jacob had robbed his brother Esau of his birthright and his blessing, so Esau was only waiting for the death of his father, Isaac, when he would kill his brother. So their mother sent Jacob away to Padan, in Syria, in order to be out of Esau's reach. Now, however, Jacob was returning to the land, and was about to meet his brother again. He knew that he was in danger of his life, so he sent a series of presents to Esau, "for, said he, a propitiatory shelter will I make before his face with the present offering which is going before me, and afterward I will see his face" (Gen. 32:20). Here we have a good illustration of the meaning of our word in the ordinary dealings between men. Jacob wished to turn Esau's anger away from him, and so shelter himself from the danger of his brother's wrath.

The whole narrative shows plainly that Jacob is not making any "atonement" for his own previous sins, but rather preparing for amicable relations with Esau in the future, especially in stopping Esau from killing him. The dictionary says that atonement is satisfaction or amends for a previous injury. But this was not at all Jacob's intention, for he retained both the birthright and the blessing. Later on, when he met Esau, he explained that all the presents were intended to find grace in the eyes of Esau in the future. This is the great difference between "atonement," and propitiation, which shows that all talk about "the atonement" is beside the mark. It gives a fatally false impression. No wonder there is so much disagreement as to its meaning!

SHELTERED FROM THE LAW

Another picture is given us in connection with the law of Sinai. The law, when observed, should bring blessing, but, if not kept, it is a very dangerous thing, for it transformed sin into transgression, and this draws down the wrath of the Lawgiver. Israel broke the law before it really reached them, so Moses broke the tablets before they could call down a curse upon the people. When he descended with the second set, what could he do to shelter the people from the curse which it denounced on all law-breakers? He put them in the coffer of the covenant and put a sheltering lid over it, and called it the propitiatory shelter (AV, mercy-seat), and sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice on it. This kept it from killing all who came near.

TEMPORARY PROPITIATION IN THE PAST

Propitiation, in the past, under the law, before the sacrifice of Christ, was a temporary affair, repeated daily (Ex. 29:36), or year by year, as in connection with the so-called "day of atonement" (Ex.30:10; Lev.16). It was deadly dangerous for Israel to have a holy Subjector dwelling in their midst, Who would judge the least infringement of His holy law. Even the priests, the sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, were devoured by fire when they used the wrong fire to burn their incense (Lev.10:1-3). To shelter the sons of Israel from such catastrophes, Aaron was told to make a propitiation, to last for a year, for the priests and the people. Aaron had to confess the failures and transgressions of the sons of Israel, and put them on the head of a live goat, which took them away into the wilderness for a year. So was Yahweh, the Subjector of Israel, temporarily propitiated. There was no "atonement" for past sins.

As the sheltering sacrifices were intended to be an object lesson, which would hardly be comprehended from a single occurrence, they had to be repeated in each generation, and every year, and every day, so that the truth they taught might be impressed on the hearts of the holy nation. These were at once the token and the reason why they could dwell so near to Yahweh Elohim without being consumed by His presence. And the fact that these offerings were continually made to shelter them from prospective sins, should have impressed them with His protective provision and care, as well as their own ingrained sinfulness.

EONIAN PROPITIATION

It was only before the sacrifice of Christ that propitiation had a very limited scope in time. The animal sacrifices had no permanent value, so had to be repeated again and again. They were only temporary shadows of a future Sacrifice whose value was unlimited in every way. The sufferings and death of Christ provides beforehand for all future sin and offense. It will never need to be repeated. So it comes that, in Israel, in the kingdom eon, God is propitious to their injustices, and is not reminded of their sins and lawlessness (Heb.8:12). This is the fulfillment of the types and shadows of the past.

PROPITIATION IN THE PAST

Propitiation is limited to Yahweh's earthly people, although justification will eventually include all (Rom.5:18). This is clear, not only from the fact that it is used almost exclusively in the Circumcision writings, but is clinched by its single occurrence in Paul's epistles. In Romans 3:24,25 we read: "Being justified gratuitously in His grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Whom God purposed for a Propitiatory Shelter, through faith in His blood,[1] for a display of His righteousness because of the passing over of the penalties of sins which occurred before in the forbearance of God) . . . ."

1. see footnote p.102.

Here we have propitiation located in the past, in contrast to the present, as well as a definition and description of it at that time, before Christ Jesus, the Antitype of all the sacrifices, had offered Himself. It was a passing over of the penalties of sins . . . in the forbearance of God. It is impossible for the blood of bulls and of he-goats to be eliminating sins (Heb.10:4), so they were merely passed over, not in view of God's righteousness, but in His forbearance. The penalties still stood against them. They were not eliminated until later by the Great Sacrifice. Such was the propitiatory shelter provided by the sacrifices in Israel in the past. Because the Great Sacrifice has since been offered, propitiation will mean much more in the future.

The first reference to propitiation in the Greek Scriptures is very striking when we know the meaning of the term. It deals with the first occasion on which Jesus speaks of Himself as the true Propitiatory Shelter, and shows how little it was understood even by the most spiritual of the disciples. "Thenceforth begins Jesus to show His disciples that He must be coming away into Jerusalem and to be suffering much from the elders and chief priests and scribes, and to be killed, and the third day to be roused. And, taking Him to him, Peter begins to rebuke Him, saying, 'Propitious be it to Thee, Lord! By no means shall this be for Thee!' Now He, being turned, said to Peter, 'Go away behind Me, Satan! A snare are you to Me, for you are not disposed to that which is of God, but to that which is of men'" (Matt.16:21-23).

The AV translates, "Far be it from Thee," and so covers up the meaning of the passage. The RSV says "God forbid!" which is worse. The whole point of the passage lies in the fact that Jesus could not have a propitiatory shelter for Himself, because He was to be it for others. Besides, there was no need for God to be propitious to Him, for He neither sinned nor had sin in Him, so no one, not even God, could be propitious to Him. Peter was asking for the same thing that Satan wanted, that is, to enter the kingdom apart from the cross. Therefore Peter fully deserved to be called an adversary. Jesus was just beginning to tell them the opposite, that is, that the opposition of the people was about to lead up to His propitiatory sacrifice, so that He must suffer, not for Himself, but for their sakes.

THE TRIBUTE COLLECTOR

Tax collectors, even in our day, are in an unenviable position. But a tribute collector who takes the tax for a foreign power, is in a far worse fix, for who wants to pay for their own oppression? It was even worse, under the Roman government of that day, for the tax collectors had to add their own wages to it. The worst was when a Jew demeaned himself by sinking to this low level. The self-righteous Pharisee, in the parable in Luke (18:9-14), considered one of them as the lowest in the scale of sinners. The tribute collector agreed with this estimate of himself, evidently, for he kept his distance. With down-cast eyes, he beat his chest, saying, "God, make a propitiatory shelter for me, the sinner!" Such is the power of propitiation, however, that our Lord considered him righteous, rather than the self-righteous Pharisee who thought that he needed no shelter.

PROPITIATION FOR THE WORLD

In the book of Hebrews we are told of the new covenant with Israel, that under it, He will be propitious to their injustices. The apostle John, however, widens the scope of blessing, so that it flows through Israel to the whole world. So will it be in regard to propitiation also. Speaking first of Israel, he says, "And He is the propitiatory shelter concerned with our sins, yet not concerned with ours only, but concerned with the whole world" (1 John 2:2).

CHRIST'S BLOOD

"Through His blood" indicates that a sacrifice has been made. The blood is associated with the soul, and we remember the passage in Isaiah 53:12. "He gives up His soul unto death." Peace is to be made with all creation "through the blood of His cross" (Col. l:20). This has reference to the manner of Christ's death, and indicates the intensity of the suffering which He underwent in order to fulfill God's purpose. So extreme was the suffering that Christ Himself, always obedient to His Father's will, at one point prayed that, if it were possible, the cup might pass from Him. The chief component in that suffering was undoubtedly the temporary, yet complete, alienation between God and His Son, indicated by the darkness which hung over the cross for three long hours. Yet there were other factors, too, which would grieve Christ's sensitive spirit, such as the numbering of the sinless Son of God among the malefactors, the mock trial, the gibes of the throng, the crown of thorns and the scourging, and the curse of being hanged upon a tree.

REPOSING IN EXPECTATION

Our brother in Christ, Delbert "Del" Cornwell, age 92, died July 18,2023. He grew up in the small town of Vernon, South Dakota where he learned how to farm alongside of his father. Farming remained his interest and vocation even after moving with his family to California where he was employed by a college as Poultry Manager. But there also, along with his wife, Kathryn, and especially through the ministry of her uncle, Joseph E. Kirk, he came to rejoice in God's purpose of love and righteousness for the reconciliation of all.

We have recently heard of the death of Joyce (Davies) Orton of Bramcote, England, at the age of 103. Fervent in faith she held to the teachings of Paul along with her father, Bernard Davies and husband, Frank Orton, and others who fellowshipped in the Nottingham area.

GOD'S RIGHTEOUSNESS MANIFESTED THROUGH JESUS CHRIST'S FAITH FOR ALL

First of all we must recognize that the subject—indeed the critical and glorious subject of Romans 3:21-28 is the manifestation of God's righteousness.

Then we need to see that this manifestation of God's righteousness is by means of Jesus Christ's faith—not by means of our faith in Him, but by His perfect faith to which He was fully faithful unto the death of the cross.

Furthermore it is essential for our joy and peace that we understand that God's righteousness as it is manifested (and secured) through Jesus Christ's faith is for all human beings—not one is left out—not even one.

Connected with these three fundamental facts are three further facts that are no less important and critical, but which stand in relation to the fundamental, evangelical facts of (1) the manifestation of God's righteousness (2) by means of Jesus Christ's faith (3) for the benefit of all human beings and indeed all creation.

These associated facts are that the message Paul is bringing concerning the manifestation of God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith for the good of all is (1) apart from law (2) yet attested by the law and the prophets and (3) that it already benefits those who are believing it, not with its full enjoyment of benefits but still in a truly significant and powerful way. This is expressed here by the preposition "on" and in Romans 4 by the verb "reckoned," and in 2 Corinthians 1:22; 5:5 and Ephesians 1:14 by the noun "earnest."

Each of these grand and happy facts may be considered by itself, but as it relates to the others with the manifestation of God's righteousness heading them all. We are presently focusing on Jesus Christ's faith which is a condensed way of speaking of gratuitous justification through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:24), and of saying: "Christ dies for our sins" (1 Cor.15:3), or more fully: "God is commending this love of His to us, seeing that while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sakes" (Rom.5:8), or even more fully: "Christ Jesus, . . . being inherently in the form of God, deems it not pillaging to be to be equal with God; nevertheless He empties Himself, taking the form of a slave, coming to be in the likeness of human beings, and found in fashion as a human, He humbles Himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross" (Phil.2:5-8).

This justification through Jesus Christ's obedience in faith unto death is what makes God's righteousness manifest. And it is for all (cp 2 Cor.5:14). But it has a special connection to us who are believing it (cp 1 Tim.4:10).

"FOR" AND "ON"

Both Jews and Greeks ("Greeks" referring here to all humans who are not Jews) are all under sin. "Not one is righteous—not even one" (Rom.3:10). Out of works of law, no flesh at all shall be justified in God's sight (Rom.3:20). Yet now, through Jesus Christ's faith, God's righteousness is made manifest in gratuitous justification, in God's grace (Rom.3:21-24). This is "for all . . . for all sin and are wanting of the glory of God" (Rom.3:22,23). Justification in God's grace is marked out for all, and therefore all human beings will, in God's own time, enjoy the justifying of their lives (Rom.5:18). The many (counted now at least in the billions) who are descended from Adam and are constituted sinners shall be constituted righteous (Rom.5:19).

Yet also, concerning those who are believing (to some extent, whether with strong and growing faith, or with the merest flicker of faith, as God measures to them, Rom. 12:3), God has already placed this justification on them, reckoning it to them (Rom.4:5).

FIVE REFERENCES TO FAITH

There are five references to faith in Romans 3:21-28. First we hear of "Jesus Christ's faith" (v.22) and later of "Jesus's faith" (v.26). These have dominated our current attention. They speak to us of grace, which is essentially JOY. They take us back to Paul's greetings in which he writes: "Grace to you . . . from God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom.1:7). These two references especially point to gratuitous justification in God's grace through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom. 3:24) as the manifestation of God's righteousness.

But in between these references are the words literally rendered "through the[3] faith" (Rom.3:25a). This brief prepositional phrase is followed by another, "in His blood," and these together are directed "for [INTO] a display of His [i.e., God's] righteousness" in relation to both "the passing over of the penalties of sins which occurred before, and toward that display in the current era.

What is "the faith" of Romans 3:25? Most certainly "through the faith" points us back to "through Jesus Christ's faith" in verse 22 and ahead to "out of Jesus's faith" in verse 26.

3. 3:25 the: supplied by Codex Vaticanus.

We have already noted how the words "through Jesus Christ" in Romans 2:16b prepare us for "through Jesus Christ's faith" in 3:22 and from this how we are led forward to the "through one righteous response" of 5:18 and the "through the obedience of the One" of 5:19. The words "through the faith" of Romans 3:25 make the same connections.

CHRIST JESUS AS PROPITIATORY

The CV puts Romans 3:25 in parentheses. This is to suggest that Paul's principal concern is the evangel of gratuitous justification in God's grace by means of ("through") the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus which is directed "toward the display of [God's] righteousness in the current era." Yet Paul is also concerned that this display of God's righteousness relates to what occurred "before" as "attested by the law and the prophets" (v.21).

Propitiation by means of the blood of the sacrifices was a temporary shelter from God's indignation. Now Paul points to Christ Jesus as the Antitype of that provision of old. Using a fact verb (which is not concerned with the time of the act, but wholly concentrates on its truth), the apostle tells us that God purposes Christ Jesus for a Propitiatory, not as a temporary shelter from indignation, but as a Deliverer from all operations of God's indignation, such as those brought before us in Romans 1:18; 2:5,9; 3:5. This purposed deliverance of God is not carried out by our faith in Christ's blood (as we have understood and thought) but (as indicated in the revised CV on page 134) by means of that faith of verse 22, the faith of Jesus Christ which is vividly brought before us here in terms of His blood.

For ourselves who have the completed word of God (Col.1:25) we may well carry forward the subject of peace by propitiation to the present blessing of the conciliation (Rom.5:1-11; 2 Cor.5:18-21) and then to the ultimate blessing of the reconciliation of all when peace is made through the blood of the cross (Col.1:20). So also the passing over of the penalties of sins which occurred before in the forebearance of God, and which was not righteous in itself, is made righteous by that of which it was a foreshadow, the display of God's righteousness (rather than His forebearance) through Christ's faith, by means of His blood. "The soul of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev.17:11). Thus "blood" refers to the sensation of suffering and agony endured by our Lord in His obedience unto death.

THE RIGHTEOUS JUSTIFIER

Romans 3:26 points us back to 3:21-24. God Who is manifest as righteous is righteous. This has been made manifest and is put on display through the faith of Him Who empties Himself of His glories and becomes obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, that is, Jesus.

Consequently, if there is a display of God's righteousness there must be a righteous justification of irreverent and unrighteous human beings (as we are identified in Romans 1:18). God does this. And He does this righteously. He cannot do this by means of unrighteous human beings, not even by their faith. It can be done only by means of (literally, sourced out of) One (cf "One" in Rom.5:15, 17,19) Who is Himself righteous. Romans 1:17 identifies that One as "the Righteous One." Romans 3:26 identifies Him as "Jesus." This is the Name of the One Who empties Himself, taking the form of a slave, coming in the likeness of human beings, He Who humbles Himself in obedience unto death, even the death of the cross, Jesus, in Whose Name every knee shall bow and Whose Lordship every tongue shall acclaim to the glory of God the Father, Who is thus made manifest and put on display as both righteous and One Who is making all righteous (cf Rom.5:19).

It dishonors Jesus, the Righteous One, and it makes God's righteousness a mystery at best and a mockery at worst, to say that God justifies sinners by means of their faith. He reckons righteousness to those who are graciously granted to be believing with whatever measure of faith God, by His spirit, endows on them, but the basis and source and channel is Jesus Christ's faith.

God appears in Romans 3:26 as both righteous and the Justifier (the One Who is justifying). Christ appears as Jesus, the humbled and obedient and faithful One Who dies. But the human appears only by the definite article "the" in the singular. Who is the (one) of Romans 3:26? It is the individual human being. Adam, Eve, Abel, and also Cain—Peter and also Judas—Paul and each one named in Romans 16—you who read this and I who write it, sinners as we are in flesh, each one of us is the one of this verse. "O human!" (Rom.2:1). "For we are reckoning a human to be justified by [Jesus's] faith" (Rom.3:28). God already reckons righteousness to the believer who is believing on Him Who is justifying the irreverent one (Rom.4:5), and will constitute all righteous (Rom.5:19), but the achievement of justification is through Jesus Christ's faith alone. "A human is not being justified by works of law except through that [law work] of Jesus's faith . . . (Gal.2:16).

Here in Romans 3:26, however, the means of justification is expressed by the preposition "out" rather than "through." Accordingly we read that "God's righteousness is being revealed out of [the Righteous One's] faith" (Rom. 1:17 cp Gal.3:11; Heb.10:38). And in Galatians 2:16 Paul testifies that those Jews who believe in Christ Jesus are "justified out of Christ's faith and not out of works of law" (nor out of their faith). Furthermore the scripture was perceiving before "that God is justifying the nations out of faith" (Gal.3:8,9). Indeed, "the scripture locks up all together under sin that the promise out of Jesus Christ's faith may be given to those who are believing it" (Gal.3:22).

(This will affect our understanding of Romans 3:30, which calls for consideration in a separate article.)

EXPLANATION

In all this there is much that is different from the usual explanation of Romans 3:21-28. Paul is not speaking of righteousness from God (though righteousness is from Him), but of the righteousness of God, that is, God's own righteousness. This is what has been made manifest, or "revealed" (Rom.1:17), or put on "display" (Rom.3:25,26). In that our apostle speaks of the justification ("righteousification") of the sinner (Rom.3:23,24) this evangel is the manifestation of God's righteousness, so that it may be established that God is righteous (Rom.3:26).

What has been obscured is Jesus Christ's faith, so that God's righteousness is obscured. Where Paul speaks of Christ's faith, it has been widely understood to be our faith in Him, both in Bible translations and expositions. Even now when it is proven by some scholars, noted in some translations and felt certain by some believers, the old error dominates in much of our thinking and teaching.

The CVNT translation of Romans 3:21-28 above is not perfect (for no translation is perfect), but by its efforts for consistent renderings in vocabulary and grammar and attempts to keep the context in view where wrong premises and self-centered mindsets are most likely to creep in, it points in the right direction.

It is blessedly true that our faith is in Christ, but that is not what Paul is saying here. God is in first place. The human is in third place, with Jesus Christ as the connecting link, the Mediator in second place. The passage concerns God's righteousness made manifest and put on display by means of Jesus Christ's faith as it relates to the fact that all human beings are sinners. This is for our faith (Rom.1:17) but not by means of our faith. And this is for all (cp 1 Tim.2:3-6).

FAITH'S LAW

"Where, then, is boasting? It is debarred!" (Rom.3:27). But boasting is not debarred if gratuitous justification is achieved by means of our faith in Jesus Christ. It is a most blessed and glorious gift to be believing and to place our faith in Jesus Christ as the One Who dies for our sakes. This brings joy and peace into our present lives and in full measure during the oncoming eons. But if these blessings are based on what we do (and to believe, even in the smallest measure, is to do something) there is room for our boasting in ourselves.

We see, then (since boasting is debarred), verses 27-28 continue the theme of God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith for all human beings. Boasting is debarred because of this "law" of Jesus's faith.

The two words, "faith's law," in context, say much the same thing as the two words, "God's law," in Romans 7:25 in their context. There they refer to God's evangel concerning His Son. Paul enslaves his mind to "God's law," that is, to God's evangel in contrast to "the law of the God" laid down at Sinai which, for all its righteousness and holiness brings wretchedness into his life because of the different law, "the law of sin" (indeed, "the law of sin and death") which is in his flesh. So now in Romans 3:21-28 we hear the evangel of faith's law. In lieu of saying, "we are believing," Paul says "we are reckoning." We are accounting it a fact that a human is justified by Jesus Christ's faith apart from works of law. We are enslaving our minds to this evangel. Believe—reckon—enslaving our minds—these terms are all ways of saying the same thing, each way bringing out its special aspect. Thus Paul takes us back to the "for faith" of Romans 1:17. It is for our faith, for our believing, for our reckoning, for the enslaving of our minds that justification is out of the Righteous and Humbled One's faith, indeed out of Jesus's faith.

So also Paul is pointing ahead to what he will say in Romans 5:8, that while we are still sinners Christ dies for our sakes. This is faith's law, which is for our faith.

APART FROM WORKS OF LAW

If it is so that God is righteous and that this is made known by means of the faith of Jesus Christ in His obedience unto the death of the cross, then it is this that is apart from works of law. Our faith is neither the cause nor the channel of the revelation that God is righteous and that all He does is justified. That our faith could be the cause and means of such supremely good results is as incomprehensible as it is impossible.

Once again, our faith is a spiritual endowment from God (1 Cor.12:1; 13:13), which He graciously gives to us in measure (Phil.1:29; Rom.12:3) on the basis of what He has done for us (even for all) out of and through the faith of His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Consequently we are reading Romans 3:21-28 as we read Romans 5 where Paul speaks of God's love commended in that while we are still sinners Christ dies for our sakes. There also we hear of the One Human through Whom the lives of all human beings are being justified and of the One through Whom the many sinners descended from Adam shall be constituted righteous.

Again we read in chapter 8 of God sending His own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh, which speaks of Him in His humiliation as Jesus, and this is "concerning sin" so that sin in the flesh is condemned. God spares Him not, but gives Him up for us all. Even as God's righteousness is manifested through Jesus Christ's faith, so also His love is expressed in Christ Jesus in His death for us, not as a response to the imperfect and much varied faith of a limited number of human beings. God's evangel is not one thing in Romans 3:21-28 and another thing later on. All our blessings are based on Jesus Christ's faith, which makes it clear that God is righteous. This is for our believing.

A CLOSING NOTE

There are important distinctions that need to be noted, not only between what Paul means when he speaks of Circumcision and Uncircumcision (Rom.3:30, cp "Jews and Greeks," Rom.3:10), but here especially the distinction between what is sometimes called cause and occasion, and between justification in the full and literal sense of make righteous and its frequently used sense of call righteous.

God's evangel as set before us most directly in Romans 1:16,17; 3:21-28 and 5:1-19 (and ever kept in view throughout his epistles) tells us of the cause of literal justification (being made righteous to the end of vindication) by means of the faith of Jesus Christ, that is, His death of humiliation and suffering, followed by His being roused by God. It reveals what has been done and its results which are assured, but are not yet brought into effect—into full enjoyment. On the other hand, in the meantime, we who are believing this evangel are justified in the sense of reckoned by God to be righteous, which is a matter of God "calling what is not being as if it is being" (Rom.4:17), for it is certain to be so. Our believing (that is, our faith) is not the cause (or means) of this reckoning of righteousness, but it is the occasion in which what has been achieved through Christ's faith is even now put to our account by God (cp Eph.1:13). Hence, in spirit, in the renewing of our mind, in faith and expectation, we are enjoyers of justification and may be enjoying peace toward God (Rom.5:1).

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

EDITORIAL

THE RECOGNITION of God's ways with humanity and the world in which we live is of prime importance for us. God's ways have not always been the same in their details and will not always be as they are now. Yet this one thing is so—that He is working all together for good. This is the conviction of those who are loving God (Rom.8:28).

In this issue of our magazine, the opening article is a reprint of A. E. Knoch's comments on Ephesians 2:11,12. It concerns "The Era Preceeding the Present" (pages 147-157). That era was a time of transition in the operations of God, the period covered by the book of Acts.

It was during that era that many spiritual blessings were introduced through the apostleship of Paul alongside of visible and tangible blessings and a priority maintained by Israel in such matters. Paul describes that situation in Ephesians 2:11,12 in terms that seem puzzling to us who never lived in that transitional period. In order for us to appreciate more fully the blessings for believers now in contrast to the situation in the previous era, Brother Knoch states: "We must dismiss from our minds the rich spiritual blessings such as justification, conciliation, sonship, which had come to the nations through Paul's ministry. Though they had a spiritual circumcision far more effectual than the fleshly rite, still they remained the 'Uncircumcision.' Though they enjoyed a knowledge of God quite supreme to that possessed by the twelve apostles and their followers, they had no fleshly standing though 'in Christ' in spirit, they were apart from Christ in flesh (Eph.2:12). They were aliens of political Israel. They were allowed to partake of her covenants as guests only . . . ."

But now, having recognized that there were limitations having to do with the position in flesh of the nations as compared to Israel, we bring our minds back to "the rich spiritual blessings unfolded in Paul's epistles, even in those written during the previous era. Thus in his article, "The Word of Christ, its Grace and Power" (pages 158-166), James Coram writes "Paul speaks to us from the vantage point of his own evangel which came to him through a revelation of Jesus Christ (Gal.1:2), which he heralded among the nations (Gal.2:2). He does not even take up the many details of the personal ministry of Jesus, those things associated with the Lord's 'personal entrance' to 'the entire people of Israel' (cp Acts 13:24; Matt.15:24)," (page 159).

Similarly John H. Essex traces steps toward our always being "Together with the Lord" (pages 167-186) as revealed through epistles written throughout his ministry: "With the cross comes a change. The flesh is mentally discarded—considered to be dead—crucified together with Him, and, as Paul puts it in his second letter to the Corinthians, 'If anyone is in Christ there is a new creation. the primitive passed by. Look! there has come new' (5:17). A new creation! This change is so radical that, from now on, we are to be acquainted with no one according to flesh. 'Yes,' adds the apostle, 'even if we have known Christ according to flesh, nevertheless now we know Him so no longer' (1 Cor.5:16,17)" (pages 175,176).

Finally this issue ends with my own comments on Romans 3:21-31 (pages 187-192). Here in an epistle written in the previous era Paul dwells on one of those spiritual blessings. A. E. Knoch advised us to dismiss from our minds in considering Ephesians 2:11,12, that of justification. In this there is no distinction between Circumcision and Uncircumcision (Rom.3:22), for all sin (Rom.3:22), being justified gratuitously in God's grace through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:24). D.H.H.

THE ERA PRECEDING THE PRESENT

> Wherefore, remember that once you, the nations in flesh—who are termed "Uncircumcision" by those termed "Circumcision," in flesh, made by hands—that you were, in that era, apart from Christ, being alienated from the citizenship of Israel, and guests of the promise covenants, having no expectation, and without God in the world. (Eph.2:11,12)

We have now considered the two leading aspects of the "mystery," joint enjoyers of an allotment, and joint members of Christ's body. In the first (Eph.1:3-14) we discovered our new relationship to God. In the second we considered our relationship to Christ. In both we fare equally with an election out of Israel. It now behooves us to study the third aspect of the mystery. What is our direct relationship to the saints of this and of all other divine administrations? Here is a rich field of truth, almost unexplored, because the key had long been lost (Eph.2:11-22).

The saints among the nations who first received the mystery were the same ones whom Paul had reached in his previous ministry. When the mystery was made known, Paul could not send it to an entirely new company of people, for no such saints existed. He sent it to those who had a part in that transitional economy which preceded the present. Those saints did not form a special body apart from us. They will not be one body of Christ and we another. If so, Paul must be in both! Some of his friends would be likewise embarrassed. Christ would have two figurative bodies! Paul would have two distinct destinies, if, indeed, any definite destiny can be found for the earlier saints, apart from the Ephesian revelation. The mystery was made known to and through those saints who had received the truth taught in Paul's previous epistles. It is most significant that it was not sent to or through the twelve apostles or those to whom they ministered.

First of all we are invited to remember what a low place was accorded the nations during the era preceding the revelation of the mystery (Eph.2:11,12). This is difficult to apprehend unless we give due attention to the stress laid upon the word flesh. During Paul's previous ministries he had brought rich spiritual blessings to the nations. We will do well to forget them in this connection. The various points God charges us to remember here are all dependent on physical descent. The rite of circumcision placed an impassable boundary between Israel and the nations. "Wherefore, remember that once you, the nations, in flesh—who are termed 'Uncircumcision' by those being termed 'Circumcision,' in flesh, made by hands . . . ." Miss this, and we miss all.

We must dismiss from our minds the rich spiritual blessings, such as justification, conciliation, sonship, which had come to the nations through Paul's ministry. Though they had a spiritual circumcision far more effectual than the fleshly rite, still they remained the "Uncircumcision." Though they enjoyed a knowledge of God quite superior to that possessed by the twelve apostles and their followers, they had no fleshly standing. Though "in Christ" in spirit, they were apart from Christ in flesh (Eph.2:12). They were aliens of political Israel. They were allowed to partake of her covenants as guests only. They were not "strangers to," but guests of.

In spirit the nations had an expectation, a "blessed hope." At that time it was not very well defined. Their destiny was obscure, yet gloriously covered by the wondrous words "always together with the Lord" (1 Thess.4:17). But they had no physical heritage in view. "Having no expectation" (Eph.2:12) must be limited to the controlling theme—in flesh, or physically. It is not to be applied to the unbeliever, but to the company of saints who had believed Paul's message. They did not become proselytes in order to share in Israel's physical benefits. They remained uncircumcised, and lacked all fleshly claims.

Strange as it may seem, they were without God in the world (Eph.2:12). How very far from true this was in the spiritual sphere we leave each one to imagine. The spirits of those who had turned to God from idols (1 Thess.1:9), who reveled in the eighth of Romans, who had the spiritual endowments of Corinthians, were certainly not without God in the world. But that is not the point. In flesh they had no God to call their own. Even the unbelieving Israelite could claim Yahweh as his God, and enter His sanctuary to perform his devotions. The believers among the nations had no such privilege.

It would be an easy task for the Ephesians to recollect that in which they themselves had been vitally concerned. They could readily look back to their own experience. Not so with us. We cannot recall such an experience. We have never lived in a different administration such as this, which covered the period dealt with in the latter half of Acts, so long as Paul preached the evangel of God, during his itinerant ministry among the nations. But it is urgent for our understanding of the present grace that we also may compare and contrast the present superlative grace with the favor previously shown to the nations. To do this we shall consider the personal experience of Trophimus, who was given a powerful object lesson on this very theme.

The Scriptures give us three typical men who may illustrate for us the various experiences of the believers among the nations in the time of transition which preceded the revelation of the mystery. These three men are Trophimus, Tychicus, and Onesimus. Their very names are significant. Trophimus means Nourished. Tychicus can probably best be rendered freely by Fortunate. Onesimus is Profitable. In the personal histories of these three men God has given us a living and moving panorama of the inauguration of the present order of things. Each name, together with every detail recorded of them—where they are, what they do, what befalls them—is full of meaning. The history of these three men forms a picture in miniature of God's dealings in their day. If we associate each with such a knowledge of God and His ways as had been revealed, and rigidly exclude and deny to each things not recorded of them and those revelations which were yet future, we shall enjoy an engaging and instructive picture of the inception of the present secret administration.

Nourished (Trophimus) brings before us the era which we are considering, which came between the Pentecostal and the present administrations—the things we are exhorted to remember. His presence in Jerusalem with Paul is the touchstone which will apprise us of the real nature of that era and the prominent place given to the physical supremacy of Israel. We will return to him presently.

Fortunate (Tychicus), the bearer of this message to the Ephesians, is a true picture of those to whom he was sent. While Nourished is left behind (for lack of nourishment, 2 Tim.4:20), Tychicus is "fortunate" indeed, for he leaves the past era and enters the present. He has had the experience of Nourished, but to him it becomes a mere memory, in the light of the amazing grace which he brought with him from Rome to Ephesus.

Profitable (Onesimus) was like us. He had no personal experience of a previous administration. He was the fruit of Paul's bonds. Like the nations of whom he was a representative, he had, in time past, been *un*profitable. The nations had not been on terms with God. They could never wipe out the debt they owed Him, or destroy the fact that they were His property. They were His slaves, but they had run away from His service, like Onesimus. How strange that a man in chains should catch the runaway and return him to his Master! Yet that is God's way with us. Paul's chains, borne for the sake of the nations, have turned many an unprofitable fugitive into a freeman who is "profitable" indeed (Philemon 10-19).

Trophimus, the Ephesian, was seen in Jerusalem with Paul, on his last visit to the city (Acts 21:29). The Jews supposed that Paul had brought Trophimus into the sanctuary. This was the cause of Paul's imprisonment. It is a most graphic illustration of the truth we are considering. Trophimus was far nearer to God spiritually than anyone in the mob that assaulted Paul. But the mere supposition that he had approached physically precipitated a riot. All Jerusalem is in an uproar! The captain of the Roman squadron is hurrying to the scene with centurions and soldiers. As he arrives at the center of the disturbance he finds the mob seeking to kill a man, a Jew, after they had drawn him out of the sanctuary and shut the gates. After he had seized and chained the man, he demanded who he was and what he had done.

Had he been an alien it would have been a clear case of going beyond the "soreg," or "middle wall of partition," the central wall of the enclosure beyond which it was unlawful for a Gentile to go. But this man was evidently a Jew. The crowd was so vociferous in their denunciations that he could not find out what really was the matter, so he ordered him to be brought into the castle. As the Jew is about to enter he obtains leave to speak to the people. As his speech is in Aramaic, the Hebrew dialect used among the Jews, the tumult is hushed and they listen with rapt attention. At length, however, he speaks one word which breaks the spell. Once more they cry, "Away from the earth with such a one, for it is not befitting for him to be living!" They strip off their clothes, ready to stone him, and throw dust into the air. Paul is taken into the castle and disappears from view (Acts 21:27-22:24).

As the cause of all this disturbance was the report that Paul had brought him into the sacred precincts and had defiled the sanctuary, this occurrence must have powerfully impressed Trophimus. His name and physical environment are but a parable of the truth. Though not a Jew, he is in Jerusalem, "nourished" on Jewish food and in Jewish lodgings. For a time he sojourns there as their guest (Eph.2:12). This was the position of the nations. They were partakers of Israel's spiritual blessings (Rom.15:27). Now he is to learn that, in flesh, he is without God in the world. Some Jew from Asia had recognized him with Paul, and had jumped to the conclusion that Paul, having brought the nations near to God spiritually, now intended to bring them close in flesh. Otherwise why bring him there at all? The guess was received with conviction. No evidence was needed. This is how it started. But how did it end? What was that horrid word which broke the spell the apostle cast over the angry mob? It was the hated "goyim," the name for the alien nations.

They gladly heard the story of Paul's conversion. They did not object to the fact that Israel had rejected God's mercy. But to hear that God had sent Paul to the other nations—curs, uncircumcised—this was far beyond their endurance. And the man who dared voice such a thought—"Away from the earth with such a one!" Little did these faithful Pentecostalists dream how God would yet use these words to describe His purpose for Paul and the nations. They were, indeed, unfit to live, so reckon themselves crucified with Christ. They have no place on the earth. They are to be taken away from the earth, not, indeed, in the sense in which these prophets intended, but to take a higher place among the celestials.

How must poor Trophimus have felt at the thoughts these scenes compelled? He was nothing but one of the despised "goyim." As such he knows his place far, far away from the dwelling place of Yahweh. He had sad proof of this today, when the mere rumor, that he had dared to come as near to Him as they had precipitated all this tumult. The great gulf between him and the meanest of the Circumcision was accentuated by his presence in Jerusalem, near the reputed dwelling place of Israel's God. In his journeys with Paul among the nations no such stress had been laid on the rite which he now found made such a difference. True, Paul had circumcised Timothy, but his mother, at least, was a Jewess. Trophimus had no title to the ordinance or to the privileges it conferred.

"Uncircumcision" meant nothing in most countries, for that was the normal state of man. It is only as he came into contact with the Circumcision, and in condescension to them that he must acknowledge that he belonged to a lower caste—the "Uncircumcision." It was not a matter of merit or attainment or character—merely an incident of birth. Above all, it was not the possession of God's grace or a knowledge of Himself. Scores of godly, devoted believers in his native city lived better lives than these circumcised Israelites. But this was of no avail. They came of the wrong stock. The great thing was to reckon the patriarchs among your ancestors. If you are not a physical descendant of Abraham you are not entitled to the rite of circumcision and must keep your distance from God's dwelling place.

APART FROM CHRIST

"Christ has become the Servant of the Circumcision for the sake of the truth of God, to confirm the patriarchal promises" (Rom.15:8). During His ministry He scarcely set foot outside the land of Israel. In the ecclesia of His day there were no goyim (nations, or Gentiles). Indeed, when He explains to them how to shun a brother who refuses to hear the ecclesia, He bids them treat him as they did tribute collectors and aliens (Matt.18:17). Traitors and non-Jews were equally excluded and condemned. He came to take hold of the physical seed of Abraham (Heb.2:16).

The Canaanitish woman had to learn this humbling lesson. "Be merciful to me, Lord, Son of David" failed to touch a responsive chord in His gracious heart. His disciples hear, but do they sympathize? Strange sympathy they gave! "Dismiss her," they say. He seems to acquiesce in their harsh demand, for He says, "I was not commissioned except for the lost sheep of the house of Israel." He was the true David Who tended His Father's sheep. But the woman was not of this fold. As Son of David He could not help her. It is only as Lord that He is over all. So, when she cries "Lord, help me!" He seems to relent a little, yet answers, "It is not ideal to be taking the children's bread and to be casting it to the puppies." She received a blessing only by claiming the crumbs which are falling from the table of her lords. She was forced to acknowledge Israel's prior, almost exclusive place. This was the only ground on which blessing was dispensed to uncircumcised aliens. They were slaves of the Lord, but they had not Messiah. They were apart from Christ (Eph.2:12).

GUESTS OF THE PROMISE COVENANTS

Christ is not only the Servant of the Circumcision, but also gives occasion for the other nations to glorify God for His mercy (Rom.15:9) This mercy was dispensed by Him in the character of their Lord, or Master, for He is Lord of all. It was on this basis that Peter proposed to baptize Cornelius (Acts 10:36,48). The covenants God made with

His people were not for themselves alone, for their greatest privilege is to be a channel of blessing to the other nations. God promised Abraham that through him, and through his Seed, all the families of the ground would be blessed. The normal place of the Gentiles is to be the invited guests of Israel. This was their place during the era preceding the present secret administration.

ALIENS FROM ISRAEL'S CITIZENSHIP

No citizenship on earth can compare with that of Israel. Other nations rise and fall, but it will supersede them all, and confer on its citizens a power and prestige above all others and lasting for the eons. To Israel alone belongs the rule of the earth. Our ancestral tree may be most glorious, and full of famous names, but if it does not lead back to Abraham's grandson, whose name was changed to Israel (Upright-with-God), we lack the one essential to real political eminence on earth. Between the Jew and Gentile must ever be the disparity that exists between the ruler and the ruled, the sovereign and the subject, for such will be the place of aliens in the promised Kingdom on the earth.

NO EXPECTATION

As Gentiles, in flesh, we can have no national expectations. Egypt once boasted in world supremacy, and was followed by Assyria and Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander, Caesar, raised their realms into the place of preeminence and their citizenship into high esteem. Paul claimed the privileges of a Roman citizen. But all these mighty empires had no future. They have passed away, as will the many which have inherited some of their prominence and pride. The page of prophecy assures us that gentile rule is doomed. Israel alone has any expectation. If we are aliens, in flesh, the best that we can look forward to on earth is a place subordinate to them.

By far the most interesting and impressive sight in all Jerusalem was the temple on mount Moriah. "The outward face, in its front, wanted nothing that was likely to excite either admiration or astonishment; for it was all covered over with plates of gold of great weight; and at the rising of the sun reflected a very fiery splendor, and made those who forced themselves to look upon it turn their eyes away as they would have done at the sun's rays. It appeared at a distance like a great mountain covered with snow, for those parts of it that were not gilt were exceedingly white." Such is the description given by Josephus.

Had we come to the holy city with Paul and Trophimus, our chiefest wish would be to get a close glimpse of the sacred structure. So we enter the gate through the outer wall, into the court of the nations (which was an unwarranted addition to Herod's temple) and admire its cloisters, with polished marble pillars and a cedar roof. Beyond this we tread an open space with polished inlaid stones. As we approach the second court, with its high wall, we see that it is surrounded by a lower wall of elegant construction. Upon it stand pillars, at equal intervals, declaring the law of purity, some in Greek, and some in Roman letters, warning us that further progress is at the peril of our very lives.

One of these inscriptions was recently unearthed. In our Concordant Commentary on the New Testament, page 290, we have published a tracing of this inscription together with the following translation:

"No alien is to enter within the balustrade and embankment about the sanctuary. Whoever is caught will be responsible for his death, which will ensue." This is the "soreg" which they thought Trophimus had passed with Paul.

True, Trophimus had never transgressed this central wall of the temple enclosure. But what comfort was there in that? If Yahweh, the only true and living God, dwells within those walls, why are we refused access to Him?

Why must we keep our distance? Trophimus, in his Ephesian home, dwelt in the city which was the sexton of the temple of the goddess Artemis, whom the Romans called Diana, whose worship had spread over all the earth (Acts 19:27,35). Perhaps he also had worshiped at her shrine, but now he had turned to God from all idols, to serve the living and true God. And now, at last, he is in the city which kept His temple, and he is denied access by God Himself! Truly, he had no God to call his very own, since, in spirit, he cannot but acknowledge Israel's God, Yahweh.

Such is a true picture of that era, preceding the present, which we are exhorted to remember. The nations who turned to God and His Christ, and received His Spirit, and sent succor to the saints in Jerusalem, had no standing in flesh. They were by no means equal to the Jews who shared the same salvation. Nor is there any indication in the previous Scriptures of any better thing in store for them unless we wait for the far-off day when this earth is dissolved and a new creation takes its place (Rev.21:3). Then, indeed, God will dwell with the nations. Even then they are secondary and subordinate.

The Fate of Trophimus

True to the truth, Trophimus (Nourished) found scantier nourishment at Israel's board as time went on. Jerusalem was herself stricken with a famine (Acts 11:27-29). He follows Paul a little way, but is left at Miletus, sick [from lack of nourishment] (2 Tim.4:20). His experience is a fit picture of the waning weakness of the administration which fails with Israel's failure. But Tychicus (Fortunate) follows Paul all the way to Rome (Col.4:7). He received and relayed the truth of this epistle to the saints. Surely he was "Fortunate"! So are we!

THE WORD OF CHRIST, ITS GRACE AND POWER

"Let the word of Christ be making its home in you richly, in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing yourselves; in psalms, in hymns, in spiritual songs singing with grace in your hearts to God. And everything, whatsoever you may be doing, in word or in act, do all in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God, the Father, through Him" (Col.3:16,17).

The word of Christ needs to be making its home in us, not merely visiting upon occasion. And it needs to be present in abundance, or "richly," not in short supply, or "poorly." How we need to be thinking Christ's thoughts and to be governed by His motives! "Therefore we also, from the day on which we hear" (Col.1:9a) concerning the realization of "the grace of God in truth" (Col.1:6)—whenever we learn that it has been given to any of our fellow believers—we "do not cease praying for you and requesting that you may be filled full with the realization of His will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding" (Col.1:9b).

This is Paul's prayer for us, for "you to walk worthily of the Lord for all pleasing, bearing fruit in every good work, and growing in the realization of God; being endued with all power, in accord with the might of His glory, for all endurance and patience with joy; at the same time giving thanks to the Father, Who makes you competent for a part of the allotment of the saints, in light" (Col.1:10-12).

THE WORD

As a figure of association, Paul uses the expression "the word of" in a number of places in reference to various foundational unfoldings of truth entrusted to him by the Lord Jesus Christ. Each of the following seven expressions or passages from Paul's ministry present or make reference to "the word of" (the teaching concerning) a particular consequential theme: "the word of [God's] grace" (Acts 20:32); "the word of promise" (Rom.9:9); "the word of the truth" (2 Tim.2:15); "the words of the faith" (1 Tim.4:6); "the word of life" (Phil.2:16); "the word of the cross" (1 Cor.1:18); "the word of the conciliation" (2 Cor.5:19).[1]

Yet here in Colossians 3:16 Paul's expression is "the word of Christ." We are to heed his entreaty concerning it: "Let the word of Christ be making its home in you . . . ." Just as any consideration of "the word of God's grace" will concern itself with the nature of and various key elements pertinent to grace, all our meditations upon "the word of Christ" will be centered upon those most notable things pertaining to Him.

Paul speaks to us from the vantage point of his own evangel, the evangel which came to him through a revelation of Jesus Christ (Gal.1:12), which he heralded among the nations (Gal.2:2). He does not even take up the many details of the personal ministry of Jesus, those things associated with the Lord's "personal entrance" to "the entire people of Israel" (cp Acts 13:24; Matt.15:24). Paul begins his evangel where Matthew, Mark, Luke and John conclude theirs. From beginning to end (cp Acts 13:16-48;

1. for a consideration of each of these expressions, cf "Herald the Word," Unsearchable Riches, vol. LXXVI, pp.89-94.

Phil.2:8-11), Paul's message is the sacrifice of Christ and "the blood of His cross" (Col.1:20).

THE SCANDAL OF THE CROSS

To Paul, "the word" which is "of Christ," is vitally connected with "the word of the cross," the sufferings and shame associated with His death. Yet it centers upon, to borrow a phrase from Peter, "the glories after these" (cp 1 Peter 1:11), upon glories which were hidden from the prophets of old of whom Peter writes, glories which are only revealed through the "prophetic scriptures" (Rom. 16:26) of the apostle Paul.

In itself, the word of the cross heralds not Christ glorified, but Christ crucified. To those not called, it appears to be a very stupid message (1 Cor.1:21). It "is stupidity, indeed, to those who are perishing, yet to us who are being saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor.1:18). It speaks of the terrible suffering, the pain, humiliation, cursedness and abandonment of the cross. It presents a bloody Sacrifice—in all its stark ugliness and terror—yet a Sacrifice which is a fragrant odor to God (Eph.5:2).

The "word of Christ" reveals to us, most notably, the significance and consequences of His sacrifice in achieving God's purpose. Briefly, all is for God and His glory, and is according to His purpose. This entails the highest measure of blessing for His creatures. The entire ecclesia, and eventually all mankind, will one day find their All in God, yet only through Christ. God is working all together for good, but only through, and because of, the cross.

Sadly, many who gladly receive the word of the cross with respect to the terrible event itself and its sacrificial nature on their behalf, nonetheless become "enemies of the cross" (Phil.3:18). For they insist on adding something of their own to its saving power, insisting that Christ's work alone is insufficient to ensure their salvation. Though a few of them may succeed in doing so modestly, they all boast in their own flesh, in the supposed "part" which they fancy they had in the whole matter. Thus they nullify the "scandal" (skandalon, AV "offence") or "snare of the cross," its completeness or all-sufficiency for salvation, and so avoid being persecuted for the cross of Christ Jesus (cf Gal.5:11; 6:12-14).

When God enlightens us, He makes known the word of Christ to us. He reveals the truth to us concerning His own righteousness, the good news concerning gratuitous justification for all through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:21-24). It is this word "of Christ," this gracious message pertaining to Him, which must dwell in us if we would enjoy and experience its practical benefits.

So, by His grace, we are heeding Paul's entreaty to "be rejoicing in the Lord. To be writing the same to you is not indeed irksome for me, yet it is your security. Beware of curs; beware of evil workers" (Phil.3:1,2). We are "glorying in Christ Jesus," not in ourselves (not in "that flesh of yours"), for we "have no confidence in flesh" (Phil.3:3; Gal.6:13).

We must beware of those who teach differently, who, like wild dogs of the street, voraciously take to themselves all manner of things from Scripture (since they are "in the Bible") which, as employed by them, detract from, if not altogether deny, the work of Christ. Thus many are distracted from a greater appreciation of the word of Christ, and many more are debarred from it altogether.

FAITH IN WHAT GOD HAS SPOKEN

The word of Christ needs to be making its home in us not only richly, but "in all wisdom" (Col.3:16). "Brethren, do not become little children in mindset. But in evil be minors, yet in mindset become mature" (1 Cor.14:20). "Do not become imprudent, but understand what the will of the Lord is" (Eph.5:17). It is not sufficient simply to read the Scriptures casually, or to repeat many passages from its pages merely by rote. We would become aware of the facts which it contains, and acquire an intelligent grasp of what the Scriptures actually say. This itself is a great advance. Even then, however, we would judge each passage as to whom it concerns, when it applies, and in what sense it is true. This calls for competency, and especially for wisdom. Wisdom is "the faculty which makes the highest and best application of knowledge" (KEYWORD CONCORDANCE, p.329). We need to use our minds[2] and to use them well.

"Faith is out of tidings [what is heard], yet the tidings through a declaration of Christ" (Rom.10:17). "The sword of the spirit . . . is a declaration of God" (Eph.6:17). As Paul says, "In accepting the word heard from us, from God you receive, not the word of human beings, but, according as it truly is, God's word, which is operating also in you who are believing" (1 Thess.2:13).

Our faith, if it is "the faith [which is] of God" (cp Mark 11:23a), is found only in what God has spoken, not in man's mistranslations, misapplications, or inferences. We need to be fostered (NOURISHed) in "the words of the faith" (1 Tim.4:6), and to learn to think and express ourselves accordingly.

It can certainly be helpful to be "admonished" (MIND-PLACED) by those who teach us well, but we also need to be admonishing ourselves, "in psalms, in hymns, in spiritual songs singing [whether literally or figuratively], with grace in our hearts to God" (Col.3:16). It is at least as important for true grace to be a matter of the heart as it is for it to be a matter of the intellect. The joy and assurance of God's gracious goodness to us cannot live in mere intellectual correctness. It is vital for us to be correct that we might be faithful, but it then becomes vital for us "to know the love of Christ as well which is transcending knowledge—that you may be completed for the entire complement of God" (Eph.3:19).

Everything, whatsoever we may be doing, in word or in act, is to be done in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, with thanksgiving to God, the Father, through Him (Col. 3:17). Anything that cannot be done in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, is not to be done at all. This entreaty reminds us of Paul's words, in Romans 12:1,2, to present our bodies a sacrifice, living, holy, well pleasing to God. This is our logical divine service. We are not to be configured to this eon, but to be transformed by the renewing of our mind, for us to be testing what is the will of Cod, good and well pleasing and perfect.

If it was foolish for Israel of old to say, "All that Yahweh speaks we shall do" (Ex.19:8a), it is beyond foolishness for us to make a similar response when reading these words of Paul's. We laud and commend the ideal, but we recognize that we must have a Saviour if we are even to begin to live in accord with these lofty admonitions.

FAITHFULNESS VS. SUCCESS

In the phrase, "Let the word of Christ be making its home in you richly" (Col.3:16), the idea is not "let" in the sense of "permit," but "let" in the sense of, "Let each one be fully assured in his own mind," or, "Let there be light." It is the imperative mood, not the thought of cooperation. We, who are nothing (Gal.6:3), are nonetheless given this imperative.

If we have any hope in heeding this imperative, however, it is not to be in ourselves. The confidence that we have is "through Christ toward God" (2 Cor.3:4). "Not that we are competent of ourselves, to reckon anything as out of ourselves [would be wrong], but our competency is of God" (2 Cor.3:5). "He, then, Who is supplying you with the spirit, and operating works of power among you—" [will be completing what He has undertaken] (Gal.3:5; cp Gal.3:3).

Concerning the one who is infirm in the faith, the apostle says, "he will be made to stand, for the Lord is able to make him stand" (Rom.14:4). Patience will wait upon God and for His appointed time. Similarly, wisdom will shun all human wisdom, especially that concerning "the free will of man," while recognizing and accepting God's wise counsels as to "what must be" (Rom.8:26). We simply wish to be meek and humble, to rely upon God instead of man, to boast in our Saviour instead of ourselves. It is not that we wish to be lax in the meantime, until God gives us further saving grace. Not at all. To the contrary, as in all things, we long to be faithful and we seek to be faithful. Indeed, we are thrilled that, in measure, we are faithful, and we give God all the glory.

But when we fail, as we often do, we wish to recognize that this is because of what we are in ourselves. We are members of the old humanity. We sin because of what we are. We are flesh. "The mindset of the flesh is death . . . because the mindset of the flesh is enmity to God, for it is not subject to the law of God, for neither is it able" (Rom. 8:6,7). Indeed, whenever we obey or disobey, we act due to a cause, and therefore must act as we do whenever we do act as we do.

Until we recognize and understand this simple fact, we can never be humble of heart. Regardless of what we may say, so long as we finally see something of ourselves as the key to our problems, we are boasting in the flesh and not relying on God. The question is not what is popular, but what is true; not what "works," but what is faithful; not what seems right, but what actually is right.

Everyone wants to succeed, even those who have no interest at all in obeying God or in pleasing Him. No one enjoys the suffering which attends failure. Since all genuine believers have a new mindset and walk, it would seem that each one would have some measure of interest not merely in success, but in faithfulness. However, unless we have a greater desire to be faithful than merely to be successful, we will care more about success than faithfulness. Even if we have a considerable desire to be faithful, if our desire to succeed—to have what we want—is greater than our desire to be faithful, we will surely be disqualified as to the faith (2 Tim.3:1-7).

We may well attain a great many of our goals, even including an externally upright walk, while all the while being remarkably unfaithful. Unless our desire for *faith*fulness is greater than our desire for success, we will not enjoy the former even if we should have the latter in abundance. If we do not care how we succeed, we will never actually succeed at all. The only true "success" is found in faithfulness to God. Yet faithfulness is impossible apart from the faith.

Knowing the truth and loving the truth—while making some progress in pursuing righteousness even though falling far short of the ideal—is ever so much better than being ignorant of the truth or willfully repudiating what is actually true, even if we should manage to gratify many of our desires for success and happiness by so doing.

The withdrawal (or "apostasy") from the faith is inevitable, for the spirit is saying "explicitly" that it will occur (1 Tim.4:1,2; 2 Tim.3:1-13; 4:3,4). The only question, from the human standpoint, is whether we will be a part of it. Therefore, under God and in His grace, we wish to save ourselves from such a course (cp 1 Tim.4:1,16). Paul's words to the Ephesian elders serve ideally as a solemn entreaty for us as well: "Now I am aware that, after I am out of reach, burdensome wolves will be entering among you, not sparing the flocklet. And from among yourselves will arise men, speaking perverse things to pull away disciples after themselves. Wherefore, be watching, remembering that for three years, night and day, I cease not admonishing each one with tears. And now I am committing you to God and to the word of His grace, which is able to edify and give the enjoyment of an allotment among all who have been hallowed" (Acts 20:29-32).

LIVING BY THE FAITH OF THE EVANGEL

If to us Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God, we have been called and we are "in Christ" (1 Cor. 1:24). But to be growing in assurance that we are indeed living our lives in the faith of the evangel, we need to be growing in an understanding of the evangel itself and in a practical realization of God's faithful hand in our daily affairs.

"The word of the cross . . . to us who are being saved . . . is God's power" (1 Cor.1:18). Or, to say the same thing, the power of God is the word of the cross. It constitutes God's appointed means. The word of the cross is the agency which God uses to savingly affect us. It is "powerful to God" (cp 2 Cor.10:4). Wisdom will not drink from any other fountain, no matter how sweet its water or promising its cures.

The word of the cross, and its associated revelations, constitute the word of Christ. It is the agency which God uses to effect our practical salvation. He causes us to be influenced by it in ways which result in salvation, in our preservation or deliverance each day according to His own counsels. "The evangel . . . is God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it" (Rom.1:16). Consequently, we say, Let the word of Christ be making its home in you richly.

James R. Coram

TOGETHER WITH THE LORD

THE HOPE of being together with the Lord has been very real to all believers in Jesus since that distant day when He stood upon this earth and announced to His immediate followers that He would soon be leaving them. "I am going," He said, "to make ready a place for you. And if I should go . . . I am coming again and I will be taking you along to Myself, that where I am, you also may be" (John 14:2,3).

Many dear people have read into this passage far more than Jesus actually said, and have supposed that He was going to prepare a place for them in heaven, whereas He was actually telling them that He was going to heaven to prepare a place for them on earth, where all their longings and expectations lay. His followers were looking for the restoration of the Kingdom to Israel. This was the theme of the two who walked with the risen Lord on the way to Emmaus; this was the question on the tongues of those who were with Him on the day of His ascension; this was the last question they put as He was about to leave them (see Luke 24:21; Acts 1:6).

There is something very touching in the effect of the Lord's ascension on His disciples. In the last chapter of Luke, we find that Jesus had been telling them that the message of repentance for the pardon of sins was to be heralded in His name to all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem. Then He took them to Bethany, to the Mount of Olives (Luke 24:50; Acts 1:12). They sensed that something was impending. Important things had happened on previous occasions when Jesus had gone up a mountain: His initial preaching of the rules of the Kingdom (Matt.

5:1); His healing of the multitudes (Matt.15:29-31); the transfiguration (Matt.17:1). All these events took place from mountainsides, and now they were on another mountain. The disciples asked anxiously, and perhaps expectantly, "Lord, are You at this time restoring the Kingdom to Israel?" But Jesus gave them what would seem to them to be an evasive answer. "Not yours is it to know times or eras which the Father places in His own jurisdiction." And then He left them—and that was nearly two thousand years ago, and still He has not come back, and the promises concerning the Kingdom remain unfulfilled!

How the surprised eyes of the disciples followed the vanishing figure of the Lord into heaven, until He disappeared in the cloud! How longingly they continued to gaze after He had gone! Had He really gone? Would He perhaps reappear in a moment or two? What were they to do next?

It was very necessary that their disturbed minds be put at rest, so two messengers in white attire suddenly appeared beside them and brought them back to earth with the question, "Men! Galileans! Why do you stand, looking into heaven? This Jesus Who is taken up from you into heaven shall be coming thus, in the manner in which you gaze at Him going into heaven" (Acts 1:11). But, we repeat, nearly two thousand years have passed, and still the Lord has not come back.

"If I go," Jesus had said, "I am coming again." The messengers were reminding the disciples of this promise. Earlier, on this same mountain, the disciples had pressed the Lord to tell them what would be the sign of His presence, and of the end of the eon (Matt.24:3). Jesus had told them that His presence would be preceded by terrible and violent events, including a time of affliction such as never had been known before, nor would ever occur again. So severe, in fact, would it be that no flesh at all would be saved, unless those days were in some way shortened—discounted, lopped off at the end. For the sake of the chosen in Israel, this would actually happen—they would be discounted.

Many of these calamities which will beset mankind, and Israel in particular, are listed in Matthew 24, and in verse 29 we find Jesus continuing, "Now immediately after the affliction of those days the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall not be giving her beams, and the stars shall be falling from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." In short, an intense darkness will set in, an unnatural darkness probably accompanied by great noises. "And then shall be appearing" the sign for which the disciples were asking, the sign of the presence of the Lord, "the sign of the Son of Mankind in heaven, and then all the tribes of the land shall grieve, and they shall be seeing the Son of Humanity coming on the clouds of heaven with power and much glory" (Matt.24:30).

In Revelation 1:7, John says, "Look! He is coming with clouds, and every eye shall be seeing Him—those also who stab Him—and all the tribes of the land shall be grieving over Him. Yes! Amen!" Though some may become aware of the imminence of His approach by taking note of events as they occur, His presence will not be manifest until He is really here, and many will be taken unawares by the suddenness of His appearing. The only sign that they will get is when He actually reveals Himself as the Son of Mankind in heaven, and the tribes of the land will then grieve because they will at last realize the insult and the injury which mankind as a whole, and they in particular, have done to Him.

The faithful in Israel are preserved through this period of affliction which precedes the second coming of the Lord, but even for them it will be a very trying experience. In reference to them, it is said, "He who endures to the consummation, he shall be saved" (Matt.24:13). But they will not be without encouragement. Quite apart from the words of Jesus Himself, which they will surely remember and take to heart during those dark days, the epistles of Peter were specially written for the faithful ones of persecuted Israel in the end time. They were probably penned during the persecutions of Nero, and would have had an application at that time, but they have undoubtedly been preserved to be a stimulant towards endurance during the far greater afflictions that are to test the nation before the return of the Lord. To try to apply them to the ecclesia of today, in this intervening period of grace, is to remove them completely from their correct setting.

Now, just as the afflictions under Nero were the possible occasion for the writing of Peter's epistles, so a different persecution was the immediate cause of Paul's earliest writings, the two letters to the Thessalonians. For the Thessalonian ecclesia was suffering a rather grievous, though limited, persecution as a result of agitations stirred up by fanatical Jews who were opposed to the teachings of Paul. And again, while Paul wrote to the afflicted saints of his own day, his letters, like Peter's, have a future application which is even more important than the immediate one. For they too point to the coming day of the Lord, and to the terrible events which introduce it. But with a difference, for Paul is not writing to those who are called upon to endure to the end to be saved, but rather to a people living in a day of absolute grace—a community whose salvation is entirely of God, and who, consequently, are not called upon to pass through a day of indignation. Paul, in fact, presents the Lord to the saints in an entirely new light—as a "Rescuer out of the coming indignation."

We find this phrase in the tenth verse of the first chapter, where Paul reminds the Thessalonians that they are waiting for God's Son out of the heavens (1 Thess.1:10). But now let us look at the first few verses of chapter five. Here the apostle writes, "Now concerning the times and the eras, brethren, you have no need to be written to, for you yourselves are accurately aware that the day of the Lord is as a thief in the night—thus is it coming! Now whenever they may be saying 'Peace and security,' then extermination is standing by them unawares, even as a pang over the pregnant, and they may by no means escape" (1 Thess.5:1-3).

They may by no means escape. That is one side of the picture, but now let us look at the other (verses 4-5): "Now you, brethren, are not in darkness, that the day may overtake you as a thief, for you are all sons of the light and sons of the day." And now Paul associates himself with them. "We are not of the night nor of the darkness. Consequently, then, we may not be drowsing, even as the rest, but we may be watching and be sober. For those who are drowsing are drowsing at night, and those who are drunk are drunk at night. Yet we, being of the day, may be sober, putting on the cuirass of faith and love, and the helmet, the expectation of salvation, for God does not appoint us to indignation, but to the procuring of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, the One Who dies for our sakes, that, whether we may be watching or drowsing, we should live at the same time together with Him. Wherefore, be consoling one another and edifying one the other, according as you are doing also" (1 Thess.5:9-11).

These words should of themselves be sufficient to make us realize that here is a different revelation of truth from anything given elsewhere. When, for example, Jesus spoke of the day of the Lord, it was with an exhortation to His followers to keep awake, lest, being asleep at the time, they might miss the opportunity of entering into its blessings. Over and over again this thought is pressed home. But here it is not so. Paul is absolutely positive. Though likewise urging us to be watching, he insists that it will nevertheless make no difference to our prospects of being with the Lord whether we are found watching or drowsing when He comes, for we are not appointed to indignation, but to the procuring of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Then how is this rescue out of the coming indignation to be effected? The apostle tells us in the previous chapter. Before ever the Lord is manifested to Israel and to the world—before ever the great day of indignation sets in, He is to make a prior descent to the atmosphere surrounding this earth, to call His ecclesia to meet Him in the air. This is something Peter, James, John and the rest knew nothing about. It was revealed only to Paul, and disclosed by him to the saints. Let us reread the well-known words of 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18:

"Now we are not wanting you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning those who are reposing, lest you may be sorrowing according as the rest also who are having no expectation. For if we are believing that Jesus dies and He rises, thus also, those who are put to repose, will God, through Jesus, be leading forth together with Him. For this we are saying to you by the word of the Lord, that we, the living, who are surviving to the presence of the Lord, should by no means outstrip those who are put to repose, for the Lord Himself will be descending from heaven with a shout of command, with the voice of the Chief Messenger, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead in Christ shall be rising first. Thereupon we, the living, who are surviving, shall at the same time be snatched away together with them in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. And thus shall we always be together with the Lord. So that, be consoling one another with these words."

These verses form the basis of our expectation today, as well as the expectation of all those who have fallen asleep in Christ all down the years. Let us note that they are held together by three solid assurances, each beginning with the little word "for."

"For if we are believing that Jesus dies and He rises." This is the first assurance. Well then, let us ask ourselves, do we believe this? If we do not, then we have no expectation at all (1 Cor.15:17-19); but if we do, then we should see this assurance as a firm guarantee that those who are put to repose, will God, through Jesus, lead forth together with Him.

"For this we are saying to you by the word of the Lord" (1 Thess.4:15). This is the second assurance. Paul stresses that he is not voicing his own opinion, but rather a direct declaration from the risen Christ. Do we believe Him, and understand that Paul is His mouthpiece to the nations today? If so, then we shall accept as a fact, his declaration that those who survive to the presence of the Lord, will gain no advantage whatever over those who have died during the intervening time, even though, in consequence, they may not have had this full knowledge which is available to us today.

"For the Lord Himself will be descending from heaven with a shout of command . . . "(4:16). In another epistle we read that "The Lord knows those who are His." This is in the second letter to Timothy (2:19), written at a time when the ecclesia was already in disarray, just as, to be sure, it is at this present time. Only the Lord knows all those who are His, and we may be sure that not one of them will be missing on that day when He calls them to meet Him in the air.

We may not be always certain
Whom the Lord has made His own,
But to Him, Who comes to call them,
Each is intimately known.
And in this we may be happy,
When He greets them in the air,
Every member of His body
Will assuredly be there.

Regardless of all the confusion caused by so many sects and religions, the Lord most surely knows those who are His, and the fact that He is coming in person to meet them, is the third great assurance that we, who believe that He is our Saviour, will one day be together with the Lord.

SUFFICIENT QUESTIONS

Let us begin this section by asking ourselves a few questions. If it is part of our expectation that we shall be together with the Lord, would it be true to say that we are together with Him now? If being together with the Lord is something which is promised for the future, as it is in Thessalonians, can it be a present experience? And where is this lasting association with the Lord to be maintained? In the air, where our meeting with Him is to take place? And what is the purpose of this association? In other words, what are we going to do together with Him throughout the time encompassed by the word "always"?

Let us remind ourselves that the order in which the Pauline letters appear in our Bibles (canonical order) is not the order in which they were written (chronological order). In the order of writing, the two letters to the Thessalonians come first, although (apart from the personal letters to Timothy, Titus and Philemon) they are last in the canonical order. Being the first of Paul's writings, they never rise higher than this earth and its surrounding atmosphere. That is to say, they never take us higher than a fleshly body can breathe. The Lord meets us in the air. He descends from heaven to do this.

The astronauts, in their journeys to the moon, have risen much farther from the earth's surface than Paul raises the saints in Thessalonians; and (within the context of this letter) although the cumulative effect of the gathering together of the saints to meet the Lord in the air is far, far greater than anything that has gone before, individually it is not so. Wonderful things had happened all down the years. Enoch was taken out of the impending judgment of his time, though Noah was called upon to go through it. Elijah was caught up into heaven. Lazarus was raised from the dead with a shout. In the context of Thessalonians, there is nothing to suggest that the individual experience of each believer is anything greater than what had happened before, with the exception of the one great promise, "Thus shall we always be together with the Lord." This stamps it as something exceptional, for no such promise was made to Enoch, to Elijah, or to Lazarus.

THE WORD OF THE CROSS

In his letters to the Thessalonians, Paul tells us no more than that we are to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. He does not say anything about a change of body to suit a celestial environment. That is why he has to keep us within the earth's atmosphere. In Thessalonians, he cannot speak of a change of body. Why is this? Simply because he has not yet preached the word of the cross. This he does in the very first chapter of his next letter, the first letter to the Corinthians. Let us remember, Corinthians was written before Romans. It is well that we should appreciate this. The second group of letters, which includes Romans, first and second Corinthians and Galatians, has its basis in the word of the cross. The cross is not mentioned at all in Thessalonians.

With the cross comes a change. The flesh is mentally discarded—considered to be dead—crucified together with Him, and, as Paul puts it in his second letter to the Corinthians, "If anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation: the primitive passed by. Look! there has come new" (5:17). A new creation! This change is so radical that, from now on, we are to be acquainted with no one according to flesh. "Yet," adds the apostle, "even if we have known Christ according to flesh, nevertheless now we are knowing Him so no longer" (2 Cor.5:16,17).

The disciples, who had watched Jesus ascend, had known Him only according to flesh. The Thessalonians too were acquainted with Him according to flesh. To them, Paul was the apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, not the apostle of Christ Jesus, as He is in Corinthians and in all his later epistles. (Christ Jesus is the title of the risen Lord.) Only now, after the preaching of the cross, can the saints be acquainted with Christ according to spirit; now they can attain to heights to which the mind of the soulish man cannot aspire (1 Cor.2:14-16). And so, to the Corinthians, Paul redescribes the scene which he had first portrayed to the Thessalonians, but now he is able to add more detail. He can now raise it to a plane higher than the earth, and so the actual meeting with the Lord in the air is not mentioned. This is what he says in 1 Corinthians 15, beginning at verse 42:

"Thus also is the resurrection of the dead ones. It is sown in corruption; it is roused in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is roused in glory. It is sown in infirmity; it is roused in power. It is sown a soulish body; it is roused a spiritual body." Notice the change in each instance.

"If there is a soulish body, there is a spiritual also. Thus it is written also, the first human, Adam, becomes a living soul; the last Adam a vivifying Spirit. But not first the spiritual, but the soulish, thereupon the spiritual.

"The first human was out of the earth, soilish; the second Human is the Lord out of heaven. Such as the soilish one is, such are those also who are soilish, and such as the Celestial One, such are those also who are celestials. And according as we wear the image of the soilish, we should be wearing the image also of the Celestial." Contrast after contrast!

"Now this I am averring, brethren, that flesh and blood is not able to enjoy an allotment in God's kingdom, neither is corruption enjoying the allotment of incorruption. Look! a secret to you am I telling!" (Here the apostle picks up the theme, of Thessalonians). "We all, indeed, shall not be put to repose, yet we all shall be changed, in an instant, in the twinkle of an eye, at the last trump. For He will be trumpeting, and the dead ones will be roused incorruptible and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality.

"Now, whenever this corruptible should put on incorruption and this mortal should put on immortality, then shall come to pass the word, the word which is written, Swallowed up is Death by victory."

Here, in 1 Corinthians, the facts as given to the Thessalonian friends are confirmed, but enormously amplified. We all, indeed, shall not be put to repose, yet we all shall be changed, in the twinkle of an eye, at the last trump. This does not refer to any of the seven trumpets brought to our notice in the book of Revelation, but to the trumpet of God, which our Lord sounds when He comes to meet His saints in the air. With the early notes of that trumpet, the dead will be raised; with the final note, the last trump, the living will be changed.

But let us note carefully that the verses we have just read in Corinthians do not apply, at this stage, to all and sundry; they are often read at funeral services as though they do. They only apply to those who have been brought to the cross of Christ. We believe that all will eventually be brought to that happy position—that the work begun at the cross will go on until all are ultimately reconciled to God, but it is simply not true to say, apart from the cross, that this corruptible will put on incorruption and this mortal immortality.

We are prone, at times, to speak of immortality as though it were something that the Scriptures are proclaiming all down their pages, whereas Paul is the only one, in the whole of God's Word, who introduces this theme, and he uses the Greek word athanasia (immortality) only three times (1 Cor.15:53,54; 1 Tim.6:16). And he only uses it after he has proclaimed the word of the cross. Paul is the only one who draws the distinction between mortality and immortality. Even Jesus never spoke of immortality. It could not be promised to anybody until the word of the cross had been preached, and this commission was given to Paul. Even Paul could not say anything about immortality to the Thessalonians, for he had not then written anything about the cross.

But Paul did promise the Thessalonians that they would be "always together with the Lord." He did not say this to the Corinthians. Why not? To find the answer, let us look at the Roman epistle, chapter six, verses 1-11:

"What, then, shall we declare? That we may be persisting in sin that grace should be increasing?

"May it not be coming to that! We, who died to sin, how shall we still be living in it? Or are you ignorant that whoever are baptized into Christ Jesus, are baptized into His death? We, then, were entombed together with Him through baptism into death, that, even as Christ was roused from among the dead through the glory of the Father, thus we also should be walking in newness of life. For if we have become planted together in the likeness of His death, nevertheless we shall be of the resurrection also, knowing this, that our old humanity was crucified together with Him, that the body of Sin may be nullified, for us by no means to be still slaving for Sin, for one who dies has been justified from Sin.

"Now if we died together with Christ, we believe that we shall be living together with Him also, having perceived that Christ, being roused from among the dead, is no longer dying. Death is lording it over Him no longer, for in that He died, He died to Sin once for all time, yet in that He is living, He is living to God. Thus you also, be reckoning yourselves to be dead, indeed, to Sin, yet living to God in Christ Jesus, our Lord."

There we have it. What is put before the flesh in Thessalonians as a future expectation (although the later revelation of Corinthians shows that the flesh must be changed before the expectation can be realized) is enjoyed by the spirit in Romans as a present experience. There is, however, a subtle difference. In Thessalonians, it is "Together with the Lord;" in Romans, it is "Together with Christ." And this is a closer 'togetherness' than that which is presented to us in Thessalonians, which is a "togetherness" of future association; this is a "togetherness" of vital spiritual experience, which takes us on to the cross with Him, and into the tomb with Him, before we enter into a state of glorious living with Him. We are united with Him in His sufferings as well as in His glory. Because we have now reached the cross, we can regard our flesh as dead—as having been crucified together with Him. In spirit, we are living, even now, with the risen Christ; waiting only for our bodies to be changed, in an instant, in the twinkle of an eye, when He comes, for us to enjoy to the full the "togetherness" of living with Him.

We are watching, we are waiting
For that long expected sound,
That will call us to His presence,
And to joys that will abound.
In an instant, in a moment,
In the twinkle of an eye,
Changed from weakness into glory
For that gathering on high.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE PRISON EPISTLES

Have we yet reached the summit of Divine revelation concerning our theme? By no means! The scene which Paul has already described in Thessalonians, and enlarged upon in Corinthians, is again brought to our notice in his letter to the Philippians. Now Philippians is one of the prison group of epistles, being sandwiched between Ephesians and Colossians in the canonical order. These were the last of Paul's general letters to be written, and undoubtedly contain the highest revelations ever made by God to man. They unfold to us the secrets of the celestial realms, and make known to us God's purpose both concerning His Son and the ecclesia which is Christ's body.

In Corinthians we learned that, when the Lord comes, we are all to be changed. Changed into what, and for what purpose? Corinthians does not tell us. Corinthians cannot tell us, because, when Paul wrote that letter, he had not revealed the secret of Christ. This he does in Ephesians and Colossians. Not until Paul writes from his prison in Rome does he unfold the greatness of God's purpose; that it is eonian in its extent and universal in its expanse; that it includes the heavens and all their vast contents as well as the earth; that Christ is exalted to a position of 'Head over all,' and that the whole universe is to be headed up into Him. And what of the ecclesia, the church? Why, it is shown to have been chosen in Him before the disruption of the world; it is declared to be blessed with every spiritual blessing among the celestials; to it, Christ has been given as "Head over all" that the ecclesia may be used in the work of subjecting all to God. And then, in Philippians 3:20, we have this most remarkable phrase, which should cause us to ponder deeply, "For our realm is inherent in the heavens."

Inherent in the heavens: What do we understand by the word, "inherent"? Let us note two of its other usages. The man whom Peter and John healed at the gate of the temple in Jerusalem was "inherently lame from his mother's womb" (Acts 3:2); that is, his lameness was inseparable from him; it had always been with him; it belonged to him. According to Paul, Peter was "inherently a Jew" (Gal.2:14). He belonged to Israel; he could never disassociate himself from Israel. Peter could never have written, as Paul wrote, that in Christ "there is no Jew nor yet Greek" and that "neither circumcision is availing anything, nor uncircumcision" (Gal.3:28; 5:6). Peter's realm was inherently Jewish; ours is inherently celestial. Our realm belongs to the heavens, and has belonged to the heavens since that far-off day before the disruption, when we were chosen in Christ.

We cannot really appreciate the prison letters of Paul unless we take up our position in the midst of the heavens. Astronomers tell us that the earth is, in fact, fairly central in the universe, and is surrounded by space stretching for billions and billions of light years in all directions. Countless numbers of stars and nebulae form the material content of the heavens, but their spiritual content is undoubtedly a correspondingly uncountable number of celestial beings. All the evidences of Scripture suggest that they are both very numerous and very powerful.

In these prison letters we learn quite a lot about them. They have degrees of status, for in both Ephesians and Colossians we read of sovereignties, authorities, powers and lordships among them, and it is above all these that Christ is raised, and it is as Head over all these that He is given to the ecclesia. And why is He thus given? Because the realm of the ecclesia is inherent in the heavens, and it is the privilege of the ecclesia to be used of God in the work of reconciling all in the heavens to Himself. This will be no simple task.

It is a complete fallacy to imagine that all in the heavens is at present in happy relationship with God. True, the Hebrew Scriptures speak of heavenly hosts, who hearken to the voice of the Lord, and do His pleasure (Psalm 103:21). But Ephesians 6:12 speaks of "spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials." It is because our realm is inherent in the heavens that we do not wrestle with humanity, flesh and blood, but with these celestial forces of wickedness. Colossians 1:20 makes it quite clear that the reconciling work covers those in the heavens as well as those on earth.

The work of reconciling the universe to God will take a long time, but there is no force even among the celestials which can prevent it, for Christ is exalted above the very highest powers that exist. He is graced with the Name which is above every name, that in His Name, Jesus, "every knee should bow, celestial and terrestrial and subterranean, and every tongue should acclaim that Jesus Christ is Lord, for the glory of God, the Father" (Phil.2:10,11). It is in Christ that the lot of the ecclesia is cast, and it is this superior One Who is given to it as Head over all.

Let us now look at three Scriptures which show unequivocally that the realm of the ecclesia is "inherent in the heavens."

Ephesians 1:3: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who blesses us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials, in Christ, according as He chooses us in Him before world disruption . . . ." This shows the origin of the ecclesia: "among the celestials."

Ephesians 2:6: ". . . rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials, in Christ Jesus, that, in the oncoming eons, He should display the transcendent riches of His grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus." Here we see the future place and function of the ecclesia in God's operations: "among the celestials."

Ephesians 3:10: "That now may be made known to the sovereignties and the authorities among the celestials, through the ecclesia, the multifarious wisdom of God." Here is shown the present influence of the ecclesia: "among the celestials."

In the context of these prison letters we are clearly out of place on earth; against this celestial background these fleshly tabernacles in which we now dwell become bodies of humiliation, tending always to retard us, and the sooner that they are out of the way the better. The only body really suitable for one whom God has chosen for His ecclesia is one conformed to the body of Christ's glory.

And so, in Philippians 3:20,21, the third account of the Lord's coming amplifies still further the descriptions that we have noted in Thessalonians and 1 Corinthians, for now we read:

"For our realm is inherent in the heavens, out of which we are awaiting a Saviour also, the Lord, Jesus Christ, Who will transfigure the body of our humiliation, to conform it to the body of His glory, in accord with the operation which enables Him even to subject all to Himself."

Nothing here about a meeting in the air, or about the sounding of a trumpet! In the context of the prison letters these are irrelevant details. And what about our always being together with the Lord? Is this now a future expectation or a present spiritual experience? It is both of these, but in the prison letters, something far deeper as well. It is an eonian "togetherness" of purpose. What is future in Thessalonians, present and future in Romans and Corinthians, becomes past, present and future in the prison letters. The ecclesia is shown to be with Christ—nay, more, to be in Christ—from the time when it was chosen in Him before the disruption of the world (long before any of its members appeared on earth) until that grand consummation when God will be All in all. The bond between Christ and the ecclesia becomes a fundamental and essential component of God's purpose; the ecclesia is Christ's complement, by which all in all is being completed.

Paul is the only apostle to speak of the purpose of God, and again only after he has preached the word of the cross.

In all but two instances, whenever Paul uses the term purpose, either as a verb or as a noun, it is to draw attention to the closeness of the relationship between Christ and His ecclesia. In Romans 8:28,29, for instance, he speaks of those "who are called according to the purpose that, whom He [God] foreknows, He designates beforehand, also, to be conformed to the image of His Son, for Him to be Firstborn among many brethren." But it is in Ephesians where the intensity and strength and importance of the bond is most fully brought out. Let us read Ephesians 1, from verse 9:

"In all wisdom and prudence making known to us the secret of His will (in accord with His delight, which He purposes in Him) to have an administration of the complement of the eras, to head up all in the Christ—both that in the heavens and that on the earth—in Him in Whom our lot is cast also, designated beforehand according to the purpose of the One Who is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will, that we should be for the laud of His glory, who are pre-expectant in the Christ."

"In Him in Whom our lot is cast." This is the state of "togetherness" as portrayed in the prison letters. Or, to quote from Colossians, our lives are "hid together with Christ in God" (Col.3:3). These expressions are far more intense, far more dynamic, far more penetrating than the one in Thessalonians, "Thus shall we always be together with the Lord." They contain within them the basic ingredient of the whole of the Divine operations. When God first conceived His purpose for the universe, He built it upon the basic unity of Christ and the ecclesia, and the calling with which He now calls us is "in accord with His own purpose and grace, the grace which is given to us in Christ Jesus before times eonian" (2 Tim.1:9). It is because of this radical oneness that Paul can write, again in reference to God's purpose, that remarkable passage in Ephesians 3:9-11:

"To enlighten all as to what is the administration of the secret, which has been concealed from the eons in God, Who creates all, that now may be made known to the sovereignties and authorities among the celestials, through the ecclesia, the multifarious wisdom of God, in accord with the purpose of the eons, which He makes in Christ Jesus, our Lord."

Readers of Unsearchable Riches will be well aware how necessary it is to correctly partition the Word of Truth, and nowhere is this more desirable than in the writings of Paul himself. We should mentally place them into three boxes. The box containing the two letters to the Thessalonians should be placed on the ground. The second box, containing the two letters to the Corinthians, Galatians and Romans, with its key, the Word of the Cross, should be placed on top; and the third box, containing the prison letters of Ephesians, Philippians and Colossians, should be lifted higher still.

And whether we only comprehend the truths of the first box, or whether we assimilate the more advanced teachings of the second box (and many believers have lived and died without understanding the preaching of the cross!), or whether we are given the ability to grasp the length, breadth, depth and height of the marvelous treasures of the third box—in whichever category of believers we find ourselves, let us rejoice in this—THE LORD KNOWS THOSE WHO ARE HIS, and all whom He calls in that day will always be together with Him. No one is saved by knowledge; each is saved in grace through faith (Eph.2:8). And whatever knowledge we may lack in that day will be made up to us when the Lord comes to meet us in the air, and we are all changed in an instant, and these bodies of humiliation are conformed to the body of His glory.

So let us not be despondent if we cannot for the moment grasp some of the deeper truths of Scripture. This does not mean that we should give up trying to understand them. Paul's aim was to present every man mature in Christ Jesus, but he realized that this would not be easy. He calls it a toil and a struggle. But if we can enter into the truths of the prison epistles by seeking that which is above, where Christ is—by being disposed to that which is above in preference to that which is on earth—then, even in this life, we shall enter into joy unspeakable, for we shall see our unity with Christ as something really vital to God's designs—as nothing less, in fact, than the firm central pillar around which the whole edifice of God's eonian purpose is being constructed. And with this realization, our lives will take on a new meaning. Every vestige of vagueness and despondency will vanish; doubts and disappointments will melt away; frustrations and failures will become insignificant, for our lives will have become supremely purposeful in the Beloved, Whose complement we are.

Our lives are hid together with Christ in God. Whenever Christ, our Life, should be manifested, then we also shall be manifested together with Him in glory (Col.3:4).

This the summit of our blessings,
To be always with the Lord,
And to wear the glorious likeness
Of the One we have adored;
Then throughout His Father's kingdom,
For God's glory we shall shine,
With a splendor all transcendent
And a radiance Divine.

John H. Essex.

A SURE AND CERTAIN HOPE

In the preceding article, John Essex begins with "hope," but thereafter uses the CV term "expectation." A few lines into the article he writes of "longings and expectations" (p.167). This helps direct our minds to the fact that the Greek word elpis expresses both certainty and a longing for what God has prepared for us in the future.

GOD IS ONE

We come now to Romans 3:29-31 which is a passage of transition. We have seen that God's evangel to begin with, is the message that God is righteous in His operation of justifying all human beings. All sin and are wanting of the glory of God, yet now on the basis of the faith of Jesus Christ (in His obedience unto the death of the cross) God is manifested to be what He is, the righteous "Righteousifier" of each and every irreverent and unrighteous human.

[29] Or is He the God of the Jews only? Is He not of the nations also? Yes, of the nations also, [30] if so be that 'God is One, Who will be justifying the Circumcision out of faith and the Uncircumcision through 'that faith.

Paul does not deny that God is the God of the Jews in a special way in the past (as, for example, announced at Sinai, cf Deut.6:4) and in the future (cf especially Jer.30 and 31, and note Matt.1:22; 2:6). In this epistle itself he affirms that their prerogative, the Circumcision's benefit, is "much in every manner." They are entrusted with the oracles of God (Rom.3:2). It is out of Israel that Christ comes according to the flesh (Rom.9:5), becoming "the Servant of the Circumcision . . . to confirm the patriarchal promises" (Rom.15:8). Nevertheless, as made clear in Romans 3:21-28 (CV, as revised), God's evangel for which Paul is severed, the evangel which manifests God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith in the gratuitous justification of the sinner is "for all" (Rom.3:22), whether of the Circumcision or the Uncircumcision.

The viewpoint of Romans 3:21-30 is wider than that of the law and the prophets. It is wider than shown in the evangel of the Circumcision (Gal.2:7), and even wider than Romans 4. It spans the eons and brings us to Romans 5 which tells of God's love commended in Christ Jesus, when all shall be constituted righteous. It accords thoroughly with Philippians 2:6-11 and anticipates Ephesians and Colossians concerning the revelations there of the administration of the complement of the eras and the reconciliation of all.

It has been shown in this passage of God's word that God as the righteous God Who makes each individual human righteous by means of Jesus's faith is One in this work. He is not only the God of the Jews, but the God of the nations—not only the God of those who are of the Circumcision but of those who are of the Uncircumcision (to speak of humanity as divided in so much of Scripture). God is the God of us all in the giving of His Son in His purpose and goal unto the end that all people and all their deeds be justified.

WHO WILL BE JUSTIFYING

In Romans 3:21-24 justification is viewed as a present accomplishment. Now in 3:29,30 it is viewed as a future realization. In both cases the viewpoint is without tangible evidence. We have only the word of God's evangel that God is righteous and that Christ's death and resurrection is the means by which all human beings have been delivered from sin and death and will be made righteous with glorious vindication of their existence. That evangel is a great treasure to have, yet God must endow us with faith that the evangel is true and shall become reality in every way.

God will be bringing the Circumcision into the righteousness which has been made certain when Christ died, and they, as a part of all humanity, died (proleptically) with Him (2 Cor.5:14). They, in God's appointed time, will be enjoying literal justification achieved on the basis of Jesus's faith. This is expressed by the preposition "out" (Greek ek), which was the preposition used in the Greek translation (the Septuagint) of Habakkuk 2:4 and just now in Romans 3:26 used to speak of justification by means of Jesus's faith.

So also God will be bringing the Uncircumcision into the full enjoyment of righteousness which God has secured by means of "that faith," the faith of Jesus Christ. Now Paul uses the Greek preposition dia to express the thought of "by means of." This is the preposition that was used more readily to express this idea in the Greek of Paul's day.

Both ek and dia basically express the sense of "by means of" in this passage, except that ek points to the source of the means, and dia to its channel. God's righteous, gracious, and gratuitous work of justification is based on Jesus Christ's faith in His God and Father's will for Him.

But here I would agree with many others that the "through that faith" as used of the Uncircumcision suggests something distinctive about them in relation to the Circumcision. As to that future when all will be constituted righteous and God will be revealed as righteous in all He is and does, the basis is the faith of Jesus Christ in dying for sinners. In this the "out of faith" and the "through that faith" express the same thing. But as to the past and concerning the intervening future before the ultimate glory involving all human beings, and all their sins, there is a distinction between the Circumcision and the Uncircumcision with regard to justification.

This distinction is expressed in Galatians 2:7 where Paul says, "I have been entrusted with the evangel of the Uncircumcision as Peter of the Circumcision." Paul is about to narrow the scope of God's evangel in Romans 4 as it relates to those presently believing it, to whom Paul is commissioned as their apostle.

This is a reckoned justification, not that ultimate justification when all shall be constituted righteous and God will be perceived by all as the righteous Justifier. This reckoned justification is like that of Abraham in Genesis 15:6, bestowed on his believing God apart from works of law.

On the other hand, James, who is of the Circumcision and writes to the twelve tribes, says, "You see that by works a human is being justified and not by faith only" (James 2:24). Here, as with Paul in Romans 4 justification is not used in its literal sense of made righteous but of being accounted righteous. But James adds works to faith.

George L. Rogers, in Unsearchable Riches, volume 20, page 334 claims that, "To justify is always to account righteous." He overstates the case. In support of this claim he points to Luke 7:35 and 10:29 along with Romans 3:4, and I would add Romans 4. Yet Pastor Rogers was commenting on Romans 3:24 where (as we can now see) justification goes far beyond a declaration of righteousness. Justification through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus and which manifests God's righteousness can be nothing except the making of irreverent and unrighteous human beings righteous (cp Rom.5:19). When Christ died, all died (2 Cor.5:14). This was death in the sense of the annihilation of the old humanity. Christ was given up because of our offenses and roused because of our justifying (Rom. 4:25). Christ's faith in dying for sinners justifies us in that we were put to death in His death (Rom.6:3) and this is true of all (though not yet recognized, and hardly so by believers). It is on this basis that all will be vivified in Christ (1 Cor.15:22). Thus God's righteousness will be fully and gloriously made manifest to all.

It is true that both Circumcision and Uncircumcision will be justified in its literal grammatical sense of being made righteous, and either "out of faith" or "through faith" can express this fact. But Paul chooses "through" to express the relationship of Christ's faith to the justification of the Uncircumcision, and it may well be that he does so with a glance ahead to what he is about to say about a reckoned ("accounted") justification.

In this way, by such a double application of "through that faith [of Jesus]," Paul turns our attention to justification as it is placed "on those who are believing" (3:22). This will be an exposition on the words "for faith" in Romans 1:17. In Romans 3:21-30 he has dealt with the revelation of God's righteousness by means of the Righteous One's faith, but now he will deal more directly with this evangel as it is the evangel for our faith—for our believing.

LAW SUSTAINED

31 Are we, then, nullifying law through ᵗthat faith? May it not ᵇcomeᵒ to that! But indeed we are sustaining law.

Paul has finished, for the present, the evangel as it is given "for all" (Rom.3:22) and he turns his attention to the "on all who are believing" of that same verse. The believers are justified gratuitously in God's grace through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (through His faith) because they are part of all humanity. But now Paul will speak of them separately as those who are presently believing God's evangel concerning Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Consequently Jesus Christ's faith (His giving of Himself for all sinners) is apart from human works of law. But so is our present, reckoned justification which is ours on believing. (Similarly the Circumcision will be declared righteous before actually made righteous. This will be for one thousand years and will be received when they both believe and do the works of the law under the new covenant.)

Thus Paul turns directly to those who are believing God's evangel, who, whether of the Circumcision or Uncircumcision, are sons of Abraham as he was before circumcision was laid down as law. In doing this he sustains what is written in the law, the Torah. Genesis 15:6 speaks of a reckoned justification based on what Christ would do

later by faith's law. Consequently, in Romans 4 Paul will speak of accounted justification. But the basis of such a limited and temporary justification has been set before us in Romans 3:21-30, all proleptically made righteous by means of Jesus Christ's faith, for the manifestation of God's righteousness. Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

THE WORD of God does not change, but the translation and understanding of it must continually be adjusted more truly to what the Word actually is saying. From the first issue of Unsearchable Riches in October 1909 there has been a call for adjustment in much of the usual and dominant thinking concerning what God is saying in the Scriptures and especially what He is saying directly to us. This has been so even to calls for adjustments to previous adjustments. At first the "Authorized Version" of 1611 (somewhat adjusted itself) was used for the most part. But it soon became apparent that a new translation was needed, based on a Greek text that reflected the original wording as accurately as seemed possible. This was a gigantic challenge and task, involving much drudgery and perseverance. A first edition of the Concordant Version was issued in 1926, joined with a "Lexical Concordance" in 1931. Then a new approach using different typefaces and superior letters to indicate the Greek text more literally in the translation itself was issued in 1942, joined by the Keyword Concordance in 1944. This too was revised in 1966 under the name CONCORDANT LITERAL NEW TESTAMENT, again revised slightly in 1976. Yet now we are struggling to prepare a further (and in some ways a more radical) revision to be called the CONCORDANT VERSION NEW TESTAMENT, designed to accompany the CONCORDANT VERSION OLD TESTAMENT, first issued in 2014 and slightly revised in 2021.

But why all this? It is hardly noticed even by fellow believers, and when it is noticed there is still much disagreement about what God is saying. Nevertheless God continues to operate all in accord with the counsel of His will (Eph.1:11), and if in any way He uses us to testify to this fact and to what He has made known in His Word as to His counseled will, may it be so that He continues to do so in this small effort of a concordant translation and ministry.

Once again we draw attention to some important and happy revelations made known in God's Word: (1) The consoling expectation of always being together with the Lord (pages 5-21); (2) The evangel of Christ's faith unto the death of the cross and God's rousing of Him from among the dead ones (pages 22-40), and (3) Our reliance on God Who is carrying out His purpose within a series of eons beginning with creation and consummating in God being All in all (pages 41-48).

(1) There is sorrow in the death of those near us, family, companions, friends and especially of fellow believers, and there is loss in the death of every human being. Death is the big evil. But that evil of the death of God's Son nearly two thousand years ago produces the greatest of all goods.

(2) The death of Christ in faith and obedience unto the cross gives us joyful and peaceful expectation of the death of death and end of sin. "The night progresses yet the day is near" (Romans 13:12). Thus we read in Romans 4:25:

Jesus our Lord "is given up because of our offenses,
And He is roused because of our justifying."

(3) In this "We rely on the living God Who is the Saviour of all human beings" (1 Tim.4:10). "Rely" and "expect" are the same word in Greek. Consequently this issue of Unsearchable Riches ends where it began hopefully with a clearer view of the righteousness of God in the justification of all.

CONSOLATION IN EXPECTATION
(1 THESSALONIANS 4:13-18)

BE CONSOLING one another with these words (1 Thess. 4:18). The earliest revelation concerning our future fate was given to saints sorrowing for their loved ones. And to this day there are no more comforting words for the bereaved believer than Paul's message concerning those who were put to repose in Thessalonica. Here we have the balm we need for our wounded feelings when a beloved believer is put to repose. All has to do with our future experience at His presence. It is a solace for our souls. In this it differs from Paul's revelations to the Corinthians, for that gives us the glories of our resurrection bodies, and ends with an exhortation to abound in the work of the Lord (1 Cor.15:58). The expectation of our calling (Eph.1:18; 4:4) with all its glories as the complement of the Head of all future rule, appeals to our spirits. We shall consider only the first of these aspects of our expectation at this time—the consolation of our souls.

To fully appreciate Paul's consoling words to the Thessalonians we should seek to transport ourselves into their special circumstances. After Paul's call to Macedonia (Acts 16:9), and his release from the Philippian jail he came to Thessalonica, where there was a synagogue. For three sabbaths he argued with the Jews, with the result that some of them were persuaded. It was a rather discouraging harvest for the great apostle among his brethren according to the flesh. But, in contrast to the few Jews, a vast multitude of the reverent Greeks believe, and of the foremost women not a few (Acts 17:4,12). Moreover, the Jews of Thessalonica made up a mob and sought to persecute Paul, and even followed him to Berea.

The attitude of the Jews and Gentiles in Thessalonica is characteristic. It is most important that we grasp the situation, if we would fully appreciate the force of Paul's epistle to them. Paul had a number of ministries. In Acts we find him bearing the message of the kingdom to the Jews of the dispersion. Jerusalem and Judea had rejected the testimony of the twelve. Paul then carries the kingdom message to those scattered among the nations. In his early ministries he always acted on the principle, to the Jew first. So it seems that his principal efforts in Thessalonica were directed toward reaching them, although the result was that he reached the nations. It may be this background which leads him to write, "having perceived, brethren beloved by God, His choice of you, for the evangel of our God does not come to you in word only, but in power also" (1 Thess.1:4,5). To the Jews the message came in word only, for God had chosen the Gentiles. It was a small epitome of the present work of God, and needed only the conclusion to make it complete. And this is given us in Paul's epistle.

Paul seems to have spent his time in Thessalonica chiefly in arguing with the Jews, seeking to prove that Jesus is their Messiah (Acts 17:2,3). He was not allowed to stay much more than three weeks, hence he had not many opportunities to teach those among the nations who had believed, what he later wrote to them. Had he done so, his revelations concerning the future would not have been at all agreeable to the Jews who might be present, for this epistle practically involves the repudiation of Israel. Neither could these things find any record in the book of Acts at that time, for they go beyond the theme of that treatise, which closes, once the Jews among the nations finally reject the kingdom message. Most appropriately, this new revelation is made in writing, not to the few Jews in Thessalonica, but to the Gentiles. To them, in their sorrow, God is pleased to reveal a future coming of our Lord which was quite unknown to the prophets of old, or to the disciples of our Lord on earth.

Under the circumstances we can readily see why the Thessalonians should be ignorant of what the future had in store for them. They probably were not ignorant of the destiny of Israel. Probably they had heard much of what Paul had said to the Jews, and of the glorious return of the Messiah to set up the kingdom. They had been accurately informed concerning the times and the eras. The day of Yahweh, coming as a thief in the night, was no mystery to them, even though, in the second epistle, it would seem that they were later alarmed by a letter, supposedly from Paul, teaching that the day of the Lord was already present (2 Thess.2:2). In reading the Thessalonian letters let us always remember that the background is Paul's heralding of the kingdom to the Jews. Then we will not be perplexed by the many allusions to that which concerns them at the time of the end. Of their own expectation they were ignorant, but not of the expectation of Israel.

Perhaps, in their first love and abounding joy, they hardly gave any thought to their own future. But this was forced upon their attention in a most tragic manner, for some of their members died, and the first thought concerning their loved ones was that they would miss the anticipated kingdom. What would become of them? The faithful Jews would be raised to have their portion in the kingdom. Even the proselytes would have some share in that glorious day. But their reposing friends—nothing seemed in store for them, for nothing had been revealed. It was a sorrowful outlook. Paul later reminds the Gentiles of it in his Ephesian letter: "Wherefore, remember that once you, the nations in flesh . . . that you were, in that era, . . .guests of the promise covenants, having no expectation . . ." (Eph. 2:11,12).

It is not easy for us to put ourselves in the position of such as the Thessalonians at that time. Israel still monopolized all prerogatives. The Thessalonians had gone to Jewish meetings to hear the evangel. They had believed on Israel's God, and they no longer had one of their own. They had no political rights in Messiah's kingdom, for they were alienated from its citizenship. As to the covenants they were merely guests. Perhaps no better picture can be given of them than that which our Lord Himself used—they were hardly more than puppies at Israel's board. But what distressed them was not their present state, but the future of their dead. They had no "hope." Of what use were all these future glories to them, if they were to have no part in them?

No marvel that the apostle did not want them to remain in ignorance! They had an expectation, a glorious prospect, a hope more marvelous than that of Israel. This he now proceeds to unfold to them (1 Thess.4:13-18). It is the great antidote for hearts sorrowing over those who have died, or rather, according to the expressive figure used by the apostle, who have laid their weary limbs down for sweet repose.

"Those who are put to repose"! What comfort there is even in these words! Some of us have loved ones whose lives, at least in part, were anything but repose. There was toil and anguish, and the daily ordeal was like the torture of the rack, until death mercifully released the groaning frame. How often did we wish that some miracle could be wrought to provide a transient rest! And now comes death. Is it really an end of suffering for the time? That alone is cause for thankfulness. Yet we know what glories lie beyond. And, indeed, our sorrow is not like that of others, who see naught ahead but the black shadows of an unknown night.

The Thessalonians looked for the coming of Messiah and hoped to survive until His presence on the earth, but they had no definite idea as to their own place in the future. We need not be surprised at this, for thousands today know even less than this and are satisfied with a mere consciousness of salvation. Other thousands consider the Lord's coming too deep a subject for this life. Its intense practical value in this vale of tears is often unheeded until some great sorrow sinks the soul in despair, and loosens its hold on the things of this evil eon.

GIVEN UP AND ROUSED

The foundation on which our every expectation rests is the resurrection of Christ. For our souls, our bodies (1 Cor.15:14), and our spirits, our faith is directed to the empty tomb near Golgotha. "If we are believing that Jesus died, and rose," all else is possible. Then those for whom He died must share in His resurrection. Let us note the names here. It is Jesus, our Lord's personal appellation, which presents Him as Saviour. This reminds us of Paul's amplification of this very point in his epistle to the Romans. There righteousness is reckoned to those who are believing on Him Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones, Who is given up because of our offenses, and is roused because of our justifying (Rom.4:24,25). He was not roused because of His own justness, but because we had become just. He was made sin for us, and, until expiation of our sin had been made, until we were utterly cleared from its slightest taint, until we were justified, He could not be roused.

To believe "that Jesus died and rose" involves ever so much more than the casual reader apprehends. It is, so to speak, the salvation of our Saviour. And this involves our future welfare. The work which He accomplished for us led to His being roused by God and guarantees our own resurrection. Through this Saviour, God will lead us forth with Him. And this applies to all, even to the far-off Gentiles like the Thessalonians, who only listened in on Paul's arguments with the Jews, and who only wished a few crumbs from God's redundant provision for themselves.

But this great truth was not enough. It would give rise to questions. The dead will be raised, but When? Where? How? Will it be at some far distant time, the "last day" (John 11:24) of which Martha spoke at the grave of Lazarus? Will the dead miss all the bliss of being with Messiah in the day of Yahweh? Will we be separated from them in that day? How long will the ones who survive until that day precede those who have fallen asleep? And, since the Messiah is the King of Israel, how will it be possible for any of us to be with Him in His exalted and exclusive majesty?

These questions could not be answered by an appeal to the prophets, for the situation is just the reverse of that contemplated by them. "Rejoice, ye nations, with His people," would almost need to be read backward, as, Rejoice, His people, with the nations. Paul was not succeeding in his efforts to reach Israel. The nation, as such, even in the dispersion, was rejecting their Messiah, and their expectation of possessing the kingdom was receding. In contrast with this, multitudes among the nations were believing notwithstanding Israel's apostasy. If this goes on (as it did), then Israel will not be blessed at all, hence will not be in a position to dispense blessing to others. It is clear, therefore, that God will need to step in and resolve the dilemma. A new revelation is needed. And this is just what the apostle receives, and what he passes on to the sorrowing Thessalonians.

A FRESH REVELATION

"This we are saying to you by the word of the Lord . . . ." This solemn formula is not often used in God's later revelations. It marks a new departure, a fresh unfolding of God's ways. It is useless to seek for this revelation in any previous portion of God's Word. No prophets mention it. Our Lord said nothing of it. Even the Circumcision apostles, in their later ministries, give no hint of the glorious event which Paul is about to foretell. More than that, this "word of the Lord" concerning our recall from death introduces a wedge between the recipients of Paul's evangel and the Circumcision evangel which eventually split them wide apart, so that, not only in their future expectation, but in all else they constitute a distinct and different work of God, dependent, not on Israel's acceptance of the evangel, but on her rejection of God's Christ.

As the main motive of the apostle is to console, he first assures the Thessalonians that they would not get ahead of their reposing friends. "We, the living who are surviving, to the presence of the Lord, should by no means outstrip those who are put to repose . . . ." This alone should have satisfied the Thessalonians, and dried their tears. But this sorrow of theirs, and its consolation, is only a God-made opportunity which must serve a higher and a greater purpose. God's grace has been dammed up so long that it must overflow. The sorrow of the Thessalonians has opened up a crevice for it to flow forth. But the crevice soon widens into a crevasse, and breaks down the dam of legalism and fleshly privilege, bringing floods of blessing to the nations.

God knows the end from the beginning, so it comes that the first real revelation concerning God's present work of grace among the nations deals with the closing scene of this administration, if, indeed, it should not be counted with the next. Then "the Lord Himself will be descending from heaven with a shout of command, with the voice of the Chief Messenger, and with the trumpet of God, and the dead ones in Christ shall be rising first." Marvelous moment! Ecstatic expectation! Most entrancing sound! Those blessed lips have already given commands to His own, but none to compare with this! When will the voice of the Chief Messenger bring mankind more bliss, or trumpet blast sound sweeter?

The Lord Himself—and not another! We, sinners of the Gentiles, unworthy of a place at Israel's board, would be highly honored to have Him send the meanest of His servants to call us back to life. How marvelous if He should delegate an archangel for this task! In His unveiling, when He deals with the earth in judgment, much of His work is delegated to mighty messengers, who fulfill His will. Let us charge our hearts to give due heed to the favor which is poured forth upon us in this precious phrase. To be sure, we are last, and least deserving. Yet, in this new dispensation, which has its birth in this very revelation, the last are made first and the least, greatest. Even in the kingdom He will do much through His servants, such as David, and His apostles, who will rule the twelve tribes, but when He bids us to His presence He will come Himself to raise our bodies, rouse our souls, and vivify our spirits, to make us fit and welcome in our celestial home.

Three sorts of sounds combine to recall the dead to life and vivify the living. One is an inarticulate sound, the trumpet's stentorian tones, which will raise the bodies of the dead and change the living. The second is the voice, of a messenger bringing tidings of great joy. The third is an order, a command to be obeyed.

THE VOICE THAT RAISES THE DEAD

The voice of the Chief Messenger is none other than the voice of our blessed Lord, Jesus Christ, the Son of God. No so-called "angel" can raise the dead. Not even Michael, or any other archangel, can wake the sleeping saints. The hour is coming when the dead shall be hearing the voice of the Son of God, and those who hear shall live. For even as the Father has life in Himself, thus also He gives to the Son to have life in Himself . . . The hour is coming in which all who are in the tombs will hear His voice, and those who do good shall go out into a resurrection of life (John 5:25,26,28,29). And this same voice gave a foretaste of its power when, in later days, it clamored loudly at the tomb of His dear friend, "Lazarus! Hither! Out!" (John 11:43). And the dead man heard and obeyed that vivifying voice.

In His dealings with Israel, in heralding and setting up the kingdom, God uses many messengers. John the Baptist was sent before the Lord to prepare His way. Gabriel was sent to announce His birth to Mary. Many mighty messengers will be employed in the judgments which usher in the kingdom. Wherever God needs a courier to carry His messages or carry out His decrees, especially when these are not in direct harmony with the heart of His great Mediator, or of a nature which He cannot perform, He uses other messengers. Our Lord could not announce His own birth, so Gabriel came. Christ could not be His own forerunner, so John the Baptist was sent. Christ's great function is to save, not to destroy, so the destructive judgments of the end time are delegated to other messengers. But when the time comes for the deliverance of our bodies He takes the announcement of this glad message upon Himself, and we will hear the news from His own mouth, as the Chiefest of all God's couriers.

THE TRUMPET OF GOD

Only God can call dead bodies back to life, yet He has delegated this power to His Son, our Lord, Jesus Christ. This is pictured most perfectly for us in the phrase "the trumpet of God." By using a trumpet a man may magnify the power of his voice beyond all human proportions. In using the divine trumpet, His voice reverberates with the power of God, which alone can raise the dead.

In the beginning God worked by means of His spoken word. God said, "Let light come to be!" and light came to be. Resurrection is a much greater work, so is appropriately pictured by a much more forceful sound, by which life is given to the dead, as well as immortality to the living. Though listed last, it would seem that this will be the first of the sounds to be heard, for how can the dead hear a message or hearken to a command unless they have been brought back to life? As Paul told the Corinthians, the work of resurrection will take but an instant to transform the corruptible to incorruption and the mortal to immortality. The trumpet will sound, but nothing will occur until the concluding blast. Then, presto! change! the greatest miracle of the eons!

A SHOUT OF COMMAND

One of the grave difficulties in this passage is our being snatched into the air. How can this be? It is not explained here, but fully expounded later in Paul's letter to the Corinthians. Even here, however, we have an indication of this secret of the resurrection, for only changed bodies could respond to such a command. Peter had the secret of it in his heart when he said to his Master, Who was walking on the Galilean waves, "Lord, if it is You, order (keleuson, the verb of this word)—order me to come to You on the waters." Then came the shout of command, "Come!" And descending from the ship, Peter walks on the waters to come to Jesus (Matt.14:28,29). If He gives an order, it carries with it the power needed for obedience. Peter, alas! had not been permanently changed, his faith failed, and he began to sink. We need more than Peter's scant faith to obey the command that will call us up into the air to meet Him there. We will have glorious power in spiritual bodies, which will be equal to obeying any command.

The touching scene on Galilee seems to picture Christ's coming to Israel in the days ahead. But be it they or we, what other order could He give than this one blessed invitation, "Come!"? "Depart!" is for those who know Him not. We would not be at all surprised if, in that supreme moment, when the last trump has transformed our feeble and dishonored frames into glorious, powerful, spiritual bodies, the first word that we shall hear will be His order, "Come!"

When Peter heard it, he stepped down from the ship and walked upon the water. But we shall go up from the earth and meet Him in the air. Every such contrast is intensely significant just at this juncture, when God's grace is being switched off to another track. We, who are accustomed to the thought of heaven as our future home, can have little conception of the astonishment this must have created in Thessalonica. Our Lord returned with Peter into the ship. But there is not a single hint that He will return with us to the earth, but simply the statement that we are to be together with Him always.

All this is full of meaning, and worthy of much meditation. All is symptomatic, and points forward to the grace which was about to be revealed. All is contrastive, and indicates a change in God's dealings with mankind. The most important point is the position of our Lord. He is not on earth, hence the kingdom has not come. He is in the air, which is a higher and more spiritual sphere. He does not descend to the earth, though He undoubtedly does so later. This fact, however, is definitely excluded from this revelation, for it has no bearing upon it. If we did not have any further unfolding of this theme, we might not be able to see the significance of all this, but now that we know that our destiny is not terrestrial but celestial (Eph.1:3), that our bodies will not only be vivified but changed (1 Cor. 15:51), and that our citizenship belongs to the heavens (Phil.3:20), every syllable glows with a celestial light. The gates are opened to the great grace which is ours in Christ Jesus, and we get a small glimpse of our future glory.

There is a pleasing contrast between the orders given by our Lord and those issued by other characters in the sacred records. His commands bring blessing, theirs usually result in evil and even death. When He, in His compassion, wishes to feed the throng, He orders them to recline on the grass (Matt.14:19), the better to receive His bounty. At Jericho, when the blind mendicant implores, "Jesus, Son of David, be merciful to me!" He stood and orders the blind man to be led to Him (Luke 18:35-40). Here we have a beautiful little foreview of His future coming to Israel, as deep down in the depths of despair as Jericho is sunk on the surface of the earth, when He restores their sight so that they may behold His glories and follow Him. The false rulers gave far different orders. The Idumean, Herod the Great, orders the head of John the Baptist to be given to Herodias' daughter (Matt.14:9). Another Herod orders Peter's guards to be put to death (Acts 12:19). The orders of men bring suffering and death. His order, which all of His will hear, betokens life and lasting joy.

THE DEAD RISE FIRST

Once again the apostle reassures the Thessalonians in regard to those who are reposing. We shall by no means outstrip them because they will be rising first, before any of us leave the earth. As there is no consciousness in the death state, it has no practical effect on their expectation. It is just as if they had lain down to slumber, instead of dying. And that is why the apostle persists in speaking of "those who are put to repose," where we would say "the dead." The fact is that they died, but the far more truthful figure is that they are reposing. When they awake they will not be in His presence. They will first join the living (who will have been changed, as we shall see later), and, as one company, just as if none had ever died, all together will be snatched away in clouds for meeting the Lord in the air.

Especial emphasis is laid on the simultaneous ascension of the saints. At various times teachers have arisen who claimed that the resurrection does not occur at one time, but that some, more faithful or more privileged than the rest, would be raised earlier. Some have even claimed that Paul himself reversed these words in a later revelation, when he made known an "out-resurrection." But this is an eclectic resurrection, leaving the vast multitude of mankind in their graves. It does not even include those believers who belong to the kingdom. Paul's later characterization describes this resurrection, rather than distinguishes another from it. A careful reading will show that the words, at the same time, are not necessary for the sense, for the word "together" conveys the same thought. It is emphatic. Simultaneously, the dead and the living, if "in Christ," will be snatched away in clouds for meeting the Lord in the air. Whatever lack of unity may have been caused by division and death, all will be one the moment we hear His vitalizing voice.

THE LIVING, WHO ARE SURVIVING

The normal outlook of the believer of this dispensation of God's grace is not death but life. From Paul down to the present day the prospect put before the saint is the vivifying presence of Christ. From the beginning all have been kept in ignorance of the date when this will occur, for an imminent expectation is the most powerful and blessed means of producing a consecrated life. It was no mistake on Paul's part when he said, "we . . . who are surviving." It is a serious error and shortcoming on the part of critics, to condemn it because they hold no such vital hope. Day by day, hour by hour, moment by moment, the next event for which we yearn should be the trumpet's joyful note.

And in these last days this should be the case as never before, for the next administration is already in formation, the signs of the next era seem prematurely present, so that we sometimes wonder why we are still here, performing our little part while the stage is already being rearranged for the final act of earth's tragic misrule. We feel out of place and in the way, for all seems ripe for the day of Yahweh. The storm clouds are gathering, out of which will come the lightning and the thunder of God's wrath. We view its oncoming terrors unafraid, for we know that, before the storm shall burst, we will be above it, safe and serene, in His presence. Surely there is no excuse for us in these closing days not to live in constant and joyful anticipation of this expectation.

SNATCHED AWAY IN CLOUDS

Clouds have their place in the air, hence the first thought which usually comes upon one reading this passage is that we shall be screened from the earth by vapory clouds floating in the sky. It may be so, but the absence of the article—not "the clouds," but simply "clouds"—and the close connection with the words "snatched away together with them in" suggests that it may be the saints, living and raised, who may form the clouds here spoken of. That is, the saints will not go separately, but in company with others, in groups of sufficient numbers to form figurative clouds. Like these fleecy formations they will be composed of particles which can float in the air. The Lord will act like the summer sun on the surface of the water. Heavy as that fluid is, it rises at the sunbeams' call into the empyrean.

A would-be scientist might bang all sorts of objections as to the practicability of this event. One might say, "If all ascend from all over the earth, they will not meet, but scatter." But nothing is said here of ascending. The word snatched will allow of any direction. Not so many years ago some would have said that no sound could possibly be heard all over the earth at the same time. But that idea is now outdated. If men can mount their messages upon the wings of light and send them to every portion of the earth in a small fraction of a second, this will not be impossible to Him Who in the beginning said, "Let light come to be!" None of these things compares with the greatest of all miracles, which precedes our going, the impartation of life and incorruption to millions of reposing saints.

MEETING THE LORD IN THE AIR

For those like the Thessalonians, who had never heard of a heavenly hope, and who had some knowledge of the kingdom on earth as heralded to Israel at the time this was written, the thought of meeting the Lord in the air must have been most marvelous and full of mystery. A little later the Corinthians found it so, and Paul was called upon for further explanations. Now that our celestial destiny has been revealed (Eph.1:3), and the prospect of "heaven" is common to everyone in Christendom, the surprising nature of this revelation is not appreciated. Yet even for us it lacks finality. No one thinks of this as the permanent abode of the saints. It leaves us with a feeling of incompleteness. We know that our Lord will not remain in the air. He will come down to earth a little later. Then, if our destiny is on earth, why should we be given the marvelous power of traversing the air? Israel will not be able to do this. There is something here which suggests that we will go up, and not down, that our abode is the heavens, and not the earth, but it is only intimated, not revealed.

THUS

In this way, after this manner, shall we be together with the Lord. Early was this blessed expectation lost, and ever since some of the saints have sought to intrude into His presence by another way. They have tried to find Him behind the portals of Death, although He is the Life. They have even altered Paul's own words. When he found no attraction in life or in death, he revealed his heart by saying that he was pressed out of these by his desire of being with Christ, which, rather, is much better. Living is not now being with Him. How much less is dying! No one of His will ever be ushered into His presence alone, apart from the rest. First those who are in Him will be gathered. Paul found it necessary to insist that the living shall not precede the dead. Today we must insist that this clearly shows that the dead shall not precede the living! And so, both, simultaneously (hama in the Greek), at the same time will be snatched away to meet Him in the air.

TOGETHER WITH THE LORD

It might be a difficult matter to tell just "where we will spend eternity," so the Scriptures describe our future sphere in the almost all-embracing terms, "among the celestials." The popular conception of heaven, somewhat like the great festive halls I have seen in the palaces of Europe, in which each one has a place in the orchestra, is grotesque and utterly unscriptural. Leaving out the earth, the heavens, in which our future lies, comprise the whole universe. Now we are confined to an exceedingly narrow stratum near the surface of the earth. Our limitations will not allow us to go very far below its crust, nor ascend very high above its lowlands. Bars, much stronger than iron, cage us in, so that we cannot come forth. But then all limitations will be withdrawn and the boundless universe will be before us, and the object of our ministrations. How impossible to describe our whereabouts in that supernal sphere!

Only one location need be given, for this includes all others and imparts to every place the one thing needed to make it all that heart can wish. And that is circumscribed by the simple words that allay our fears and soothe our sorrows, and crown the future with a halo which no other phrase can ever impart. Our bliss will not consist in being in a place, but in being with the Lord! His presence would make "hell" heaven, and what would heaven itself be without Him? And so, in the midst of life, as well as in the presence of death, let us console one another with these words.

ROMANS 4:25

Everywhere God's vindication and ours depends on Christ's sacrificial work. His being made sin is the ground of our becoming the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor.5:21). Our personal offences sent Jesus Christ to the cross; but if we are to be assured that His offering was satisfactory, if we are to be made one with Him, He must not stay there. He died, as love always will, to save the beloved who are in jeopardy, and was roused because of our justifying. This is the only true and consistent translation. Grammatical expedients have been invented to escape the plain meaning of the words. But we were justified in His blood (5:9). The propitiation was for our justification (3:25,26). He was made sin for our justification (2 Cor.5:21). It is the death of Christ, not His resurrection, which is the basis of our justification. The resurrection is the seal of our justification. He was raised because of our accomplished justification, accomplished as far as grace and blood could secure it. Our justifying, like our deliverance, is actual and concrete in Christ Jesus, and becomes ours on believing. Our sin killed Him; our justification permitted His resurrection. It was not a personal resurrection only, but something that concerned all men. As our condemnation brought Him to crucifixion, so our justification releases Him from death. A risen Sin-bearer shows that the sin is removed. A complete resurrection shows that Justice had no claim on Him beyond the realm of death. If His body, or any part of Him, was left in the grip of death, we should never know the sufficiency of His sacrifice.

OUR BELIEVING AND CHRIST'S FAITH

In Romans 3:21 Paul declares that God's righteousness has been made manifest through Jesus Christ's faith "apart from law." In Romans 3:31 the apostle asks "Are we, then, nullifying law through that faith [of Jesus]?" And here he declares "May it not come to that! But indeed we are sustaining law"!

Consequently the apostle turns to the "Law" (Torah) where it is apart from law. He sustains law where it is a declaration of the reckoning of righteousness and not instruction. He turns to the law section of scripture where it speaks of justification through faith and not out of works of law. He turns to the first book of the "Torah," to Genesis chapter 15, verse 6 which tells of believing God and not of instruction for human doing (such as Genesis 12:1-3 where instruction precedes promise). Paul turns to the law where a passage of promise comes first (Gen.15:5) and then is followed not by instruction but by another declaration of something apparently very simple and minimal which was done by one individual, Abraham, not in response to instruction, but in response to a most joyful promise. Abraham believes God.

Thus "law" as "faith's law" is what is sustained, yet apart from human works of law.

4 [a]What, then, shall we be declaring that Abraham, our [·]forefather according to flesh, has found? [2] For if Abraham is justified out of works, he [|]has something to boast in, but not toward God. [3] For [a]what is the scripture saying?

RIGHTEOUSNESS BEING RECKONED

The citation of Genesis 15:6 moves us from Jesus Christ's faith to the believer's faith, and justification moves from the literal sense of being made righteous (proleptically) to being reckoned righteous. What was seen as the manifestation of God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith in the gratuitous justification of all human beings is now seen as justification as presently placed "on all who are believing" (Rom.3:22). What is revealed out of the Righteous One's faith is now considered as it is for the believer's faith (cf Rom.1:16,17). "Faith's law" (Rom.3:27) as it operates in the faith of the humbled Jesus in the justifying of the irreverent one, is placed before us now as what the believer is believing. Our faith is believing that God is justifying the irreverent one through the faith of Jesus Christ, and on believing this evangel of our salvation we are sealed with the holy spirit of promise unto the deliverance of the procured, literal justification to be enjoyed in the future but achieved in the death of Christ (cf Eph.1:13,14). Now through every day, hour, minute and second this justification is being reckoned to us, being put to our account.

BELIEVING GOD

This pattern of believing God when He speaks to us in words of an evangel of joy and well-being was displayed by Abraham as recorded in the Torah before the law of circumcision was given and long before the law of Sinai was imposed. God speaks of good. Abraham believes. God reckons this for righteousness.

Abraham's faith was described above as something "apparently very simple and minimal." Yet in reality it was something astounding and fully opposed to the reality of Abraham's life and circumstances in the world. Abraham believes what was unbelievable as far as physical evidence is concerned. And this was, in reality, neither simple nor minimal. It was contrary to everything that could be seen or known. It can be explained only as Paul later explains our faith. It was a spiritual endowment from God (1 Cor.12:1; 13:13).

Abraham's faith would falter and only approach perfection when he serves as a type of Christ's faith and of God's giving of His Son in righteousness and love as recorded in Genesis 22. Yet the measure of Abraham's faith is not the issue. It is that he believed God as God endowed him with faith, and reckoned it for righteousness.

Nevertheless the faith graciously granted (cp Phil.1:29) was most remarkable and positive apart from doubts.

Now as much as we may profit from dwelling on the blessing of believing God as Paul expounds it in Romans 4, our concern at present is on God's evangel as it concerns His Son and His Son's faith. So for now let us skip ahead beyond David's testimony concerning the happiness of being reckoned righteousness, and beyond this happiness as it relates to the Uncircumcision as well as the Circumcision, and beyond it as a matter of grace rather than law. We will not pause even to consider Paul's use of the word SEED as it refers to Christ in 4:13, except to note that in God's evangel Christ is always kept in view. So also, in passing, we catch a view of Christ's faith in the description of Abraham's faith in 4:16-20. Again we go beyond all this as it relates to our believing and God's reckoning of righteousness to us, returning to the evangel concerning God's Son itself—beyond the theme of our faith to that of Christ's faith in the purpose and operation of God.

23 [y]Now it is not written because of him only, that it is reckoned to him, 24 but because of us also, to whom it is [l]about to be [l]reckoned[°], [·]who are believing on Him [·]Who rouses Jesus our [·]Lord [o]from among the dead ones,

25 Who is given up because of our [·]offenses,
And is roused because of our [·]justifying.

It is God "Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones."

And it is Jesus our Lord "Who is given up because of our offenses, and is roused because of our justifying."

The focus turns again from our believing to the message we are believing. Chapter 4 for the most part concerns us who are believing in the pattern set by Abraham, but it ends with God, Who gives up His Son and rouses Him from among the dead ones, and with Jesus our Lord Who is given up and is roused. Paul brings us back to God in the first place, our Lord in second place, replacing the emphasis on us (who are in third place as offenders who are justified).

Consequently in Romans 5:1 Paul speaks (as in 3:21-28) of justification as the result of God's operation in the giving of His Son and His Son's faith (not our faith) in that operation.

God's evangel concerning His Son reveals first of all that His Son is given up because of our offenses. While we are still offensive sinners God commends His love in sending His own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh, sparing Him not but giving Him up for us all (Rom.5:8; 8:3,32). It is because of our offenses that Jesus our Lord is given up to crucifixion ("Christ crucified," 1 Cor.1:23,24), coming in sin's flesh, and coming in this state of humiliation concern- ing sin so that sin would be condemned (Rom.8:3). Such is the commendation of God's love and the constraining power of Christ's love that He dies for the sake of all and consequently all die (2 Cor.5:14).

It is in the death of Christ that everyone, each and every human sinner and each and every offense of irreverent and unrighteous human beings dies. "One who dies has been justified from sin" (Rom.6:7). It is in the sinner's inclusion in the death of Christ that all are being justified gratuitously in God's grace (Rom.3:23,24).

Consequently God's evangel first tells us that Christ dies for our sakes. It is not because Christ is roused from among the dead that we are justified, delivered and saved from sin and death and shall be constituted righteous. He is roused because of our justifying which is achieved in His death for all so that all sinners and all their offenses and sins are put to death (to be experienced in God's own time).

Christ is roused because of our being justified in our inclusion in His death. If He was not roused then His death did not accomplish what it was intended to accomplish, that is our justifying. "Now if Christ has not been roused, vain is [our] faith—[we] are still in [our] sins" (1 Cor.15:17). It is not Christ's resurrection that justifies. It is Christ's death that justifies, and His resurrection is the glorious manifestation of "life's justifying." It is through Jesus Christ's faith in dying for sinners, His righteous response to what His God and Father set before Him, "for all" human beings that brings about life's justifying (Rom.5:18). It is through His obedience unto the death of the cross that the many who are constituted sinners shall be constituted righteous (Rom.5:19).

CONTRARY VIEWS

In his commentary on Romans, C.E.B. Cranfield writes: "It is to be noted that dia is used in this verse in two different senses, first in a causal, and then in a final sense."[1] He adds in a footnote: "The suggestion that the first dia should be understood as final ('in order to deal with') is not very probable. Still less probable is the suggestion that the second dia should be taken as causal (the meaning being that Jesus was raised up because we had been justified through His death) . . . ."

Cranfield's claim of two different senses of dia in Romans 4:25 is well carried out in the reading offered in the New English Translation (NET): "He was given over because of our transgressions and was raised for the sake of our justification." Here also in a footnote, this rendering of dia as "for the sake of" in the second usage is discussed as follows: ". . . in light of the unsatisfactory sense that a causal nuance would here suggest, it has been argued that the second dia is prospective rather than retrospective . . . . The difficulty of this interpretation is the structural balance that both dia phrases provide ('given over because of our transgressions . . . raised because of our justification'). However the poetic structure of this verse strengthens the likelihood that both clauses may bear a different force."[2]

These two construals of the parallel lines of Romans 4:25, one from a scholarly commentary, the other from an equally scholarly Bible translation, may well represent the majority understanding of teachers and students of Scripture today. It is based on the claim that the two uses of the Greek preposition dia have different meanings. The first is "causal" or "retrospective" in the sense of "because" as is usual when dia is followed by a noun or pronoun in the accusative case. The second which is also followed by an accusative, is "prospective" (directing to the "final" purpose). That Paul should use a preposition twice within five words of each other, and in exact parallel, with such opposite senses of relationship is most surprising, if not unbelievable.

But the greater problem is the association of justification with the resurrection as though it were the only factor in this great achievement of righteousness. Consequently those who see two senses of dia here assure us that both the giving up of Christ to death and His resurrection bring about justification—the two steps together—even though Paul's wording does not actually say that. It is explained that Paul adopts the wording of an early Christian hymn, or at least expresses himself in poetic language which was not always precise.

Nevertheless we must insist that, Paul's wording is exactly what he wishes to say. And he does so in parallel lines.

COMPATIBLE VIEWS

Happily some scholars and translations as well as some ancient writers see Paul's use of dia in the normal sense of "because." The Swiss German theologian, Adolf Schlatter (1852-1938), writes: "it is not advisable to suggest a meaning for the second dia different from the first one. Our fall precedes the execution of Jesus; he was condemned because we fell. Likewise our justification precedes his resurrection; he was raised because we were justified through his death."[3]

Similarly the American scholar, Randolph O. Yeager, in his multivolume, analytical translation and commentary entitled The Renaissance New Testament, writes: "Christ was not raised from the dead in order to justify those for whom he died, but because in His death He had actually justified them." In accord with this he translates Romans 4:25 as follows: "Who was delivered to death because of our moral lapses and was raised up because of our justification."[4]

These comments accord well with our own understanding, as expressed by A. E. Knoch who wrote in his notes accompanying the first and second editions of the CV (1926,1931) and republished in the CONCORDANT COMMENTARY (1968): "Jesus Christ . . . was roused because the sin He bore was all gone, and we were vindicated."[5]

GOD'S EVANGEL CONCERNING HIS SON

To see two senses for dia in Romans 4:25 is to miss the clarity of Paul's thought, and to obscure its connection with what has preceeded in chapters 1-4 and what follows.

What is missed when dia is given two senses is the clarity of contrast between two causes and God's response to them. The first cause is "our offenses" to which God responds by giving up His Son—that is, He "spares not His own Son, but gives Him up for us all" (Rom.8:32). The second cause is "our justifying" achieved in Christ's death, to which God responds by rousing "Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones" (Rom.4:24).

Thus we are prepared for Romans 5 where God's evangel is explicitely presented. It is a message of God's love expressed by His Son Who gives Himself up for all humanity.

GIVEN UP AND ROUSED

THE EVANGEL is a matter of death and life. It proclaims the death of Christ on the cross and in the tomb. Christ dies for our sins, and He is entombed (1 Cor.15:3,4). Then it speaks of the life of Christ in resurrection. Christ has been roused (1 Cor.15:4; Rom.4:24,25).

Concerning humanity, the evangel faces the deep-seated problem of death, both as a state and (figuratively) a power leading downward to that state, and tells of its defeat and ultimate elimination, and the establishment of life immortal and incorruptible. It is because death as a destructive power in us producing sin and offense has infected the entire human race through the sin of Adam (Rom.5: 12-14), culminating in the state of death, that the death of Christ (and our inclusion in His death) is so critical. And it is because His death accomplished what was so desperately needed by humanity that He was roused to life.

The pattern of death followed by life is presented throughout the Sacred Scriptures. In Romans 4, Paul points to this pattern in the experience of Abraham. He and his wife, Sarah, were deadened in the ability to have children (Rom.4:19). But in His promise that Abraham would be the father of many nations, God reveals Himself as the One Who is vivifying the dead (Rom.4:17).

So also for us: In His evangel concerning His Son, God reveals Himself as the One Who will be vivifying our mortal bodies (Rom.8:11), both now, in spirit, and in the future, in Christ's presence (1 Cor.15:22,23). Hence God tells us of His love to us in giving up His Son for us, "seeing that, while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sakes" (Rom.5:8). We who are believing are identified with Him already in His death, as He was in the tomb (Rom.6:3,4). Then God's message to us adds triumphantly: "Christ has been roused from among the dead, the Firstfruit of those who are reposing. For since, in fact, through a human comes death, through a Human, also, comes the resurrection of the dead ones. For even as, in Adam, all are dying, thus also, in Christ, shall all be vivified" (1 Cor.15:20-22).

RIGHTEOUSNESS

God's evangel, as Paul is presenting it in Romans, focuses on the theme of righteousness. Justification is established through the faith of Jesus Christ, that is His faith-obedience to the death of the cross. It is gained by His death and our inclusion in that death, and it is enjoyed in life, both in the future when we are fully vivified, and at present, in spirit. In Romans 4, the apostle has been especially concerned with the blessing of being reckoned righteous, granted to us when we believe the evangel that Christ dies for our sins and is roused from among the dead ones.

This blessing of being reckoned righteous is also pictured for us by Abraham's experience in Genesis 15:6, who was fully assured that, what God has promised, He is able to do also. Wherefore, also, it is reckoned to him for righteousness (Rom.4:21,22).

> Now it was not written because of him only, that it is reckoned to him, but because of us also, to whom it is about to be reckoned, who are believing on Him Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones. (Rom.4:23,24)

Abraham did not know that what God did for him in reckoning righteousness to him had us in view as well as himself and his physical descendants. But God knew this. What He did for believing Abraham, He intended to do for us in a way centered even more fully in His grace and based explicitly on the giving up of His Son. When God spoke to Abraham in Genesis 15 and reckoned righteousness to him, He also had us in view, who were "about to be believing."

BELIEVING ON GOD

In believing God's promise that he would have descendants numbering as the stars of the heavens, Abraham was believing it of the God Who is vivifying the dead (Rom. 4:17). His faith was placed entirely on God Who is able to do what He has promised (Rom.4:20,21).

Likewise, for us, in believing the evangel that we are justified gratuitously in God's grace through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus, and in believing also that God reckons us righteous when we are believing this evangel concerning His Son, we are placing our faith wholly on God, Who is vivifying the dead. In our apostle's words as expressed in Greek, we believe on God, even as we rely [expect] on the living God (cf 1 Tim.4:10), Who is actively carrying out His operations in dealing with death and sin and bringing forth life and righteousness.

Justification through the death of Jesus our Lord is assured by God rousing Him from among the dead. It is the work of God and the grace of God and the gratuity of God. Therefore, we are not trusting in ourselves or our works but are believing on the God Who vivifies the dead. We are believing on the God "Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead" (Rom.4:24).

THE EVANGEL

Now in Romans 4:25, the apostle Paul presents the evangel he was evangelizing (cf Rom.1:15), wording it in two parallel clauses in terms that continue to echo in our hearts and resound in our spirits:

> [God] rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones,
> Who is given up because of our offenses,
> and is roused because of our justifying.

As in Romans 1:1-7 and 3:21,22, the evangel speaks to us here first of all as it speaks of God. God gives up Jesus our Lord and rouses Him from among the dead. Then the evangel directs attention to God's Son, Who is given up (to the death of the cross and of the tomb) and roused (to life from among the dead ones). He is the One in Whom we are created (Col.1:16), and consequently the only One through Whom we can be saved. Hence we know and honor Him as Saviour and Lord, as ultimately all will do (cf Phil.2: 10,11). Finally, therefore, Paul presents the evangel as it affects us. and eventually all human beings.

JESUS IS GIVEN UP

It is God Himself Who gives up His Son to suffering and death. The passive fact verb, "is given up," in Romans 4:25 becomes an active fact verb in Romans 8:32, with God as the One doing the action.

This latter passage culminates with Paul's jubilant song in praise of the love of God (Rom.8:35-39), making clear to us that God's giving up of His Son is an act of love. So also in Romans 4, what the apostle says about Christ being given up by God leads forward to that amazing wording of the evangel that we find in Romans 5:8. The fact that Christ dies for sinners is God's commendation of His love.

GOD'S LOVE

How can we comprehend this? We see Christ's love here, but can we see God's love in this giving up of His Son? In Romans 5:7 we are directed to consider the love of a human who might die for the sake of a good person. Yet Christ dies for sinners, who indeed still remain sinners in themselves. Yet Christ's death is called God's love for us! The Father gave up His Son to the sufferings of the cross and the death of the tomb, for us! It was the love of Christ. But in its deepest sense it is the love of God, Who is love.

Let us pause here to consider what the verb "is given up" tells us of God and of His love. Some passages from the Hebrew scriptures may help us see what was in God's heart as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ in His giving up of His Son for our sake.

THREE FATHERS

We turn to Genesis 22 where we read of Abraham taking his son Isaac to the mountain where he was instructed to give him up as an ascent offering. Knowing full well that this meant giving up the one in whom all his expectation and joy was centered, Abraham, nevertheless, "took the wood for the ascent offering and placed it on his son Isaac, while he took the fire and the knife in his hand; and the two of them went along together" (Gen.22:6). Isaac was the son Abraham loved, in view of the promise his only one (Gen.22:2). But the circumstances, determined by the instructions of God, called for the father to do what he would never do otherwise. Yet, through it all, he never wavered in his love for Isaac, and he never tried to cover it up in order to steel his resolve for the deed ahead. They walked on together, and Abraham replied to Isaac's questions with faith in God, but also with the gentle words of love for his son: "Here I am, my son . . . . Elohim, He shall see for Himself as to the flockling for the ascent offering, my son" (Gen.22:7,8).

It was not given to Abraham that the togetherness of himself and his son would be severed by the death of Isaac. But God gives up His Son to the hours of suffering and darkness on the cross, and then to death itself in the silence of the tomb. This is done for sinners, and all are sinners.

As God is greater than Abraham, so His love for His Son is greater beyond all comparison as the Two of Them approach the cross together. God, Who is aware of the suffering and travail of all creation, is keenly aware of the sorrow and pain of His Son. God, Who is keenly conscious of the evil of death, from that of Abel onward, feels the evil of this separation from His Beloved Son beyond all measure. This is to speak now of the Father's heart. And that God would do this is to speak of His love for us.

Jacob also becomes a type of the love of God as Father when he weeps over the apparent death of his son, Joseph. "Jacob tears his raiments and puts sackcloth on his waist and mourns over his son . . . and refuses to be consoled" (Gen.37:34,35).

As the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is greater than the father of Joseph, so God's love for His Son, Whom He gives up to death, is greater and deeper in the loss of His Son in death, than Jacob could ever have felt. This is to speak of the Father's heart, and in doing so it speaks of His love for us, who continually offend His heart. In knowing the outcome of great good resulting from this sacrifice, God gives up His Son to death, in happy expectation (cp Rom.8:18-21). But there still was the giving up, and all that it meant to the heart of God.

Even David, in his piercing cries over the death of his unworthy son, Absalom, becomes a type of what was in God's heart as the Father, in the giving up of His most worthy Son for us who are so unworthy. "O my son . . . my son! . . . . O that I had died instead of you! O . . . my son, my son!" (2 Sam.18:33).

Yet the Father could not die, and He could not die for us. It had to be the Son of His love in Whom we are created (cf Col.1:13-20). God's love for us involves His suffering as Father over the suffering of His Beloved Son. This is God's love as it is commended to us.

JESUS OUR LORD

God gives up His Son for us in love. But God's Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, acts in love Himself. Referring again to Colossians 1:15,16, we note that Christ is the Image of the invisible God, and so, in His love for us, He reflects God's love. But also He loves us because we are created in Him. In dying for us Christ reveals the heart of God, and also exposes His own heart of love for us whom God brings forth in Him. As we (all human beings) are created in Him, so are we (all human beings) included in Him in His death. "For the love of Christ is constraining us, judging this, that, if One dies for the sake of all, consequently all die" (2 Cor.5:14).

The One Who dies for our sake, for the sake of the irreverent, of enemies and offensive sinners, is Jesus, our Lord. He dies so that we might be living a life that recognizes Him as Saviour and Lord.

BECAUSE OF OUR OFFENSES

What God does in the giving up of His Son, and what Christ does in being given up, is because of us. This is where we first come into the message called God's evangel. We are unrighteous; we are sinners; we are offenders at enmity with God. It is our miserable state under the reign of death as a power that calls for God's astounding act of power in giving up His Beloved Son.

What is called "sin" in Romans 3:9 and 3:23 is called "offense" in Romans 4:25. Offense is that aspect of sin which wounds the feelings, that which degrades and denies the glory of God. Again, what is called the "sin" of Adam in Romans 5:12, and his "disobedience" in Romans 5:19, is referred to as his "offense" in Romans 5:15,18,20. The offensiveness of humanity is especially centered in its irreverence, in which we change God's glory to our own level and avoid Him and His ways. Paul has already defined this offensiveness and its effects most concretely in Romans 1:18-32. In our offensiveness we are vain in our reasonings, and darkened is our unintelligent heart. The human mind is a disqualified mind, distended with envy, murder, strife, guile, depravity; in our flesh we are whisperers, vilifiers, detesters of God. Such offensiveness is the cause of God giving up His Son in order to put it to death, and bring all that is good to life. This is the measure of God's love for us.

"Who will be indicting God's chosen ones? God, the Justifier? Who is the Condemner? Christ Jesus, the One Who dies, yet rather is roused, Who is also at God's right hand, Who is pleading also for our sakes?

What shall be separating us from the love of God, the love which is in Christ Jesus? Affliction, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or danger, or sword? According as it is written that: on Your account we are being put to death the whole day, we are reckoned as sheep for slaughter. But indeed, in all these we are more than conquering through Him Who loves us.

For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor messengers, nor sovereignties, nor the present, nor what is impending, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creation, will be able to separate us from the love of God, the love which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord" (Rom. 8:33-39).

ROUSED FROM THE DEAD

Jesus was dead and among the dead. The fact that He was entombed proves that He was dead. Consequently, when He was roused on the third day, He was roused from that state of death in which millions upon millions of human beings have entered. As to the condition of being dead there was no difference between Jesus our Lord and all who have died from Abel unto the present. But as to the significance of His death, and as to its effects, it is singularly, and exultantly unique. It alone makes the righteousness of God manifest and establishes His work of justification. Hence, God rouses Him from among the dead ones (who remain dead ones until He resurrects them, cp Rom.1:4). He is roused because of our justifying.

BECAUSE

From the standpoint of traditional Christianity, the wording of the evangel here is mystifying. What can it mean that our Lord Jesus is roused because of our justifying? If our offenses are the cause of the giving up of Christ to death, can it be that our justifying is to be seen as something prior to Christ's resurrection, somehow already an accomplishment established by the death of Christ which opens the way for God to rouse Him? Does the word "because" carry the same sense in these parallel lines?

How can it not?

We are baptized into Christ's death, entombed together with Him through baptism into death (Rom.6:3,4). Our old humanity is crucified together with Him (Rom. 6:6). It is with this in view that Paul declares, "If Christ has not been roused . . . you are still in your sins" (1 Cor.15:17). He has been roused, and thus the old humanity as an entirety had been put to death in the death of Christ.

This fact as declared in the evangel has not yet become a fact manifested in realization. But because of the obedience of Jesus Christ to the death of the cross, the many who are dying in Adam will ultimately enjoy the benefits of Christ's obedience to the death of the cross, and thus all shall be constituted righteous (Rom.5:19). All are included in the death of Christ, and eventually will enjoy the benefits of life's justifying (Rom.5:18).

Yet in the meantime we are enjoying these benefits in spirit now, and will be enjoying them in every way in the oncoming eons, among the celestials.

OUR JUSTIFYING

What is referred to as the manifestation of God's righteousness in Romans 3:21, and as the blessing of being justified gratuitously in God's grace in Romans 3:24, is called "our justifying" here in Romans 4:25. Our old self has been put to death in the death of Christ; it is done away with. Christ as the Sin Offering was put to death, and when that occurred, sinful humanity, under the sway of Death, was also put to death. The enjoyment of justification by all mankind was thus assured, although it has not yet been realized. But for us who are believing, this which was gained through the death of Jesus Christ for all is reckoned to our account and is becoming a powerful force in our present lives. There can be no doubt that we shall be living together with Christ and living to God in the oncoming eons. But concerning the present, Paul says to us, "Thus you also, be reckoning yourselves to be dead, indeed, to Sin, yet living to God in Christ Jesus, our Lord" (Rom.6:11).

ROUSED TO LIFE

The verb "given up" refers to the crucifixion of Jesus our Lord, given up to sufferings and the death which resulted by means of the cursed cross. In this astounding act of God, the old humanity with its sin and offensiveness is done away with. But the evangel does not stop there. The verb "given up" occurs once in our passage, but the verb "rouse" occurs twice. God rouses Jesus from among the dead, and He is roused because of our justifying. We have given much attention here to what the evangel says about death, but the passage itself gives more attention to what the evangel says about life.

The death of the old is necessary, but it is necessary in order that there be life that is new. The verb "rouse" speaks of life that is awake and aware of its condition and surroundings, life as it is felt by the senses and known by the heart. For our Lord, His rousing from among the dead brings an awareness that stands not only in glorious contrast to the sufferings of the cross but also stands in glorious contrast to the entire lack of awareness of the tomb.

LIVING TO GOD

When He was roused, Christ was living to God in a new and expanded way. He is now living to God as the God Who is vivifying the dead. So also, in believing the evangel that we die together with Christ, and in believing that we shall be living together with Him also (Rom.6:8), we find we are putting our faith on God as the Vivifier of the dead. As Christ is living to God, so also, in spirit and in heart, we are living to Him Who gives life out of death.

Thus the fourth chapter of Romans concludes with God's evangel concerning His Son as it relates to the evil of death and to the exceeding good of life. It announces that God gives up Jesus our Lord to death and rouses Him from among the dead ones. It points to Jesus our Lord as the One Who is given up and roused. The giving up is because of what we are as offenders, and the rousing is because of what God accomplished for us in the giving up of His Son, and by our inclusion in Him. That accomplishment is, to start with, our justifying. But that is not all, as our apostle now makes clear:

"Justified, then, out of His faith, we may be having peace toward God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom we have the access also, by that faith, into this grace in which we stand, and we may be glorying in expectation of the glory of God" (Rom.5:1,2).

D.H.H.

WE RELY ON THE LIVING GOD

GOD is the First Cause, Who is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will. This is the testimony of the Scriptures, but, as we have found, the deceptive teachings of "free will" and "chance" drastically and direly undermine this truth of God's deity.

Another most dangerous error, and one that equally obscures the character of God, is the idea of everlasting punishment. This denies to God the achievement of His will to save all mankind and bring them into a realization of the truth (1 Tim.2:4). In addition, it gnaws away at our own confidence in God and the glorious effects of Christ's obedience even to the death of the cross.

For we read, "Faithful is the saying and worthy of all welcome (for for this are we toiling and being reproached), that we rely on the living God, Who is the Saviour of all mankind, especially of believers" (1 Tim.4:9,10).

In this article we wish to test one of the principle arguments used in defending the doctrine of unending loss as opposed to the teaching that God is the Saviour of all. This is the claim that the words aion and aionios have different and even opposite meanings in different passages of Scripture.

THE EONS, WORD MEANING AND COMMUNICATION

There is a likeness between the arguments for "free will" and those for giving aion ("eon," CV) the idea of endlessness. In both cases, the actual issue, that which is most pertinent and important, is unrecognized. It needs to be emphasized that the underlying position which has been taken here is that some words in Scripture, certainly aion, do not have any meaning at all. In themselves, they mean nothing whatever.

Even as it is not realized that those who teach "free will" champion the absence of causality as to human choice (even though this actually gains them nothing), it is also not realized that the position of those who oppose us on the eons affirms the absence of all meaning in the word aion (and, in a number of other terms as well). It is claimed that the word aion has a variety of meanings; it may mean "world," or it may mean "age," or it may mean "endless ages," or perhaps it may even mean "timelessness; eternity"; that which is outside of time (including ages) altogether. Again, it may mean "lifetime" or perhaps "course" (as the AV renders the word in Ephesians 2:2). Yet none of these "meanings" can be taken as intrinsic. This is indeed the traditional position, that there is no actual, singular meaning that can be applied to aion. We might call it the doctrine of "the destitution of inherent morphological meaning."

Now a number of corollaries follow from this position: (1) In all non-definitive passages, of which there are many, it will be impossible even to assign any meaning at all to the word with any certainty. For instance, when we read that "God makes the eons" (Heb.1:2), how can we have any idea of what He makes? After all, a wide variety of ideas, even beyond those suggested above, might also be assigned to aion, and for these non-definitive passages, it would be impossible to determine which of these is to be understood; most all such "meanings" would make sense. (2) Even when a genuinely definitive passage is discovered (a passage in which only one idea will even conceivably make sense and avoid absurdity), the definition discerned must be confined only to that passage and any other fully parallel ones. That is, the basic idea or meaning discovered in such a passage may not be applied to other types of passages. (3) This "principle" of the absence of inherent morphological meaning for some terms would actually have to be applied to all words. But it will follow from this that (4) there will not even be a single stable context in which to discover the meaning of any word in question. After all, these contextual terms may themselves mean something quite different in one passage than they do in another! But if this were true, we could not know the meaning of even a single passage of Scripture.

The purpose of language is to communicate, and yet the "orthodox" position, when fairly considered, makes communication impossible. Besides, its advocates are not foolish enough to practice it very often themselves. If they were to employ it continually, they would soon know nothing at all! It is only when one of their pet notions, such as "everlasting life" or "eternal punishment" is challenged that they seem to want to give much heed to it.

Other terms do not take on an altogether new nature "in some contexts," and they certainly do not become antonyms to themselves. Does the word "dog," in some places, come to mean "cat"? Does darkness become light, good become evil, and false become true upon occasion? Then neither does eon, a period of time, mean endless "in some contexts."

THE CONCORDANT PRINCIPLE OF TRANSLATION

Those who oppose the concordant principle of translation, the use of concordances through which definitive passages are discovered for intrinsic word meanings, are actually claiming, whether realized or not, that scriptural words do not have any meaning at all. Instead they assign a wide variety of meanings to be applied as fits their predetermined ideas.

It is not enough for us to produce a variety of New Testament, Septuagint and secular citations which are manifestly speaking of time periods by means of the word aion. For it will generally be freely admitted that aion has such a sense in these passages. Indeed, most all students acknowledge that in those cases in which the AV translates aion as "world" the meaning is actually that of an age or eon. And most will agree that this is its meaning in a number of other passages as well.

Our opponents do not disagree with us here. Nevertheless, after considering these many definitive passages, they remain unconvinced that the basic idea inherent in the word "eon" (that of a period of time) is to be understood in all passages in which some form of the word aion is present. They insist that the word aion used in those passages which speak of life, redemption and judgment acquires a sense that is the very opposite of "age," not at all referring to a period of time. It is this practice of arbitrarily assigning quite different senses to the words aion and aionios from context to context, without recognizing a single, inherent meaning, that is used to defend everlasting punishment and to obscure the fact that God is truly the living God Who is the Saviour of all mankind.

APPEAL TO TRADITION

Good men, intelligent, educated and dedicated, have believed all manner of things. The Arminians and the Calvinists have been unable to agree concerning who it is for whom Christ died (all or some), and whether the work of Christ saves or only makes salvation possible. A number of renowned scholars and famous theologians, due to their findings in the Scriptures, have been constrained to affirm that the dead are not alive, only to have most others, no less erudite than themselves, just as insistently reply that it is in death that glorious life, or terrible pains, truly begin. Similarly, over the centuries, most have confidently believed that God will never actually give the nation of Israel the glorious terrestrial kingdom which her prophets so explicitly predict, even if Isaiah and all the rest should insist otherwise.

In light of such a history of human controversy, how doubly welcome it is to place reliance on the living God and His Word. He is the Saviour of all mankind and is faithful to this designation.

"EVERLASTING" LIFE AND CONTEMPORARY SELFISHNESS

Perhaps the most common objection we receive concerning the eons is the claim that if "everlasting punishment" should ever come to an end, then "life eternal" would do the same (Matt.25:46, AV). The objector is so selfishly preoccupied with preserving what he supposes to be blessings for himself in this passage, that he is prepared to assist in stoking the fires of hell forever if this should be necessary in order to protect his own interests.

Instead of the usual "translation," these words should be rendered "chastening eonian" and "life eonian." By its ending, -sis, kolasis ("chastening") refers not to a state, but to an action continuing on. And it has in view an action performed not as a penal infliction, but one with a view toward amendment or rectification. Since God is love, and wills to save all, His ultimate purpose in even His most severe judgments could never be the "eternal punishment" of anyone. He cannot deny Himself.

Indeed, it is well known that even the secular usage of kolasis had in view not some kind of terrible vindictive punishment, but acts done for the sake of betterment or correction.[1] In the Scriptures, in Acts 4:21, the Jews released John and Peter, "finding nothing how they should be chas- tening them." Did they not aim to reform them? Was not their "chastening" with a view toward their returning to the unbelieving Jewish fold? From their standpoint the word was certainly used to convey the idea of reformation.

To show that it had this meaning in Greek usage, we cite Plato: "For if, O Socrates, you will consider what is the design of punishing [kolazein] the wicked, this of itself will show you that men think virtue something that may be acquired; for no one punishes [kolazei] the wicked looking to the past only, simply for the wrong he has done—that is, no one does this thing who does not act like a wild beast, desiring only revenge, without thought—hence he who seeks to punish [kolazein] with reason, does not punish for the sake of the past wrong deed, but for the sake of the future, that neither the man himself who is punished, may do wrong again, nor any other who has seen him chastised. And he who entertains this thought, must believe that virtue may be taught, and he punishes [kolazei] for the purpose of deterring from wickedness."[2]

Besides, the words kolasin aiōnion in Matthew 25:46 are in reference to national judgments which the Son of Mankind will make in the day of the Lord, "whenever [He] may be coming in His glory" (Matt.25:31). These judgments concern the kingdom of the heavens, and are to be implemented in the coming eon. This judgment of God is prompted by the unworthy way in which many of the living nations will treat the people of Israel in the time of her great affliction, in the conclusion of this present eon.

Concerning the judgments of that day, Isaiah declares, "For as a light Your judgments will be to the earth, the dwellers of the habitance will learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:9b). Instead of suffering "the eternal torments of the damned," the nations will "learn righteousness."

2. Hanson: op. cit., p.53; quotation from Protag.Sec.38, vol.1, p.252.

Matthew 25:31-46 is not concerned with any of God's dealings with the members of the ecclesia which is Christ's body (cf Eph. 1:22). Instead, it has in view the granting of rewards, or chastenings, in response to the works of the nations of that day. It is not a revelation concerning divine grace, nor of the evangel of our salvation and its transcendent grace. Perhaps the best proof that men do not really believe that our salvation is a matter of gratuitous grace is the fact that this passage concerning the "sheep" and the "goats" is commonly perceived as a summary of the gospel for today.

Though eonian life (and certainly, eonian chastening) will come to an end, death will one day be abolished, and all will then be made alive, in an era in which it already will have been true for an entire eon that "death will be no more" (Rev.21:4; 1 Cor.15:20-28). The promises concerning our future life do involve the thought of endlessness. But this idea is not conveyed through any usage or form of the word aion. Therefore we should never speak of the matter of the endlessness of our future life by employing any of the usages of this word.

Instead, we should say that we will always be together with the Lord (1 Thess.4:17,18). We will be immortal and incorruptible (1 Cor.15:53), conformed to the image of God's Son (Rom.8:29), our mortal bodies having been vivified (Rom. 8:11; 1 Cor.15:23). We will have already been alive for a thousand years (the coming eon) when the promise goes forth that there will be no more death! We will continue to live during that eon as well (the length of which is not revealed), until the consummation when all will finally be vivified. Death will then be abolished for all mankind.

THE SAVIOUR OF ALL

The entire case for everlasting punishment is built on faulty arguments. Definite, intrinsic meanings are denied to Scriptural terms. The ideas of certain good and wise men are made decisive when apparently contradictory passages such as Matthew 25:46 and Romans 5:18 are considered. But perhaps most dangerous of all, there is a clear tendency to deny to God the achievements through the work of Christ that He has claimed. He is the reliable, the living, the saving God, Who cannot fail to achieve His purpose.

DAVID NORDSTROM

Though we sorrow at the loss of David Nordstrom, at the same time we are consoled in expectation that we will meet again, at the same time, in the air, with Christ Jesus our glorious Lord and Saviour.

David and I first met in Baldwin, Michigan at a Bible conference at the Grace and Truth Chapel in 1983 along with his wife and children. We kept in touch all these many years. In fact, he visited with me November 7, 2023. He spoke concerning problems with his heart. He and I always communicated concerning the Scriptures and healthy living. He passed away January 31 of 2024, having had a major stroke as they were trying to fix a blockage in his carotid artery. David was a constant supporter of the work here over all these many years. We look forward to seeing him again in the future!

EDITORIAL NOTE

The scheduled instalment in A. E. Knoch's studies on Ephesians, entitled "Our Relationship to Christ" is postponed until our next issue. This is because it seemed best (and timely) to me to concentrate on Romans 4:25 along with the subject of consolation concerning those who have been put to repose. The failure of many to see clearly that all the good things being presently enjoyed in spirit and lying ahead for us in the future rest on the foundation of the death of Christ stirs us to give added attention to God's evangel as presented in Romans. In this we all need to see more truly what is meant by God's righteousness, not only as it affects us but all humanity and indeed all creation.

Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

EDITORIAL

THE PLACE of our Lord Jesus Christ in God's operations is so critical and glorious that we must surely give diligent attention to it and uphold it always in our faith and teaching, in our understanding and fellowship. Regarding the headship of the ecclesia which is the body of Christ, A. E. Knoch writes, "Let us take heed that, in seeking to realize our high place, we may not rob Him of His!" (p.66). So also regarding the evangel itself (as well as the glories to come), I urge that "we must ever be wary of putting ourselves in places where the scripture speaks of Jesus Christ, our Lord" (p.94).

Yet as for "the scripture," as James Coram puts it: ". . . we cannot know what to believe if we do not know what has been said" (p.84). The whole matter of "Jesus Christ's faith" (Rom.3:22) to which I (joining many others) have been giving much attention, needs to be moved out of the realm of debate into the realm of "grace and peace" into which God has brought us—and by "grace" I mean the gift of JOY which is its elementary meaning. That is, our Lord's faith should not be a matter of dispute, but of one for rejoicing and peace. That the salvation-blessings of justification and reconciliation could be based on our faith is incredible. Faith, expectation and love are spiritual endowments which remain as God's gifts for us today, but they are based on Christ's faith and obedience unto the death of the cross.

Yet not these blessings alone, but all the promises of good, whether particular or general, whether temporary or final and permanent, are founded and settled on God's love (commended to us) in that while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sakes (Rom.5:8).

Yet the most fundamental and best result of Jesus Christ's faith is the manifestation of God's righteousness. All of God's choosing and blessing, even all His operations must be righteous. Resurrection and kingdom, (celestial as well as terrestrial) are not exclusive ends in themselves, but must ultimately embrace all God creates and does, and this for good. This is covered up in bad translation and wrong teachings which distort the revelations He makes in His word. We are apt to make too much of ourselves. Let us, then, be prepared for every revelation of the honor of our Lord as it leads forward to the glory of God.

In his writings, especially the studies on Ephesians currently being reprinted in this magazine, A. E. Knoch concentrates on our calling in grace as the joint body of Christ. Here there is much that is new and untraceable, and hardly recognized even by those chosen and called. But he gave emphasis to, and never neglected the basis of the "sacrificial suffering" (p.68) of our Lord Jesus Christ as it relates to the reconciliation of all and the justification of all that God does through the eonian times. Thus he writes concerning our calling: "The nations had no sacrifice, and it seemed they had no share in the great Sacrifice, the body, adapted for Christ. That Christ died for all was a truth unknown and repugnant to the ritual of Israel . . . . There is one Christ, and His body serves for all . . . . Since the same Christ, the same Sacrifice, the one body, sufficed for us as for them, we are both equally at peace with God and with one another" (p.75,76). And we may add: This peace will ultimately embrace all. In all this, the place of God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord is essential, critical and worthy of all welcome.

OUR RELATIONSHIP TO CHRIST

OUR Lord Jesus Christ is the Saviour of all believers, in every divine administration, but in each He also sustains some special relation which arises from the particular design of each administration.

As the present economy is intended to reveal the very zenith of God's grace, we are united to Christ more closely than the saints of other eras, and we share His glories in a transcendent measure. What could be of greater interest to us than to explore some of these high honors, and discriminate, not only between what is ours and what is for others, but between the various phases of our own relationship to God's Anointed?

There is a tendency in all of us to go to extremes. Once we thought that all saints, in all times, had the same blessings, especially the same destiny—heaven. I would have shuddered once if I had stopped to consider that David had not ascended into the heavens (cf Acts 2:34). The Circumcision have their place on earth, together with all others who are blessed with them.

Those who are blessed during their defection, however, have a celestial destiny. They alone "go to heaven." This is the great dividing line between believers.

Let us not go so far as to say that we have nothing in common with the saints of other economies. We have the same God, the same Christ, the same Lord, the same Saviour. The same blood avails for both. In many ways we are one with all who believe God. We share the very name "holy ones," or saints, because we are hallowed by contact with Him. All saints belong to Christ, hence such a phrase as "who are Christ's" (1 Cor.15:23) is especially worded so as to include the Circumcision and those connected with them, for they also will be vivified at the presence of Christ.

19 Consequently, then, no[t] longer [l]are [=]you guests and sojourners, but [l]are fellow-citizens of the saints and belong to [·]God's family, 20 built [on] on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the capstone of the corner being Christ Jesus Himself, 21 in Whom the entire building, being connected[°] together, is growing into a holy temple in the Lord: 22 in Whom [=]you´ also are being built[°] together [io]for [·]God's dwelling place, in spirit. (Eph.2:19-22)

Happily there is a section of the Ephesian epistle which is devoted to this very theme. In a laudable zeal to emphasize the riches of the grace shown to us, this part of Ephesians has usually been misinterpreted. The close of the second chapter (Eph.2:19-22) is intended to record, not the differences between us and other saints, but the points of contact. It sets forth our mutual interests under three figures of speech, a government, a family, and a temple. These we have in common with all saints of all time. God dwells in all, He is the Father of all, and He governs all. We are not given a subordinate place in these relationships, as is the case with the nations who are blessed through Israel. We are fellow-citizens, members of God's family and a part of the great temple of God, because the place of our blessing is not on earth, where Israel is supreme.

Our peculiar blessings are all brought before us in connection with the title "Christ," or Anointed. He is our Saviour, as His personal name Jesus (Yahweh-Saviour) shows. But we share salvation with all saints. The greatness of our salvation is not associated with His Hebrew name, but with His title. He is our Lord, yet no less the Lord of all others, though they are not so vitally united to Him as we are. The fact that all our special honors are concentrated in the title

"Christ" will help us much in clarifying our thought, and defining our special portion in God's program.

Let us note first of all that this is an official title. Anointing is always an induction into an office. It constituted Aaron a priest. It made David a king. It empowered Elijah to be a prophet. It is a strictly spiritual office. Israel is related to Him by physical bonds. They know Him according to the flesh. We have no part in "Jesus" except as He is our Saviour and Lord, and God's Christ. Others were anointed, hence were christs. We also are christs (2 Cor. 1:21). But He is preeminently the Christ, of Whom all christs are but faint and faulty figures. God's spirit is His in transcendent measure.

Let us look at some of our relationships to Him and their significance. There is a marvelous contrast in the fifth of Romans which is usually overlooked (Rom.5:8-11). There we see that, while we are sinners, Christ died for our sakes, hence we are justified, and saved from indignation by His blood. That is a summary of the teaching of Romans up to this point. In introducing the new subject, the apostle, in blessed contrast to this, asserts that the same One, as God's Son, while we are enemies, died so that we may be conciliated, hence are saved by His life. The sphere of the feelings is largely left to the sonship of our Saviour, as the apostle writes to the Galatians. "The Son of God, Who loves me, and gives Himself up for me" (Gal.2:20). Before being called, as sinners we need Christ, as enemies we need His Son. We are justified by the blood of Christ. We are conciliated by the death of God's Beloved. In view of God's coming indignation we are sheltered by Christ's blood, and shall be saved by the life of God's Son.

Christ is the Man Who can. He has power and authority by reason of His anointing, to carry out the work of redemption. He is able to accomplish all that humanity is impotent to perform. Priests have failed. In His Melchisedek priesthood He will so effectively fill the office, that no priests will be needed in the last eon, after the thousand years. Kings have failed. And He will reign to such purpose that, at the consummation, all rule will be abrogated because all God's enemies will be subdued and subject to Him. Prophets, though sent when kings and priests had failed, are also failures. He alone perfectly conveys God's mind to humanity. Failure was made for Him, to form the background of His surpassing success.

In the accounts of our Lord's life the title Christ is used in strict accord with its Hebrew usage. He came to Israel as their mshich, or Messiah (John 4:25). There is not the slightest intimation that He was to have any connection with the other nations except through His own people, Israel. He never went among them. It is all strictly personal. No one, in those days, is said to be in Christ. When such a close relationship is presented, as in John's account, the disciples are related to the Son (John 17). We should never associate ourselves with Him at that time. For instance, the first occurrence, Matthew 1:1, speaks of the lineage of Jesus Christ. In this He is alone. Personally, He has this office, quite apart from His union with some of His saints, as set forth in later revelations.

Let those who have a concordance consider all the occurrences of the title before Paul was sent to the nations. There is not the shadow of a hint that He has shared or will share His anointing with others. The central crisis in the ministry of our Lord was accomplished by the recognition of His own anointing. Peter received a revelation and confessed, saying "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt.16:16). This was the testimony in Acts. God made Him Whom they have crucified both Lord and Christ (Acts 2:36). They proclaimed that Jesus, the Man of Nazareth and Golgotha, He is the Christ (Acts 17:3; 18:5,28). His relationship to the saints of that era was comparatively loose, because they had a very limited measure of spirit. Christ is presented as their Saviour (Luke 2:11), their King (Matt.2:2), their Lord (Acts 2:36), and their Possessor (Mark 9:41).

It is only when we enter Paul's epistles, when the saints are sealed by the spirit, where the occasional coming on of the spirit is replaced by the permanent homing of the spirit, where the saints are actually anointed (literally christed) by the spirit, that they received the place of official nearness and unity. Such was impossible even for them so long as Paul was presenting Israel's Messiah according to the flesh. Our union with Him is by spirit.

OUR POSITION IN CHRIST

In Christ physical distinctions disappear. Those who have been baptized into Christ, being cleansed and united, have put on Christ, in Whom there is no Jew, nor yet Greek, no slave nor free, no male and female. All are one in Christ Jesus (Gal.3:27,28). This was true long before the "mystery" was revealed, and is not a part of it. Let us not, however, push it to extremes. It is limited to spirit, being "in Christ." We are also "in the Lord," as to conduct, and there all of these distinctions persevere until we are in His presence. "In Christ" deals with our position in grace, not with our deportment, which is in the Lord.

As we have seen, the phrase "in Christ" is not limited to us. Peter appropriates it. Eventually it will include all. "In Christ" "shall all be vivified" (1 Cor.15:22). This is quite essential, for there is no life elsewhere. As all were once in Adam, so all shall be in Christ. They cannot be made alive, or justified, or reconciled in any other way. Though they are not in Him when He vivifies "those who are Christ's," they will be in Him at the consummation. The order of identification here must correspond with the facts. Christ personally has been vivified. He can die no more. No saint has this yet. It is not actually ours until we are also changed to immortality and incorruption (1 Cor.15:50-55). The Circumcision saints will also receive it later on in the period of His presence. The time periods are these: In the past, Christ personal. In the near future, "those who are His," which is a special phrase broad enough to include all of His saints. The rest wait until the consummation, when all will be vivified "in Christ."

In Him we are hallowed (1 Cor.1:2). He becomes to us Wisdom from God, besides Righteousness and Holiness, and Deliverance (1 Cor.1:30). We have none of this in ourselves. We glory alone in Him.

It may be well, in passing, to note that there is no such figure in Scripture as the "bride of Christ." There is the wife of Yahweh and the Bride of the Lambkin, but never a bride for Christ. They who use such a phrase expose their ignorance of Scripture and of the significance of this title. He is an Officer. As such, He has no physical connections. The Bride of the Lambkin consists only of those faithful saints in Israel who are related to Him by ties of flesh, as well as of spirit. The marriage bond is essentially a physical one. Hence its aptness in the case of the redeemed, or the chosen people, to whom He belongs as to the flesh.

We now approach the heart of the subject: the various special relationships sustained to Christ by us. So seldom are the Circumcision spoken of as being "in Christ" (1 Peter 3:16; 5:14) that we almost have a monopoly of it. At least it is so characteristic of the present grace that we can condense all our blessings into one phrase, "in Christ Jesus." By adding His personal name we fix the title to His present glory and so it is ours in a special sense. All that we have is in Him. We have the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus (Rom.3:24). We have eonian life in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rom.6:23). There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus (Rom.8:1). Nothing is able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rom.

8:39). These phrases practically summarize the doctrinal divisions of the Roman epistle.

THE ONE BODY

. . . [16] and He should reconcile ˙both in one body to ˙God through the cross, ¯killing the enmity in it. [17] And ¯coming, He brings the evangel° of peace to ¯you, ˙those afar, and peace to ˙those near, [18] *t*__for through Him we ˙both have had the access, in one spirit, to__*d* the Father.

(Eph.2:16-18)

The deportment that should accompany this blessed oneness is presented under a notable figure of speech. We, who are many, are one body in Christ (Rom.12:5). Figures of speech are proverbially difficult. Few elements of the education of saints have been so neglected as this branch of literary science. There are over two hundred distinct figures of speech used in Scripture, yet few are able to identify more than a score. Even our Lord's disciples did not understand His figurative reference to falseness under the figure of leaven (Matt.16:11,12).

The relationship we have already been considering is a figure. We are not in Christ Jesus in any literal sense. No disciple could by any stretch of imagination be in the Messiah. It denotes a limited identification. Look at me. In myself I am a sinner, with neither deserts nor dignities. Look again. I have vanished. In spirit I have entered into Christ. He only is seen. I am in Him. What He is, I am. What He has is mine. His deliverance, His life, His freedom from condemnation, His deserts from the Father are mine in Him. But, like all figures of speech, its scope is limited. I am not all that He is personally. I am not Jesus the Saviour. I am not the Lord of all. I am not the Head of all. Let us not ignorantly presume upon His grace. We are in Christ.

OUR RELATIONSHIP TO CHRIST

This relationship that we have already considered is not to be taken literally. We are in Christ in a figurative sense, but we are not identical with Him in all His glories.

So also with the figure of the body. Our Saviour has one incorruptible body of flesh and bones quite apart from us. We also shall have such bodies. To put it literally, the saints of this administration are like His body. Not each one of us, but collectively. The aggregate of believers under Paul's ministry forms the body of Christ—not of Jesus. Each one of us is like a member of His actual body. In spirit we are one organism, vivified by His life, having various functions, through which He will operate officially. We are not the body of the Son of God. That is a personal appellation. We are not the body of the Lord. It is only in His official capacity as God's Executive, that we are united with Him. Christ was not anointed with oil, but with the spirit. Our spirits enter into His official place. This is the body of Christ. Misled by the figures used, there has been much confusion as to the relation of the Head to the body. Misunderstanding the figure of headship, the Head is supposed to include all the functions which are in the physical organ, such as sight and smell. As a result some have said that the body in Corinthians has not Christ as its Head! It is said that, since the eye is a member, and the nose is another (1 Cor.12:16-23), the head is made up of members! We know that the head itself is represented as a member, which cannot say to the feet "I have no need of you" (1 Cor.12:21). Taken literally, this is utterly incongruous. The head one member! The eye another! The nose another! So that Christ is absolutely absent from His own body!

Such is the confusion into which we fall when we literalize figures of speech! But if we leave each figure in its place, how enlightening each is! The highest possible member is represented by the head. Such a one cannot dispense with the functions of the lowest. Let us not make this mean more than this. It has no reference to Christ. It is concerned only with His members. Can anyone suppose that the headship, the leadership, the control of the body in Corinthians was given to one of the members? Surely the Pope would be glad to hear this interpretation! But we know that, in this body, the whole is under the headship of the same Lord (1 Cor.12:5). Christ's headship is not figured by a part of the body.

Occasionally inquiries come to me which speak of "the body, Head and members." This shows that the student has been led astray, and needs to retrace his steps. In this figure the head is one of the members. The eye, the ear, the nose—each is a member. The "body" is not a decapitated corpse apart from Christ. He is not represented by the physical head in this figure, neither here nor in later manifestations. As a literal fact, He controls it. If we were to force Him into the figure we would liken Him to the brain. Headship means leadership, not sight, hearing, smell, or taste.

The figure of the body must not be taken literally. It is not composed of bones, cartilage, and muscle, but of certain saints who have a closer union with Christ than Israel ever had. Israel was married to Yahweh, but was divorced, and is now lo ammi ("not My people"). Our union is far more vital and intimate. As illustrated by this figure, we cannot hate our own flesh, nor can we cast it off. So also, in our relation to Christ. He loves us as He loves Himself (Eph.5:25-31). Let us remember that our Lord has a literal material body, as well as this spiritual counterpart, and never confuse these two.

In regard to the gender of the body, it is always neuter, for sōma is a neuter noun. The idea of sex is foreign to the figure and can only cause confusion if it is injected. One of the most necessary lessons to be learned by the student is to confine each figure to its point of contact. For instance, if we developed the figure of the lion as far as some go with that of the body, we could easily "prove " that Christ and the Slanderer are one and the same, for both are seen under the figure of the lion! But in one case the figure is confined to the roaring, swallowing lion (1 Peter 5:8). In the other, we have the Lion of the tribe of Judah, strong to control the wild beasts of the earth (Rev.5:5).

MIXING FIGURES

Another cause of confusion is the mingling of this figure with others which are quite distinct. The new humanity ("new man") is an entirely different idea. It is racial. The new humanity is created by razing the partitioning wall between Jew and Gentile. In it Christ takes the place of Adam as the Head of the new race. We are exhorted to put off the old humanity and put on the new (Eph.4: 22-24). This is utterly impossible if referred to the "body." We cannot put that on. Above all, let no one use this figure to "prove" that the body is masculine. The man in this figure is grammatically masculine, but the term has reference to humankind, whether male or female.

Still another figure must be kept separate from that of the body. It is that of maturity (usually translated perfection), or adult stature, "the measure of the stature" (Eph. 4:13). This is an individual attainment, open to each one of us. Unless we do reach maturity in our spiritual life we will be minors, surging hither and thither, and whirled about by every wind of teaching (Eph.4:14). The point in this figure is individual maturity. The body always speaks of corporate unity. If it were a question of the members of the body as a unit becoming mature there would be no hope! The most advanced would be dragged down to the mass of minors. This maturity comes to those only who have discarded the accompaniments of minority (1 Cor. 13:11). Some at that time were not mature (Phil.3:15). The apostle admonished and taught every man in all wisdom in order that He might present every man (not the body) mature in Christ Jesus (Col.1:28).

THE HEADSHIP OF CHRIST

How is Christ the Head of the ecclesia which is His body? Is the torso with legs and arms to represent the body, and a head to represent the Christ? This seems to be implied in some modern phrases concerning "Christ, Head and body." That this is not correct is evident from the divine comparison given us in Ephesians. The husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is Head of the ecclesia (Eph.5:23). Needless to say, the wife has a head of her own, just as the ecclesia has members who are eyes and ears and nose. The husband and wife are not fragments which need to be combined in order to make one body. The headship of the husband is not figured by the body at all. It is faded metaphor. In some languages this distinction can be expressed. In German we might say that the husband is the haupt of the wife, though she has her own kopf.

Perhaps this is the key to many confusing ideas which abound relative to the body of Christ. In the Scripture it is always presented as a complete body, with the functions of sight, hearing, smell, which belong to the head. The headship of Christ over this body is a further figure, distinct from it, which ought never to be confounded with it.

Some have suggested that the body in Ephesians is a headless one, in contrast to Corinthians. Such is far from true, for headship in Ephesians is never set forth by this figure. Christ is Head over all to the ecclesia which is His body (Eph.1:22,23). Here it is impossible to imagine so grotesque an idea as the head of a body which is composed of all things! He is in control of all with reference to His body, the ecclesia. This body is only one part of the universe of which He is Head.

The same may be said of Colossians. There He is presented as the Head of every sovereignty and authority (Col.2:10). Headship does not necessarily involve the figure of a human body. It never does in the Scriptures. We have forced this into it by confusing the two figures. When we read in the same epistle that He is the Head of the body we should remember that the figure demands that many of its members be in the head. It is not a decapitated body. It is, as Ephesians puts it, an "entire body" (Eph. 4:16). This is an especially strong idiom in the Greek—every the body—in which the article is put before the noun to express not merely all of the body, but the body in its entirety. We repeat, Christ's headship is never figured by the head of the body. It is an entirely distinct matter, figured by the headship of a husband over his wife, in the Ephesian epistle.

THE BODY IN CORINTHIANS

It is notable that we have the strongest statement of our spiritual unity in Corinthians, not in Ephesians. In the Greek Scriptures no one is anointed but Christ (Luke 4:18; Acts 4:27; 10:38; Heb.1:9) and the Corinthians (2 Cor. 1:21). Of course, this was true of all to whom Paul wrote, yet it is significant that it is written to the same saints to whom the figure of the body of Christ is expounded at length. Since the spirit of God anointed all of them, and was the element into which they were baptized as well as that which they imbibed (1 Cor.12:13), we are prepared for the statement that they are one, as the human body is one, and constitute "the Christ."

This figure of speech is a very common one in some languages. In English we often speak of a person as a "body." It is tacitly understood that we do not limit the sense to the physical frame. In this sense "the body of Christ" is spoken of as "the Christ." The danger in our day is that the expression be made the basis of reasoning as though it were literal. For instance, we might argue "we are the Christ. Therefore, we are the head of all things." But immediately we are reminded that He is the Head of all to us (Eph.1:22). We have no headship. Some have said that, being the Christ, we are the Husband and not the bride. But Christ has no bride.

NO ROOM FOR HUMAN PRIDE

Innumerable reasonings and deductions, all outside the proper scope and limits of the figure, are indulged in by the saints who are intoxicated by the wine of God's grace. The danger is that we are inclined to exalt ourselves even if it lowers Him Who has raised us up. When we find ourselves appropriating the place reserved for Him, let us beware! Let us leave no room for pride. The body of Christ is not going to usurp His place! It must ever be subject to the Christ, even as our bodies are under our control. It must ever bask in a reflected glory. It has no light of its own. It must never infringe on those functions which are outside of its sphere, which are His alone, which He cannot share with His closest companions.

How shall we avoid these mistakes? By giving due place to all that has been revealed. Our knowledge of figures of speech may not be sufficient to keep us from getting out of bounds. Then we should have recourse to a well-rounded knowledge of the truth. To cite a very common example: Many reason that a woman should behave just the same as a man because the sexes are done away with in Christ. They may know so little of the import of this title that they cannot see how wrong this reasoning is. But they can turn to the inspired Word and find that, in the very highest revelation, conduct is regulated by our place in the Lord, and husbands and wives, as well as masters and slaves, are not only recognized, but instructed how to act so as to please God.

The remedy for the mishandling of Scripture is the handling of more Scripture. Some suppose that, being ourselves "the Christ" we can no longer use this phrase without including the members of the body. There are numerous passages where this is impossible. "The Christ" is Head of the ecclesia (Eph.5:23). Surely the body is not head of itself! He is the Saviour of the body (Eph.5:23). Are we our own saviours? The Christ loves us (Eph.5:2). Does that mean that we love ourselves? He is actually in the heavens. He will descend for us. We will ascend to Him. He will never be a member of the body. Let us never allow this marvelous grace to lead us to rob Him of His place supreme!

THE JOINT BODY

Finally, how does the body in Ephesians differ from the body of Corinthians? Some have gone so far as to say that they are totally distinct, and that we are not members of "the Christ" at all, but of another body. Some have said that since the Corinthians were figured as a "chaste virgin," the body in Corinthians was female! Some say that Ephesians speaks of a new man [humanity], so that the body there was male! Such are the vagaries of human inference. We can just as easily "prove" there were none but men in Corinth. Otherwise how could the apostle exhort them to be manly (1 Cor.16:13)? This also "proves" that the body must be male. All this is futile inference. The body is always neuter. Since it ignores all differences of sex, surely it cannot be either!

The body of Corinthians was a figure of speech, not a frame of flesh and bones. It was composed of those saints who received Paul's message. The body in Ephesians is identical with it. It unites the same saints and is subject to the same Head. If it were a literal fact it would be difficult to alter its condition. Nothing could be simpler than to transform and glorify the unity which it represents. As a matter of fact it changes to an "unhuman" body, if we may be allowed to use a rare word where the spirit of God has been compelled to coin a new one. Literally, no such organism exists in nature. The grace shown to us is superhuman, hence cannot even be pictured by an ordinary human body.

The change between Corinthians and Ephesians lies in the rank of the members. As the Circumcision were superior to the Uncircumcision in fact, in Paul's early ministry, so some of the body's members were above the rest, in figure. The head was exalted above the feet. The eye looked down upon the hand. Since the "mystery," or secret, was revealed, the feet are level with the head. The hand is as high as the eye. The Circumcision have no preeminence over the Uncircumcision. We are still like the human body, but all the members are peers of each other. There is a joint body. Furthermore, there is only one body (Eph.4:4). There can be no greater violation of the unity of the spirit than the formation of another, or the teaching that there are several.

We should not make a cut between the head and the members, for we have seen that the head is one of the members, and illustrates others by its functions. The "body" is a complete one in the figure. All of it is "the Christ" (1 Cor.12:12). Note that this occurs in the same passage which makes the head a member. We cannot say that only the head is "the Christ." The feet, which may represent us, is also a part of "the Christ," just as well as the head. Now that it is a joint body, the feet are equally a part of "the Christ." But none of them have the head-ship of the body. That is a distinct figure, which we must not confound with the body member which has the same name. The best way to get the matter clear is to illustrate the headship of Christ by the figure used in Ephesians. Christ is not Head of a decapitated human torso, but of a complete body, even as the husband is head of the wife (Eph.5:23). This illustration is undoubtedly given us in order that we may not be misled by the fact that the word "head" is used in two different figures. Just as the wife has a complete body with a head, besides her spiritual head (her husband), so the body of Christ has its head, besides having Christ as its Head, with reference to His lordship and our subjection. These thoughts have no place in the figure of the "one body," hence its head cannot represent them.

These facts are certainly applicable to the twelfth of first Corinthians, where the body is called "the Christ," for in the same context more members are found in the head than anywhere else.

TRANSCENDENT RELATIONSHIPS

Such are some of our relationships to our Lord Jesus Christ. All are distinctive and transcendent. Grace is connected with His office as Christ. The figure of a complete human body, including its head, sets forth our special blessedness. He is not a member of this body, although He is its "Head." This is not figured by that member of the body. He is Head of it, even as a husband is head of his wife. The head members of the body—the eyes and the ears—are not in control. They are subject to Him. Our highest grace is figured by the same figure, artificially modified to conform to the truth that all the members of the body are of equal rank. Let us take heed that, in seeking to realize our high place, we may not rob Him of His!

FROM ENMITY TO PEACE

THE PENTECOSTAL ERA was characterized by increasing enmity between the saints of the Circumcision and Uncircumcision. In the present administration of God's grace all antagonism is gone. There is not the slightest ground for further division. The change is based on the prominence accorded flesh or spirit. Then flesh was foremost and led to fighting. Now spirit is supreme, and leads to peace. This is brought before us figuratively by razing the "soreg," the wall that hindered the approach of Gentiles to the sanctuary. This is the religious aspect. It is enforced by the abrogation of the decrees which James had forced on the nations. This is the political aspect. It is accomplished by creating a new humanity, in which there are no such divisions as Circumcision and Uncircumcision. This is the social side (Eph.2:13-18).

The key to the great change is the title Christ Jesus. Had the nation of Israel received their Messiah at the end of the Acts era, then the terrestrial Kingdom would have come and He would have been their Christ on earth, and the nations would have continued in their subordinate place. He was rejected on earth. Here He is simply Jesus Christ, Who is denied His rights and refused allegiance. But He is acclaimed in the heavens. Israel is connected with the rejected Jesus Christ. We are in the elected Christ Jesus, in the heavens. In Him, in spirit, all physical relations disappear. The Circumcision who now believe gain nothing by the rite. The Uncircumcision lose nothing by its lack.

Since sin has severed man from God the only means of approach is blood. Literal blood can have no such wondrous efficacy, so we must look beneath the figure for the reality. This is found in the fact that the soul of the flesh is in the blood (Lev.17:11). The soul is the seat of sensation. The shedding of blood is a figure of suffering. Sin naturally and justly entails suffering, but this is not the passport to the divine presence. It is sacrificial suffering which satisfies God's head and heart, and leads to peace. The blood of animals allowed a physical nearness, a picture of the true. The blood of Christ brought actual access of spirit to God, Who is Spirit.

THE ENMITY

As the literary structure will help us to see that the central thought of Ephesians 2:14,15 is the removal of enmity, we present it herewith:

He is our Peace,
Who makes both one,
and razes the central wall of the barrier
(the enmity in His flesh), nullifying the law of precepts in the decrees, that He should create the two, in Himself, into one new humanity, making peace;

This arrangement shows, at a glance, that peace has replaced estrangement in relation to the three great departments of human experience: government, worship, and society. The incarnation of Christ did not bridge the gulf between Israel and the nations, as some would have us believe. Rather, it accentuated it. The enmity between the believing Jew and Gentile was not based merely on their own flesh, but on His. The fact that Messiah was of the seed of David gave the Israelites a vast advantage. It gave them authority over the nations. It made them priests and intermediaries between the nations and God. It gave them a social prestige, as blood relatives of the Messiah. All of this will yet be seen in milder form in the millennial reign, when Israel will be a royal priesthood.

The process of making peace is illustrated by three specific acts, two of which were destructive, and one creative. He abrogates the decrees, razes the "soreg," and creates a new humanity. The lordship of James and the twelve apostles over the saints of the Uncircumcision is denied. The ritual of the apostate leaders of the nation is repudiated. The nation itself is practically renounced by the creation of a new humanity in which it has no place.

THE DECREES ABROGATED

The unfortunate and inconsistent rendering "ordinances" in both the Authorized and Revised versions has hid from the saints one of the most enlightening truths connected with this secret economy. The translators had already used the word "ordinance" for several other Greek words. The laws of language are such that it is impossible for the intelligent student to avoid associating this passage with others with which it has no connection. At the same time it prevents him from linking it with that transaction to which it really refers. They had twice rendered dogma, "decree," when used of Caesar's act (Luke 2:1; Acts 17:7) as well as of the decrees made for the nations by James (Acts 16:4). Why not render it the same in the remaining passages (Eph.2:15; Col.2:14, see 2:20) which directly refer to the same document?

The decrees were a fourfold prohibitory enactment, relating only to the flesh. The believers among the nations were not to be compelled to be circumcised and keep the law, as most of the Jewish saints insisted, but they were ordered to abstain from eating idol sacrifices, and blood, and what is strangled, and prostitution (Acts 15:29). No doubt, these seemed to be very wise expedients, intended to reduce the friction between Jewish believers, who were still strict ritualists, trying to keep the law, and the believers among the nations who were not under law. Very little social fellowship would be possible without some such restrictions. The only real purpose which they served was to give concrete expression to the attitude of the Jews toward the Gentiles, and later, by their repeal, show the change brought in by the revelation of the mystery.

Without in the least intending to do so, the compilers of these decrees indicted themselves by the terms of their enactment. Physically they kept them, spiritually the nation to which they belonged was guilty of breaking them all. Though they would not allow the nations to eat meat which had been offered to idols, they themselves idolized the outward forms and ceremonies which had displaced the spiritual worship of Yahweh. They not only did not eat blood, but they refused the blood of Christ, which had been shed for their souls. They strangled the spiritual life out of the divine ritual. They will yet, as a nation, be untrue to Yahweh, and form an alliance with His enemies. It were better for James to legislate for his own nation, than to enmesh the Gentiles in man-made restrictions.

In the realm of spirit all of these prohibitions are unnecessary, so they are repealed. They accord with a ritual, a religion, which was only a shadow. We have the substance, in Christ. In Israel the form of worship was of divine appointment, but what profit is there in that if its meaning is not apprehended? God is spirit, and must be worshiped in spirit and in truth (John 4:24). The divine ritual symbolized Christ and His glories. Instead of leading them to Christ, these ceremonies actually barred the way. So also, they reckoned the blood of animals too holy for use, yet counted the blood of Christ a common thing and refused God's estimate of its value. They refuse to eat the flesh of a strangled animal, yet seek to maintain their spirits on the strangled corpse of formalism.

The believers among the nations had already fulfilled the spirit of these prohibitions. They had broken with idols, they had perfectly acknowledged the peerless power of Christ's precious blood, they did not subsist on lifeless forms, they were intensely true to God. Since, then, they had the reality, why revert to the shadow, as though that were more vital than the substance? This is what Paul warns us against in his Colossian epistle. "If, then, you die together with Christ from the elements of the world, why, as living in the world, are you subject to decrees . . . in accord with the directions and teachings of human beings, which are, (having indeed an expression of wisdom in a willful ritual and humility and asceticism) not of any value against the surfeiting of the flesh" (Col.2:20-23).

The curtain, the doors, and the courts of the temple were all indications of distance from Yahweh. The nearness of the Circumcision was only a comparative one. The high priest was nearest, for he went into the holy of holies once a year. The priests were nearer than the men of Israel, who could not enter the inner courts. Yet all of these were near, compared to the Gentile who was shut out of the sanctuary altogether. In Herod's temple magnificent cloisters were built especially for the nations, but these were not in the divine plan of the holy places. They did not rightly belong to the sanctuary.

We have already described the "soreg," the "middle wall of partition," inside of which a Gentile dare not go. No better sign of the dissolution of the antagonism between Jew and Gentile could be imagined than the demolition of this wall. As a matter of fact, it was still standing when this epistle was penned by Paul. It was gone only in spirit. But a few years later witnessed its fulfillment as to fact. Although, at the siege of Jerusalem, both the Jews and Titus used every precaution to keep the temple from harm, an unseen Hand seemed to insist on its destruction. Before the sacred edifice was wholly consumed by the flames, Titus entered the holy of holies, an alien, and a conqueror. After the siege was over he had all of the walls leveled with the ground.

To most of us this scene is among the saddest in the history of mankind. But the anointed eye can see beneath the heap of ruins the gladdest truth the nations will ever know. Access to the temple site was no longer obstructed by walls or any intervening barrier. So now, Jew or Goyim may go direct into the divine Presence, by His spirit. The way is open for men of every race and people and nation! In this economy Paul will have no trouble in bringing Tychicus past the place where the "soreg" was, for it is gone. He was imprisoned for supposedly doing it. In a very different sense he was imprisoned for [in order to be] doing it. He could not bring Trophimus near in flesh, but he can bring Tychicus very near in spirit (cf Acts 20:4, 21:29, Eph.6:21).

THE NEW HUMANITY

We are now given the reason for the breaking down of the "soreg," and the abrogation of the decrees. These were based on schisms in the old, or Adamic, humanity, the old creation, in which there are many divisions, especially Circumcision and Uncircumcision. Now there is a new race, "wherein there is no Greek and Jew, Circumcision and Uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, slave, freeman, but all and in all is Christ" (Col.3:11). We are no longer in Adam, but in Christ.

The teaching of the new humanity is of paramount importance in this administration, but it has been lost to us in the confusion of translation and interpretation. The new "man" has been generally explained as a new "nature" or else confounded with the "body" of Christ. English lacks a constant equivalent for the Greek anthrōpos, human. It is usually rendered "man," the same as anêr, man, not a woman. The best that seems possible at present is to use mankind and humanity when feasible, and seek to introduce human when possible. Meanwhile, let us note that Christ does not make peace with the Circumcision by giving us a "new nature" or putting us in the body. He does this by creating a new humanity, in which the old animosities are absent.

There is a double sense in which this humanity is new. It is neos, YOUNG, fresh and vigorous (Col.3:10, cf John 21:18). It is kainos, NEW, novel, different (Eph.2:15; 4:24). It is in constant contrast to the old humanity, in Adam. The old humanity was created innocent, but soon was corrupted in accord with its seductive desires (Eph.4:22). The new humanity is created in righteousness and benignity of truth (Eph.4:24). Over seven thousand years have shown the incorrigibility of the Adamic race. Peace is impossible between its antagonistic elements. The more it is proposed the less it is practiced. There is no hope of ever uniting its discordant fragments into a united and pacific people.

The old humanity is shattered into many warring fragments. Rationalism and religion, covenant privileges, the place of residence and accident of race, liberty and servitude—these divide it into irreconcilable factions. The new humanity is one. It is not divided. The Greek had his philosophy, the Jew his religion. But Christ is our Wisdom. In Him we outstrip the highest ideals of the Greek intellect. And Christ is our religion. Every shadow of their ceremonies was cast by Him. We are complete in Him (Col.2:10). The Circumcision had a covenant with Yahweh. We have much more in Christ. The Uncircumcision were shut out from Him. But now they are the true Circumcision (Phil. 3:3), through His cross. Language and race, the potent sources of prejudice and warfare in the old humanity, lose their baneful influence in Christ. It is only as we fail to put on the new humanity that these divisions disturb our fellowship with other saints.

As we look down the vista of earth's history, we may note the entrance of these five disrupting features and the reason for their appearance. Each is the outcome of some form of sin. The curse of Canaan, Noah's son, brought bondage (Gen.9:25). At Babel, languages appeared and mankind was separated and sent into various areas of the earth (Gen.10:25; 11:8). To save the world from sin, Abraham is called and Israel separated (Gen.17:1-14; Exodus 19:5,6). To one was given the sign of circumcision, to the other a divine ritual. Thus, gradually, the "old man" disintegrates. There are continual efforts at racial unity, but they lead only to further division. Not so in Christ. All are one in Him. All of those divisions are founded on the flesh. The new humanity is a spiritual unity which never can be marred.

Lest we should lose the special blessing here unfolded by merging it into that of our relationship to Christ as His spiritual body, we wish to emphasize the difference in the two images, the place of their occurrence, and the practical application. In one the figure is of a single human body. In the other it is that of a race of beings, including many individuals. The figure of the body, in Ephesians, is confined to those sections of the epistle which elaborate our special relationship to Christ as His joint body. The new humanity, however, is found only in those sections dealing with our joint participation with the saints. We are members of the body, no matter what our behavior. The conduct becoming the humanities, however, is compared with clothing, which can be put on or off. We are exhorted to divest ourselves of the old humanity and put on the new. This cannot be said of the figure of the body.

In the passage before us we are especially concerned with the old humanity as divided into two factions—Circumcision and Uncircumcision. The other divisions are ignored. It is these two which are created into one new humanity. Both are reconciled with God through the cross (Eph.2:15,16). Both now have the access, in one spirit to the Father. In this part of the argument there is a return to the sacrificial system suggested by the blood. In the old humanity there was no sacrifice for the Uncircumcision. Israel might have a peace offering, but there was none for the nations. It is also blessedly true that Israel's sacrificial system had no place for the cross. There was blood and death, but the deeper suffering of the accursed tree was reserved for the great Antitype.

Who could have supposed that the blessings presaged by the sacrifices in Israel would come to them through the awful murder of their own Messiah? It was the leaders of the Circumcision who were especially guilty of the atrocious crime. Does not this rob them of all rights to its benefits? Does this not lower them beneath the level of the rest of mankind? Not content with His death, they cry "Crucify! Crucify!" well knowing that, according to the law, the curse of God was on the one who hung upon a tree. Morally, this one act nullified every advantage they claimed, every promise they possessed, and gave God a free hand to do as He saw fit.

The nations had no sacrifice, and, it seemed, they had no share in the great Sacrifice, the body adapted for Christ. That Christ died for all was a truth unknown and repugnant to the ritual of Israel. This was one of the disturbing differences between the Circumcision and Uncircumcision. God doubtless could have provided some lesser sacrifice for the aliens, but it pleased Him to reconcile them to Himself through the same body as that which brought the Circumcision nigh. There were not two bodies, one for the nations and one for Israel. There is one Christ, and His body serves for all. (There is no reference here to the figurative body of which we are members. We are not a means of reconciliation.) Since the same Christ, the same Sacrifice, the one body, sufficed for us as for them, we are both equally at peace with God and with one another.

When they killed Christ they also killed the enmity between themselves and the Uncircumcision (Eph.2:16).

The mystery or secret of the evangel is conciliation or peace on God's part toward all mankind. That is the evangel of peace figured by the sandals in the panoply provided in the last part of Ephesians (6:15). Here, however, the context throws a special coloring on the phrase. It is not God's attitude of peace toward the world, but peace between those who have access, in spirit, into God's presence. Once we were afar off and the Circumcision were near. Now both are brought near by the blood of Christ, and, as a result there is an evangel of peace to both, declaring the enmity between them to be at an end. Physically, there is no change, but the flesh is ruled out. In spirit, through Christ, Jew and Gentile may walk, with clasped hands, not merely beyond the "soreg," not only into the court of the priests, but into the temple itself, yea, into the holy of holies, into the very presence of the Father.

BARRIERS BROKEN DOWN

Now that, in spirit, the barriers have been removed which separated the nations, not only from God's presence, but from those privileges which the Circumcision alone could claim, what is our relationship to the saints of other eras and economies? We have been considering an election out of Israel joined with believers out of the nations to form a distinct and hitherto unrevealed company. Yet, as there is but one God, Who has but one Christ, Who is Lord of all, it must follow that the relations of saints to Him will bring about mutual relations to each other. The term "saints," or holy ones, is not confined to any company or administration. It is universal in its scope, including all who are hallowed by relationship with God, all whom He has set apart for Himself. It should never be used in a restrictive sense. All who are holy are saints.

This aspect of the mystery is presented under three figures: a government, a family, and a temple (Eph.2:19). All saints, of all time, no matter what their peculiar blessings are, no matter what their eonian privileges and destiny, stand in some relation to God's kingdom, His family, and His dwelling place. These figures are by no means confined to the administration of the mystery. They are not at all characteristic of it. In fact, the kingdom and the temple are far more prominent in relation to the terrestrial blessings of the Circumcision. Just as the point of the mystery does not lie in the figure of the body, but in the prefixed "joint," so here the figures used are not new, but our changed relation to them is the burden of the passage.

The tendency, in studying the mystery, is to cut loose from all previous revelation and all other saints. But a little reflection will show that we must bear some relation to others, notwithstanding the exalted nature of our own destiny. This treatise would hardly be complete without setting forth the points of contact which we have with others who are the subjects of God's redeeming love. They belong to God's kingdom. So do we. They are in God's family. So are we. They are indwelt by Him. We also are God's temple. In these things we are not severed from them, but associated with them. It is intolerable to imagine the body of Christ isolated in solitary and frigid splendor, too exclusive to acknowledge the hallowed of other times, and denying all relationship to them. One great love embraces us all. One Christ died for all. One spirit animates all.

These are spiritual realities. In Israel they were shadowed by physical facts. Their citizenship, their family, their temple were but parables of the true. They were terrestrial models of celestial realities. God's real temple is in the spirits of His people. His family is limited to His believing saints. His kingdom embraces all who obey Him. We were excluded from association with the physical counterparts of the true. We are included in the spiritual realities. We were aliens, guests, sojourners. Now we are not only citizens, but fellow (or joint) citizens. We had no access to the temple on mount Moriah. Now we are one of the temple buildings. Then the nations could not go into the courts of the sanctuary. Now they cannot get out of the temple. The contrast is between the physical disabilities of the era preceding the present (Eph.2:11,12) and the spiritual privileges brought about by Christ as our Peace.

FELLOW CITIZENS

For brevity's sake the term "kingdom" is often used in a restricted sense of the millennial rule of Christ, or it may also include the succeeding reign in the eon of the eons. But the kingdom of God is really a much wider thought. In the Ephesian epistle Paul does not hesitate to warn certain sinners that such have no allotment "in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph.5:5). The three figures used merely separate God's relationship to His saints into its political, social, and religious aspects. All the saints are subject to God, are His dependents, and worship Him. Even now we are in the kingdom of the Son of His love (Col.1:13). Not all who are subject to a sovereign are citizens. They may be slaves. They may be temporary residents from another realm. This was the case with the nations in the preceding era. They were sojourners.

But the point here is not merely that we have become citizens. These may be of various grades and privileges. A child is a citizen, yet does not function as such, nor does it possess the privileges attached to maturity. In ancient states citizenship was usually graded into various ranks, so that there were no joint citizens. This implies that all privileges are shared alike, that none have rights or horrors above the rest. If, for instance, a nation should be invited to share the citizenship of Israel in the millennium, it would need to be in some subordinate sense, without the full power of the sacred people. The question is, now that we are one with an election out of Israel in the celestial realms, are we, as Gentiles, to be inferior to them, or of equal rank? The answer is, we are fellow-citizens.

In our case alone do Gentiles come into full political privileges in the kingdom of God. A little reflection will show how impossible this would be in the millennium. The nations there are ruled by Israel. To give them the political power of that nation would practically take all government out of Israel's hands and utterly wreck the whole character and purpose of that administration. The saints among the nations in the millennium can never be fellow-citizens. We receive a much higher place than they. No such disability operates in our case. The Israelites in the body of Christ do not rule over the Gentiles. Both rule over the universe, under the headship of Christ. Hence both have equal political privileges. The nations are fellow-citizens.

There was a time when the Circumcision attempted to assert their political prestige over the believers among the nations. James, who had obtained the leadership because he was the blood brother of our Lord, formulated a decree, ostensibly to keep the Circumcisionists from imposing circumcision on the nations, yet in reality laying down the law to them as though he had authority over them (Acts 15:1-29). One of the tokens of our present position is the repeal of these decrees. The Circumcision, as a class, has no more right to formulate decrees for us than we have to decide their conduct. We are now fellow-citizens.

MEMBERS OF GOD'S FAMILY

In the ancient language of inspiration the words guest and stranger were practically synonymous. As there were very few inns, a foreigner was compelled to be the guest of some family almost everywhere he went. Trophimus, in Jerusalem, was a stranger and a guest. This figured the relation of the nations to the promise covenants and to the family of Israel. Now we are connected with a new covenant, not of the letter but of the spirit (2 Cor.3:6), and a new family, not physical but spiritual, in which we may claim all the privileges of membership. The Syrophoenician woman was not allowed a seat at the table. She was but a puppy. If she had lived in this economy she would not need to ask for crumbs. Though a Gentile, she could demand all that belongs to the family circle.

God is Spirit. Those who are joined to Him are one spirit. He is the Father of spirits. His family is a spiritual one. When Israel rejected His spirit and the nations attended to His words, did they receive a different or lower spirit than the elect in Israel? They received the same spirit. This brought them into the same spiritual relationship to God as they. Physical hindrances hindered the acknowledgment of this great truth hitherto. Now that physical distinctions are gone, it shines out in all its effulgence. God is our Father just as really as He is theirs!

Eden knew no temple. Adam knew no shrine. God walked and talked with him out in the garden in which he dwelt. So also in the holy city, new Jerusalem. There will be no temple in it (Rev.21:22). But in between, during the sway of sin, God withdraws into a building of His own where the defilement of sin cannot come, and where it is fended by the blood. None of the literal temples were accessible to Gentiles. They were shut out. Now, however, that there is no temple at Jerusalem, God dwells in His saints, both individually and as a class. Once more the question arises, in this figurative temple, have we as close a place as the Circumcision, or are they the temple building and we the outside court? The answer is found in the phrases "connected together" and "built together" (Eph.2:21,22).

The word "together," in these two phrases, is the same as the word joint, or fellow, in the statement of the mystery. They are elaborations of its third item, that we are joint partakers. They refer particularly to the fact that we rank equally with the election out of Israel who believe during this present secret administration. The place accorded them in this temple is ours, just as the allotment described in the first twelve verses of chapter one, though primarily theirs, is ours. The reason is the same. We have received the same spirit.

Moreover, the Greek word represented by "being connected together" is the same as that used later of the body—"being articulated together" (Eph.4:16). These are the only two occurrences. The figures are very diverse, and should not be confused. A human body is quite different in structure and composition from a temple. In this place the body is used to illustrate our growth as related to the Head, and our unity. The temple presents an entirely different aspect. It sees us as God's abode, yet it also presses the idea of unity. Both body and temple are composed of two hitherto jarring elements, the Circumcision and the Uncircumcision, and these are TOGETHER-CONNECT-LAID, as the Greek has it, or "fitly joined together," as the Authorized Version puts it.

But there is a vast distinction to be observed between these two figures. The body is used only and exclusively of the celestial allotment, while the temple is used of the terrestrial also. Peter assures the dispersion that they are being built a spiritual house (1 Peter 2:5). God dwells in all His saints, not merely in those who are the body of Christ. The figure here is all-embracing, and includes all saints, just as the figure of the family and the kingdom included all. We have the same Capstone, Christ Jesus, as the Circumcision on the earth. In plain language, God's Spirit indwells us both through Christ. However diverse may be our destiny and our function, this connects us together.

There is a double union here. First, with the elect of the Circumcision who are in the body and also with those who are without. Alone we do not form this temple.

In the laudable endeavor to make everything in the Ephesian epistle something new and unknown before, without reference to the argument or context, it is often claimed that these apostles and prophets must be confined to "new testament prophets" and Pauline apostles, for only these are in the foundation of "the church." The looseness of our phraseology is costing us much precious truth. This passage does not deal with the church, which, by the way, is by no means a divine title for the present grace. It is not dealing with the "body." It is dealing with us as joint partakers with others. It is illustrating our relation to saints of other times under the figure of a temple. This temple, including us, is founded on all the apostles and all the prophets. In this aspect, as part of the dwelling place of God, we may well acknowledge the prophets of old and the apostles of our Lord, as well as those which are associated with our own peculiar grace.

This concludes the discussion of the third item of the secret. That we are joint allottees was first set forth. Then we were made members of the joint body. Now we are joint partakers. After being reminded of the fleshly disabilities of the Uncircumcision, being political, social, and religious inferiors in the divine administration which followed Pentecost, notwithstanding our spiritual blessings, our whole relationship to other saints is revolutionized and raised to full equality by the introduction of a new economy in which spirit, and not flesh, is dominant. Christ Jesus breaks down the barriers, abolishes the decrees, creates a new humanity. We become the peers of the Circumcision in the kingdom—fellow-citizens. We are members of God's family. We are an integral portion of the holy temple in which God dwells. In all these we are joint partakers.

THE LIVING GOD AND THE EONS

In the providence of God, concerning all terms of consequence, the sacred writings provide their own internal evidence which establishes the significance of their vocabulary terms and grammatical forms.

Many important passages, however, are nonetheless not definitive passages. For example, in themselves, those passages which refer to the life which pertains to God's people, or to the duration of certain adversative judgments, simply are not definitive. This is because perfectly conceivable ideas may be represented by both "eonian" and "everlasting." Whether these should be foreign or familiar to our traditions is altogether irrelevant.

In the majority of instances, words are not used definitively. A passage may be vital, but that has nothing to do with whether its key terms are used definitively. For example, the words of Romans 3:24 are of the greatest importance to us, for they lie at the heart of the gospel: "Being justified gratuitously in His grace, through the deliverance, the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus." But what does it mean to be justified? What does it mean for something to occur gratuitously? What significance is there to the fact that this gratuitous justification (whatever that may be) occurs in God's grace? The passage itself will not inform us.

We must learn the force of each of these terms from other places. For example, "justify" appears definitively in passages such as Luke 7:29 and Romans 3:4, "gratuitously" in John 15:25 and 2 Thessalonians 3:8, and "grace" in Romans 4:4 and 11:6.

It is through such passages as these latter ones that we determine the meaning of these key expressions. We then carry the knowledge we have gained concerning the meaning of these words into our considerations of Romans 3:24. Before we read it, we already know what each of these terms mean, and only wish to note their particular usage in the passage at hand. There is no other way to be certain of the meaning of a word whenever it appears (as is often the case) in a passage that is less than definitive. In many texts it is possible to assign any one of several ideas to a term and still express a conceivable thought through the clause in which it is found. But this is only to speculate; it is not to know. We are not to guess; we are to believe. Yet we cannot know what to believe if we do not know what has been said.

It is popularly believed that many words have two or more meanings. Actually, however, this is not the case. In any certain instance, according to its usage, a word may indeed convey a special connotation, one which is not present in other passages in which it is found. Yet no such specialized usage—even in the slightest degree—changes a word's essence, its denotation or basic meaning.

Within any certain era, those words which come into common use during such a period (or already exist at its beginning) cannot possibly denote more than one idea, even if they should soon find themselves being employed in a multiplicity of special applications. Otherwise, communication (much less translation), except for perhaps a few well-placed grunts, would be impossible and vanish from the face of the earth.

A "word," then, is simply a linguistic form which is used to communicate an idea, a form which, by itself, is capable of conveying an unmistakable thought. Strictly speaking, a "word" (apart from homonyms) is "a linguistic form that can meaningfully be spoken in isolation."[1]

Dictionary definitions of a word's usage must be distinguished from a word's own definition, its meaning, which distinguishes it from other expressions. Since many derived usages necessarily enter into popular speech in reference to new applications or objects, most people hazily and mistakenly refer to such usages (which, in turn, become dictionary "definitions") as "different meanings." Nonetheless, whether we speak of a dining room table, a multiplication table, a desert table (a mesa or plateau) or tabling (postponing) a project, the meaning of "table" (viz., "a flat horizontal surface") never changes.

This principle, then, must be true concerning the word aiōn as well. Therefore, while all scriptural passages in which some form of aiōn is found are either definitive or indefinitive, none of them present any essential different meaning than the rest. As we shall see, the idea of an "eon," or of that which is in some way eonian, is always present in any of the definitive usages of this word. None of the definitive occurrences of aiōn can sensibly be conceived as signifying "that which has no end."

THE MEANING OF "EON"

We have been asked to give a simple explanation concerning the word "eon." Basically, an eon (or age) is simply a period of time; in most cases, it is used of a very long period of time. Being a period, it has a beginning and an end.

The Scriptures make reference to five notable eons—five epochal periods—which are determined, or marked off, by exceptionally extraordinary occurrences, tremendous upheavals in the established order. They run their course, (1) from the beginning of creation to a great cos-

mological disruption (evidently of a geological nature though occasioned by moral disruption or sin); (2) from the disruption of the world to the great flood; (3) from the flood to the establishment of the Messianic kingdom on earth (which includes the present era, necessitated by the Pauline evangel which unfolds the untraceable riches of Christ for the nations); (4) from the establishment of the terrestrial kingdom (primarily the thousand years or "millennium") to the destruction of the earth by fire; and (5) from the creation of the new earth to "the consummation" revealed by the apostle Paul.[2]

After the consummation of vivification and of the eonian times which are revealed in Scripture, the kingdom of the Son of the Most High will continue on, never ceasing, for "of His kingdom there shall be no consummation" (Luke 1:33b). The Scriptures do not reveal any certain events during the endlessness which follows the time when God becomes All in all. Long periods of time may well be marked off by notable events and termed eons, but any such things are not revealed to us now.

Christ's literal rule will be so effective as to "rule out" all rule. None will be needed, for all will be subject, vivified, headed up in Christ and reconciled. The term "kingdom" will be retained, not because He is still finding it necessary to rule those who are in subjection, but, by association, in honor of what was accomplished and permanently established as a result of His literal reign until the time when He gave up the kingdom to His God and Father.

"Eonian" simply means "of or pertaining to, the eons [or eon]." In the Scriptures, the "eonian times" are from "the beginning" to "the consummation." The meaning of "eon" and "eonian" never change, even though they are sometimes used in different senses and in reference to more than one subject. Aiōnios never means "age-lasting," and so should not be translated thus, even though some of its occurrences are in accord with this thought (others are not, only making reference to a portion of an eon). In most cases, it is "the oncoming eons" (Eph.2:7) which are in view. Some passages refer directly to the periods of time themselves; others, by association, have in view the character or nature of things which will prevail during the periods being discussed. God has various operations (economies or administrations) during the eons for the accomplishment of His goals, all leading to the greatest one of all, becoming All in all at the consummation.

DEFINITIVE EONIAN PASSAGES

The following are a few representative examples of passages in which the Hebrew olam, and its Greek equivalents, aiōn and aiōnios, are definitively used in the Scriptures: "Yahweh, He shall reign for the eon and further" (Exodus 15:18); "the earth is standing for the eon" (Ecc. 1:4); a statute "for Aaron and for his sons, . . . it is an eonian statute" (Lev.24:9); "Across the Stream your fathers dwelt from the eon of old" (Joshua 24:2); "I took account of . . . the years of the eons" (Psa.77:5); "before the eons" (1 Cor. 2:7); "before times eonian" (2 Tim.1:9); "a secret hushed in times eonian, yet manifested now" (Rom.16:25, 26); "the present wicked eon" (Gal.1:4); "the current eon" (1 Tim. 6:17); "the eon of this world" (Eph.2:2); "this eon" (Matt. 12:32); "that eon" (Luke 20:35); "the coming eon" (Mark 10:30); "the oncoming eons" (Eph.2:7); "the conclusion of the eon" (Matt.24: 3); "the conclusion of the eons" (Heb. 9:26); and "the consummations of the eons" (1 Cor.10:11).

Thus we can be certain that "eon" means a period of time; it is the longest segment of time known in the Scriptures. It is not used to speak of endless time, or of any foggy philosophical speculations about "eternity."

HE WHO IS LIVING FOR THE EONS

Likewise, concerning God's living "for the eons" (Rev.4: 9,10; 10:6; 15:7), it is only because this expression is unfamiliar to us that it seems awkward or difficult. A parallel familiar expression should make this evident. Were we to declare that the living God is living today, this would be found quite acceptable. It becomes evident, then, that it is just as sensible (even if most are not familiar with the expression) to declare that He will be living tomorrow, namely, in the glorious scriptural morrow of the oncoming eons. The fact that He Who is living during this current era will also be living "for" (actually, "into," eis) the eons of time ahead, constitutes a further word of assurance concerning His providential care during these future long eras of time.

It is to be regretted that the hazy English "for" can be misused in connection with the eons. The literal rendering "into," in such cases, however, would unduly strain English idiom. Opposers imprudently couple "for" with their own gratuitous inference "only (for)" in order to "disprove" the meaning of aiōn as "eon." This is done in order to make the meaning eon appear to be obviously mistaken with regard to the revelation that God is living eis tous aiōnas tōn aiōnōn ("for the eons of the eons," CV). The Authorized Version rendering, "God, Who liveth for ever and ever," adds to the confusion, and lends support to the popular misunderstanding. For it makes the reference appear to be to the length of God's life, when it instead is a reference to a particular time during which God will be living ("God, Who is living for the eons of the eons," CV).

Inasmuch as the word aiōn appears in both classes of passages, crude reasonings from the usual mistranslations of those passages which interconnect God, or Christ (Rev.1:18), a form of the word "life," and the word aiōn, are routinely set forth as clear proof in favor of "everlasting (aiōnion) punishment" (e.g., Matt.25:46). That is, since God "liveth for ever and ever," and it is felt that the thought here must be that His life never ends, it is concluded that the punishment of the lost must likewise be endless, since the same Greek word is used concerning these respective revelations.

This conclusion, however, is based on mistaken premises, ones which are derived from false inferences and mistranslation: (1) the injecting of "only (for)" into "for" (in relation to the phrase "for the eons") while failing to note the literal "into"; (2) the AV mistranslation "liveth" ("lives" in modern English) instead of the correct form "is living"; (3) the gross mistranslation "for ever and ever" instead of the accurate rendering "for the eons of the eons."

Whenever we read the expression "for the eons," we should always keep in mind the actual literal idea of into. That is, God will be living on, into those eras of time, in order that He should be living within or during those time periods as well, even as He is living within or during these present hectic times, when we need Him so much.

The fact that I lived during the nineteen seventies is no proof that I now am dead in the nineteen eighties! And if I should say that I am living in the year 1988, and that, the Lord willing, I shall be living on into the year 1989, this would give no license to any of those who might translate my words into another language to make a claim, and so translate, to the effect that while in one case where I used the word "year" I actually meant a year, while in another place where I used this same word I did not mean a year at all (even if I did say so!).

Yet this is just the sort of thing that most translators of the Scriptures have done with the words in the Original for "eon." Most simply lacked the insight to see the point of many of the passages that spoke of the eons. Since they were able, however, to make sense of these passages by translating by "everlasting" or "eternal," they simply went ahead and did so, any resultant problems notwithstanding. Due to a lack of sensible thinking and an abundance of confidence in the flesh, it is impossible for most to face the fact that the usual translations of this word are quite mistaken and extremely harmful.

We believe that God's life will never end, not because of any passages in reference to Him which include the word "eon," but because it is written that His "years shall not come to end" (Psa.102:27). Furthermore, since God is the Source of all life, and since, at the consummation, all will be gloriously made alive so that He may become All in each one, it is evident that He must ever have life Himself in order to impart it to His creatures.

As the Lord declared, "Seeing that I am living, you also will be living" (John 14:19). In light of the fearful nature of the terrible judgments in the Revelation, one might infer that all hope is lost. But this is not the case at all. For the living God, Who is living today, will be living on as well into the coming eons! The fact that He is said to be living, at any time, is not declared in order merely to inform us that He still exists, but is a lively figure of association designed to testify to His great power and subjectorship. He lives! He is the living God, and so is great and marvelous, strong to save, and "able to do superexcessively above all that we are requesting or apprehending" (Eph. 3:20). "We rely on the living God, Who is the Saviour of all human beings, especially of believers. These things be charging and teaching" (1 Tim.4:10,11).

THE EONIAN GOD

In light of these things, we may join Paul in saying,

"Wherefore we are not being despondent, but even if our outward human is decaying, nevertheless that within us is being renewed day by day. For the momentary lightness of our affliction is producing for us a transcedently transcedent eonian burden of glory, at our not noting what is being observed, but what is not being observed, for what is being observed is temporary [proskairon, TOWARD-SEASON], yet what is not being observed is eonian" (2 Cor. 4:16-18).

Paul is not making a contrast between time and eternity, as the Authorized Version's terms "temporal" (pertaining to time, from the Latin tempus) and "eternal" would suggest. Antithetical terms are not the only ones which may be set in contrast to one another. Paul is contrasting this present lifetime, the present brief season in which we are afflicted, with the exceedingly long future eons in which we will enjoy a great burden of glory.

Our God and Father is the God of the eons, the eonian times or ages revealed in the Scriptures (this fact is reflected in the well-known hymns, "Rock of Ages," and, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," which includes the line, "From age to age the same"). The Greek word for "God," Theos, means "Placer" (or, "Subjector"; cf KEYWORD CONCORDANCE entry, p.127; e.g., 1 Cor.12:18,28). It is not His name, nor is it a reference to Him as the Creator of nature or as the heavenly Father. Instead, "God" is a title which represents the Deity as the Disposer, Subjector or Placer of all things (Acts 17:24,25).

It is not improper to accommodate custom and use the English word "God" when speaking of the Supreme. It is not so vital just which word we use as the idea we conceive whenever we use a certain word. God is the great Placer of men, nations, and the entire world during the eonian times. Consequently, He is the eonian God (Rom.16:26).

Thoughts along these lines are in view in those passages in which God is identified with the eons.

By the consummation, all will have been placed by Him into such conditions as have been best and for the good of all. Then there will be no more need for authority and government. Rule will be ruled out; all will be ideal, for the living God will be All in all. James R. Coram

THE MYSTERIOUS MYSTERY

THE marvelous truth of the "mystery" is set forth in Paul's Ephesian epistle. This letter is an orderly discussion of the new revelation and its relation to previously revealed truth. The only safe way to acquire a knowledge of present truth is to follow its arguments and acquiesce in its deductions. But this is not the usual method. It seems to suit us better to do our own reasoning. So we find most expositions about this secret administration a series of inferences based on the nebulous idea that the mystery is an absolutely new teaching with no relation whatever to what has gone before. The third item of the secret distinctly states that Paul's previous evangel is incorporated into it, yet the usual inference from the word "mystery" is that all the past is practically blotted out.

We must first know what the mystery really is before beginning to reason about it. Unfortunately, hardly anyone takes sufficient pains to inform himself accurately, and most of the arguments on the subject are nullified the moment we define the secret itself. As we have given a full definition of its terms in our booklet "To Enlighten all as to The Secret" we will only repeat it briefly here. It is that, "in spirit, the nations are to be joint enjoyers of an allotment, and a joint body, and joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which I [Paul] became the dispenser . . ." (Eph.3:4-7).

At this time we wish to emphasize only one feature, the channel through which the mystery comes to us. It is the evangel Paul had preached. Any argument which does away with Paul's previous evangel on the score that it was not "hidden in God," is only a denial of the mystery itself. The only part of the mystery which was secret is found in the thrice repeated "joint." The nations had an allotment before, they were in the body of Christ before, they had been partakers before. Paul's evangel, as set forth in his previous preparatory epistles, is the channel through which we receive the blessings of this secret administration. A. E. Knoch

JUSTIFIED OUT OF CHRIST'S FAITH

We are believing on God Who rouses Jesus our Lord from among the dead ones—Jesus our Lord Who is given up because of our offenses, and is roused because of our justifying (Rom.4:24,25).

Justified, then, out of His faith, we may be having peace toward ˙God, through our ˙Lord, Jesus Christ (Rom.5:1).

The revised CV of Romans 5:1 as presented above inserts a lightface "His" before faith. Two other changes from the CLNT, the use of the simple passive "Justified" rather than "Being justified," and the more direct "out" rather than "by" with a superior "o" call for explanation, but the insertion of "His," indicating that our Lord's faith is in view rather than the believer's faith needs special attention.

The usual (and mostly unchallenged) understanding is that Paul refers to the faith of those who are believing God's evangel concerning the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ as in 4:24. However, the more attentive listener to Romans 4:24,25 will see this resurrection as God's rousing of our Lord, and even a few will discern that this rousing is because of our justifying which occurs in God's giving up of Jesus our Lord to death. Furthermore, in God's grace, some will be enabled to go so far in joy and peace to take God's giving up of His Son to death as the manifestation of God's righteousness in the justification of all sinners, and this by means of Christ's faith and obedience to the death of the cross (Rom.3:21-24; Phil.2:6-8), and not by means of our faith. Hence it is seen that God's righteousness is displayed in His giving up of Jesus our Lord to the curse of being hung up on a "tree" as a criminal (Gal.3:13). The giving up of His Son to death is for the display of God's righteousness in justifying each and every human sinner—and this (we note again) is by means of (fully sourced in) Jesus's faith!

If we have gone this far in following what Paul is saying as Jesus Christ's slave and a called apostle, who is severed for this evangel of God—if we see what God's rousing of His Son from among the billions who are still dead signifies and guarantees, that is, a completed justification of all and all the wrongs we do and evils we suffer—if we see that this victory in the death of Christ is victory over death and sin which is achieved by means of Jesus Christ's faith (and faithfulness to that faith)—then is it possible for us not to take our apostle as speaking of our faith in the opening line of Romans 5? It does not seem possible. For how much peace toward God can we have if our justification rests on our faith?

Paul speaks here of justification, of righteousification, not of being accounted righteous, but (in view of what happened on Golgotha and in anticipation of its full and certain application and realization in the future) of being constituted righteous, and that is by means of God's giving up of His Son to the suffering and death of the cross. Our faith is the believing of Christ's faith. We must ever be wary of putting ourselves in places where the scripture speaks of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

WHY DEATH?

Death is not life. It is the very opposite. Death is not life, but rather separation from life. (We can be sinners in our thoughts and understanding as well as our acts.) The fact that Christ is given up to death is primary and critical to our appreciation of God's evangel. In that nearly two thousand years ago, Christ dies (as an act of love) all die (proleptically) in that death (2 Cor.5:14).

But Christ Himself (now roused from among the dead) is no longer dying (Rom.6:9). His emptying of Himself and coming in the likeness of human flesh, able to die, and then actually dying (actually failing to stay alive, actually being made a Sin Offering which is called simply "Sin") that is in the past. That condition no longer exists, nor can it exist again. What Christ became is annihilated. But that is not all that is now true. All that Christ suffered and all that He endured in expectation and in love, and in faith in His God and Father, is justified. The Sin of it all is made righteous. It is righteousified by its results, for by its means death (and its sting of sin, 1 Cor.15:55) are doomed to extinction, and all will perceive and rejoice in the righteousness of God (along with His wisdom, power and love).

But as for the present we who are endowed with some measure of faith in believing some measure (the more we are given, the better) of the truth of Christ's death and significance of His resurrection may be enjoying peace toward God.

THE FACT AND ITS ORIGIN

The faith that secures justification has been carried out without shrinking (cf Heb.10:38) and without any tinge of doubt (cf Rom.4:20). This occurred nearly two thousand years ago. Its glorious results, however, have not been delivered (Eph.1:14) except as they vibrate in spirit (cf Gen.1:2) in those who are believing this evangel of the manifestation of God's righteousness in the vindication of all that He does and the justifying of all He creates in and through the Son (cf Co.1:16-20).

Thus now Paul speaks of justification as a settled fact, using an aorist passive participle: justified. What Jesus Christ our Lord has procured is reckoned to us even now before it is delivered. It is not procured by our faith, but by His in being given up because of our offenses. It is because it rests on His faith and not ours that we may be having peace toward God.

The means is expressed here by the preposition out. Justification is procured out of faith—that is, originating out of God's Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord's faith. This was promised before (cf Rom.1:2) through God's prophet Habakkuk in words which even he did not seem to understand: "Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living." (Hab. 2:4, as cited in Rom.1:17, Gal.3:11 and Heb.10:38).

The source of the revelations of God's righteousness in the justification of sinners is the faith of the Righteous One.

Again this has been brought before us in Romans 3:26 where Paul speaks of the display of God's righteousness in the current era, "For Him to be righteous and a Justifier of the human out of Jesus's faith."

THE CHANNEL OF JUSTIFICATION AND PEACE

As previously noted, Paul uses the preposition "through" instead of "out" in many places to relate justification and other aspects of salvation to the faith of Christ. Heading these passages is Romans 3:21-24 where we read: "Yet now God's righteousness has been made manifest through Jesus Christ's faith for all . . . For all sin and are wanting of the glory of God, being justified gratuitously in His grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus" (cf Gal. 2:16). So also the phrase "through" our Lord Jesus Christ" in Romans 5:1 which parallels "out of [His] faith," directs our minds and hearts to the faith of our Lord in being given up and dying for our sake. This is the channel of the enjoyment of peace toward God as it is the source and channel of justification—not our faith, but His faith in dying for our sakes, which is the evangel Paul brings here for our faith and peace. UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, THIRD QUARTER 2024
BEING THE THIRD NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED FIFTEEN

EDITORIAL

In his opening "Meditation" on the third chapter of Ephesians A. E. Knoch observes that "we have two separate secrets in this chapter" (p.100). There is the "Secret of Christ," which was briefly introduced in the first chapter, that God purposes, in Christ, "to have an administration of the complement of the eras, to head up all in the Christ—both that in the heavens and that on the earth" (Eph.1:9,10). And then there is the "Ephesian Secret" which tells of a joint allotment of the chosen out of the nations with those out of Israel, in a joint body as joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus (Eph.3:6).

"The channel through which [this latter secret] comes to us is the evangel which Paul had previously dispensed (Eph.3:7). It does not superexceed or displace this evangel ["God's evangel" as presented in Romans], but includes it. Justification and conciliation are the portals to the higher grace" (p.102).

I would add the word "basis" to the word "portals." God's evangel as it is expounded in Romans is not only the door to the "transcendent riches of [God's] grace" (Eph.2:7), but is the foundation of the untraceable riches of Christ being expounded in great length in Ephesians. For unless the righteousness and love of God in not sparing His own Son, but giving Him up for us all is made manifest as settled and true, what Paul says about the two secrets in Ephesians 3 cannot be appreciated and enjoyed with full assurance in joy and peace. Hence we discern two graces in Ephesians 2:7,8, "the transcendent riches of [God's] grace," and the grace in which we are "having been saved through [Christ Jesus's] faith."

It was A. E. Knoch who first noted in Unsearchable Riches that there were "two faiths" in view in Romans 1:17 (vol.7, p.266). This has been my focus for many years, being continued here on pages 129-144. In Romans 5 we see the faith of Jesus Christ clearly in His death for us (not only believers, but all human beings). While we are still infirm and living in accord with the era that begins with Adam, and still sinners, He gives Himself to the death of the cross. And once we see that Romans 3:21-28 tells of Jesus Christ's faith manifesting God's righteousness for the good of all, we are brought into a growing realization of God's evangel of love already before the plain words of Romans 5:8. Yet also once we see that there are two "alls" in Romans 3:22, "for all [human beings], and on all who are believing," we can see how fully and joyfully Romans 3 stands in harmony with Romans 5 and with the secrets of Ephesians.

Such distinguishing between two applications of one word accords with the purpose of this magazine as stated in the opening words of the first issue in August 1909! "It is with a sense of deep gratitude to God that we send forth the first number of this Magazine in the interest of a rightly apportioned Word." Of course what was in view was a distinguishing between the application of whole sections of Scripture from each other. But this principle certainly is beneficial with regard to the application of words.

It is also of great importance and benefit with regard to distinguishing the application of such major themes as "choice" and "will" as applied to the human and God. We see this in James Coram's article, "Choice and Deity" (pages 120-128). Hence our brother concludes: "We do not need any help from myths about free will and contrary choice to give us an incentive to obey. Rather, we have the word of God which is operating in us who are believing (1 Thess.2:13)."

THE SECRET OF CHRIST AND THE DIMENSIONS OF HIS LOVE

PAUL is about to pray. He proposes to indite a petition for power to grasp the transcendent dimensions of the love of Christ (Eph.3:18,19). But he cannot proceed with his prayer until he has given, in breathless, hurried style, the ground on which his prayer is based. Twelve verses of the third chapter of Ephesians—from the second to the thirteenth inclusive—are a parenthetic prelude to the apostle's prayer. In them he gives a summary of the grace already set forth. This is, for us, one of the most vital and illuminating paragraphs in all the Word of God. It is a brief epitome of the Ephesian secret, and includes also a concise statement of the secret of Christ, which is the subject of our present meditation (Eph.3:3-5,8).

It is impossible to have a clear conception of the present secret administration without a special knowledge of the secret of Christ. This is why, before the apostle defines the subject which is on his heart, he inserts another parenthesis to acquaint us with this distinct, yet related mystery. The secret of Christ is in closest accord with the new revelation, but must never be confused with it. Perhaps nothing has done more to hinder the reception of present truth than the application of the phrase "as it is now revealed" (3:5) to the present grace, which was an absolute secret (3:2,9). How many have been on the verge of receiving the truth of the exclusiveness of Paul's ministry and then were turned aside by the little word "as," thinking it referred to the secret administration of the grace of God! Some of the best expositors have never been able to explain its apparent contradiction.

Let us first of all quote that part of this passage which presents the secret of Christ, so as to keep it distinct. In the third verse the apostle says that a secret is made known to him by revelation, (according as I write before, in brief, by which you who are reading are able to apprehend my understanding in the secret of the Christ, which, in other generations, is not made known to the sons of humanity as it is now revealed to His holy apostles and prophets). Here we have a number of facts which show that he is not referring to the main subject, the secret administration. It is according to it, hence distinct from it. It had been referred to briefly (1:9,10), while the Ephesian secret, as we have seen, had been set forth at length. The secret of Christ is concerned with Christ Himself, not with His people. It was made known to other generations after a fashion, though not as it is now revealed. It was evidently made known to all the apostles and prophets. The Ephesian secret came only through Paul.

Any one of these five points is sufficient to show that we have two separate secrets in this chapter. The harmony between them, expressed by the words "according as" is a proof of their distinctiveness, not their identity. The fact that the secret of Christ had been widened in scope so as to include the heavens as well as the earth, brings it into full accord with the present grace, in which blessing is celestial.

The greater part of the first two chapters of Ephesians is taken up with an elaboration of its secret which is summarized in chapter three, verse 6. In contrast with this the secret of Christ is briefly stated within the compass of two verses, as follows: ". . . making known to us the secret of His will (in accord with His delight, which He purposed in Him) to have an administration of the complement of the eras, to head up all in the Christ—both that in the heavens and that on the earth" 1:9,10). Two verses for the secret of Christ: two chapters for the Ephesian secret. Surely Paul did not write briefly of the secret administration, but he did give a most succinct account of the secret of Christ (. . . to head up all in the Christ).

This secret, so briefly set forth, is concerned with the headship of Christ, not with the blessings of His saints. Among the celestials we will be associated with Him in His administrations. But on earth we have no such place. He alone is Head, yea, He is Head over us also. The secret administration raises us to a place of equality with an election out of the Circumcision. But this secret raises Christ to a place above all others. It is not the secret of the body of Christ, but of our Lord Himself.

Long before there was any body of Christ God began to give glimpses of Messiah's headship over the earth. From the first promise of One Who was to bruise the serpent's head to the glorious visions of the prophets who foresaw the dominion of the King of kings, there was a continued advance in the revelation of this secret. From the mists of early intimations emerges God's promised Messiah, Adam's greater Son, and David's Lord, Who will resume the reins laid down by the father of the race and forfeited by Israel's kings. So was this secret made known to earlier generations. Now God has added the heavens to His realm, and has revealed Christ's heavenly headship to His apostles and prophets, especially to Paul.

Paul is not the exclusive recipient of the celestial side of Messiah's headship. Our Lord did not hide His heavenly character from His earthly disciples. He called them to Olivet to witness His ascension. The Circumcision are informed that He sat down at the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens (Heb.1:3), and that messengers and authorities and powers were made subject to Him (1 Peter 3:22). Paul does not claim a monopoly of this knowledge or its dispensation. On the contrary, he is careful to inform us that it was made known to apostles and prophets, of which he was only one.

Following his brief allusion to the secret of Christ, the apostle gives us that short summary of the present secret administration to which we have so often appealed in seeking to clarify our thoughts on the subject. As this has been so fully treated in a previous article[1] we will do little more than quote it again, merely to emphasize the fact that it is not the secret of the preceding parenthesis. Condensing the unfoldings of the preceding chapters into one terse statement, it all comes to this, that, in spirit, the nations are to be joint enjoyers of an allotment, and a joint body, and joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which Paul became the dispenser (cf 3:6,7).

Contrast this with the secret of Christ. The point of the Ephesian secret lies in the word joint. Blessing for the nations has always been in view, even in choosing Israel to be its channel. But blessing apart from Israel, on an equality with the members of the chosen nation, was absolutely unknown and unknowable. No prophet ever hints at such a possibility. No apostle suggests it. It was not made known to apostles and prophets in any manner. Even Paul's previous ministry to the nations did not give the Gentiles this rank. Hence the Ephesian secret was absolute, not relative. It is made known only through Paul.

The channel through which it comes to us is the evangel which Paul had previously dispensed (cf 3:7). It does not supersede or displace this evangel, but includes it. Justification and conciliation are the portals to this higher grace. It is for those only who were made righteous and are reconciled. Paul was called and separated in order to prepare a people for the reception of this secret, when the time should come for its revelation. It could not be received by any except those who had been made ready for it by means of the truth which had come through the apostle of the nations.

Paul calls himself less than the least of all saints (3:8). Let us not reduce this to a mere rhetorical gesture. His active opposition to Christ made him the most undeserving of favor. He brings it in that he may have a suitable background for the grace that he received. No one will dispute that he became the greatest of all, as measured by the favor bestowed upon him. He receives two gratuities which have no parallel in the annals of God's saints. He is to make known the untraceable riches of Christ to the nations. He is to enlighten all as to this secret administration of the grace of God (3:2,8,9).

THE UNTRACEABLE RICHES

The untraceable riches of Christ refer to His celestial headship. His traceable riches are those recorded in the writings of the prophets, concerning the rule of the earth. No trace is found in these of His reign in the heavens. These riches are not "unsearchable" in an absolute sense. They can be traced now. But they were kept secret until God should reveal His plans for the celestials, and make known the universal scope of His purpose. Other apostles made this known to the Jews. Paul was honored with the commission to make it known to the Gentiles. This he has done for us in the first chapter of this epistle (1:10-11).

THE SECRET ADMINISTRATION

Paul's statement of his stewardship of the Ephesian secret is weighty with precious truth. He is to enlighten all as to what is the administration of the secret, which has been concealed from the eons in God . . . (3:9). Where these words are heard and heeded, they revolutionize the life and understanding of the believer. Because they are practically deleted from the bible of christendom, it has gone astray and is lost in a confusing maze of doctrines. The great bulk of religionists are seeking to follow Peter into the Kingdom, or John into his earthly allotment. How few have heeded this plain intimation that Paul alone can give the light which illumines present truth!

Let us note each weighty word. Paul is to enlighten. The converse of this must be true, so that all who do not know Paul as the means of their illumination are in darkness as to this administration of the grace of God. Does not this account for the dense ignorance which is so prevalent that few are even conscious of its black obscurity? We speak much of enlightenment, but, judged by this standard, we are living in dark ages indeed. Only those are truly enlightened who recognize Paul as the channel of present truth and dwell in the light he has shed upon God's present operations.

He is to enlighten all. Paul does not make known the secret of Christ to all. There he is limited to the nations, for the Jews receive that secret through their own apostles. But the present secret administration is his exclusive revelation. No other apostle made it known, unless he had first received it through the apostle of the Gentiles. This is confirmed by the fact that it is entirely absent from the Scriptures except in Paul's epistles written at or after the time of this declaration. Those who will not be enlightened by Paul will not be enlightened at all!

We cannot overstress the word secret. This is the only administration which is so named. God has made known at least three administrations beyond the present, with varying degrees of detail. The era of His indignation, which follows this, was never hid from humanity. The blessings which follow in the day of the Lord were often the subject of prophetic unfoldings. Even the succeeding day of God was dimly foreseen. Not so with the present secret administration of the grace of God. It was not merely unknown but unknowable. It was positively withheld.

It is an administration or economy. This is the same word as stewardship, when applied to household affairs. It is often called a "dispensation" in current theological language. This is another aspect of it. When speaking of God's gifts we should call this a dispensation of grace. But if we refer to the peculiar characteristics which distinguish it from other administrations it is best to follow the dictation of inspiration and call it a secret economy or administration, because the internal arrangement of affairs and the object of its operations are not at all such as are predicated in previous scriptures.

Let us note the tautological emphasis in the words secret and concealed in 3:9. For the sense, the word secret is quite unnecessary. Read it without this word. It adds nothing to the meaning. In view of the fact that almost all saints and scholars fail to get any meaning out of either, or both, we admire the foresight which presses the thought on our attention. It is precisely this point which has eluded almost all expositors, and this it is which is practically denied by almost all theologies. They persist in introducing truth from other administrations, which, by such misplacement, becomes malignant error.

This important point is further enforced by telling us where it is hidden and from whom it is concealed. It is popularly supposed that it is contained in the Old Testament, much as a puzzle picture contains hidden characters. There are supposed to be types and shadows of this era throughout the ancient scrolls and almost all of the blessings promised to Israel are said to be diverted to us. But this is all false. The secret was not concealed in the Scriptures, but in God. It was concealed from the eons, not revealed to them. It seems impossible to imagine a more emphatic statement to the effect that the present administration of the grace of God was an absolute secret.

The secret of Christ, His universal headship, is the purpose of the eons which God makes in Christ Jesus our Lord (Eph.3:11, 1:9,10). Our call is in accord with this purpose (Rom.8:28). God is operating the universe in line with this purpose. The present secret administration is in harmony with it, especially its celestial side. Hence we read that God, Who creates the universe, is now making known His multifarious wisdom to the sovereignties and authorities among the celestials, through the ecclesia of this administration (Eph.3:10). The purpose includes the revelation of God's attributes to all creation.

There are few considerations more delightful than a realization of God's need of us to make Himself known. He not only reveals Himself to us, but through us. When we see this, our salvation ceases to be a selfish concern of our own. Our assurance of "safety, certainty and satisfaction" becomes anchored in God's purpose, which is essential to His glory and that of all His creatures, as well as the basis of our blessing. It is blessed to give rather than to get. Few of His saints realize that, even now, we are teaching celestial beings the lesson of God's wisdom which few of us understand ourselves!

Apart from a mature apprehension of the two secrets which have been set forth, no one can have more than a vague and unsatisfactory idea of the wisdom which is involved in God's present workGD. He Himself describes it as "multifarious" (3:10), because of its variety. It copes with problems which had never arisen before, which seemed insoluble and unforeseen. The most difficult of all dilemmas was the apostasy of Israel, as seen in Acts. They were the only channel of blessing. God could not give their place to the Gentiles, as the church foolishly has taught, for His Word cannot be broken by their faithlessness. There seems to be no means or place of blessing for the Gentiles who had turned to God. Then it is that He throws back the curtain and reveals the fact that all was anticipated and provided for before the eons commenced their course. Then also He opens His hidden heavenly purpose and reveals the celestial destiny of Christ's body. What seemed to be an insurmountable problem was transformed into a carefully prepared program. Humanly speaking, Israel's continued rejection of Yahweh, and of the incarnate Christ, and of the testimony of God's spirit, utterly wrecked His revealed plan of blessing, not only for them, but for the other nations also. From the viewpoint of the divine wisdom all of this was a part of His intention, and prepared the scene for the present grace. Indeed, such depths and heights of grace as we now know would be impossible to reveal apart from the very failure which seemed to deny it any place.

At present this display of multifarious wisdom seems largely wasted on the saints. Sad as it may seem, the impression appears to prevail among them that God's wisdom has failed Him, that He sorely needs our help to save a few from the wreck of His universe, and that our chief concern should be to aid Him in recovering from the dilemma into which His enemies have brought Him. They do not understand the variety of wisdom that uses temporary evil to produce permanent good. They do not realize that Israel's opposition was necessary to afford a foil for the transcendent grace which has come to us. They are not aware that the heavenly hosts are learning of God's limitless resources of wisdom through us.

The present practical result of this insight into God's wisdom is to keep us from despondency in the midst of affliction and adversity. Throughout this administration the forces of evil have been uppermost. Paul himself was a prisoner because of Christ. All Asia turned from him before he died (2 Tim.1:15). The world has always been against the church. And now the church itself has admitted so much of the world that God is being forced out. Matters have gone from bad to worse in this administration. Is this failure? Or is it another exhibition of God's wisdom working out His will through the opposition and apostasy of His creatures? Let us not despond. There is not a single loose thread in God's design. All, evil as well as good, will work out His glory and our good.

Let us remember that these transcendent truths come to us through a prisoner. Paul emphasizes his character at this supreme crisis of his life. Human wisdom would have made him higher and more powerful than the pope of Rome has ever been. Is not that the way to impress men with the message he bears from the high court of heaven? Give him his liberty. Give him means. Give him influence with the imperial power. That is the way we would have managed the matter. That is the way men are doing today. But no! The circumstances of the new messenger must harmonize with his message. Mankind is at enmity with God. He is at peace with them. What can picture this so well as the imprisonment of His ambassador? The great truth of the conciliation, as set forth in the fifth of Romans, remains the substream of the present grace.

God is revealing His wisdom now, and by its means His weakness is stronger than the might of men. The prisoner Paul, by writing a single letter, accomplishes more for God than anyone of the great theologians after him. God is working through weakness now in order to display the wonder of His wisdom. Afflictions like Paul's are our glory. Bonds like his should cause us to exult, as it makes the celestials marvel. It was no mistake. It was no mishap. It was God's deliberate design, to show His power in human infirmity and His mastery of human might.

A. E. Knoch

LOVE TRANSCENDENT

PAUL, after he had set forth the three sections of the secret (Eph.1:3-2:22) began a prayer for the appreciation of the fathomless favors which he had revealed, but broke off at its very commencement to give a summary of this grace, which is now shown to the nations, He says, "On this behalf, I Paul, the prisoner of Christ Jesus for you, the nations—" (Eph.3:1) and then introduces the parenthetical digression which we have just been considering. He would have them clear as to the two secrets, the secret of Christ and the Ephesian secret. Otherwise his proposed prayer would be impractical. This knowledge is essential to its fulfillment. Let no one read the prayer, or its exposition, without first drinking the preceding cup of blessings to its dregs. Paul would not have interposed this parenthesis unless it was vital to his petition. Now, however, he resumes, "—On this behalf am I bowing my knees to the Father . . ." (Eph.3:14).

There is a practical lesson to be learned from this parenthetical procedure. A prayer of such intensity as the apostle's would not easily be diverted into an exposition. If another had interrupted him, it would have seemed most offensive. There must be a very powerful reason why we must have knowledge before strength. We must understand and grasp God's grace before we can realize His love. It is useless to expatiate in glowing but abstract terms on the transcendent love of God. We need to see that love in exercise. We must view its activities. We must marvel at its achievements. We must wonder at its wisdom. Its scope must astonish us. Its riches must ravish us. If a celestial messenger were to fly in mid heaven with the proclamation "God is love," it might reach their ears, but it would find no harbor in men's hearts.

Paul's parenthetic interlude in the third of Ephesians is the divine summary of present truth. It is the key to the correct understanding of God's present activities. All the wisdom of the world is not worth it. Much of God's Word cannot be comprehended without it. No other portion of the Scriptures has as much vital value to the believer of this era. Let us, then, give it the place in our hearts and thoughts that it deserves. May it prove as enlightening to every reader of these lines as it is to the writer! May it be the open sesame to the wealth and glory and love which God has in store for all who love Him during this day of Christ's rejection by Israel and the world.

In our preaching, let us not urge men to believe without giving them a message for their faith. The evangel does not consist in the exhortation to believe. Its substance may be indicated by the simple phrase "Believe God!" But the evangel itself consists of God's words concerning Christ. It would be well if many of our prayers that sinners be conciliated to God were interrupted, as Paul's was, in order to explain God's attitude and the basis of our exhortation. So also, in ministering to saints. Love cannot be pumped out of a dry well. First prime the pump with the overflow of God's love, before seeking a response in the hearts of His saints. This meditation is utterly dependent, therefore, on those which have preceded it. It has little force for those who have not grasped the gracious glories which God has granted to the nations in the present secret administration.

Once before Paul had indited a prayer on our behalf.The burden of that petition was that we should receive a spirit, a spirit of wisdom and revelation, in order that we may perceive the threefold secret (Eph.1:15-19). Now his petition is for spiritual power to realize the love that underlies the new revelation (Eph.3:14-22). What a contrast with the approved prayers of today! We pray for power, but it is for service. Our god is a little deity who needs our help, not a great God Who wishes our heads and our hearts. Let us not decry diligence in doing His will, but let us never forget the better part chosen by Mary, and the fact that she, though condemned by her sister, was commended by her Lord. And who shall say that Mary did not devote as much strength to her lessons as Martha did to her household duties? Did we devote one tenth as much energy to delving into the depths of revelation as we do into the duties of a livelihood, how great would be our appreciation of God's grace!

It is customary to name those derived from a common stock after the father from whom they sprang. So we find the sons of Israel divided into twelve tribes according to the patriarchs. They are known by the name of their ancestors. In the world of spirit there is but one Father, and all who are His, own Him as such. They may be many families in the flesh, but in spirit they are one. Israel, on earth, will receive her bounties from the same Hand as the saints among the celestials.

STAUNCH WITH POWER, THROUGH HIS SPIRIT, IN THE MAN WITHIN

The previous prayer was to God: this is to the Father. We rightly connect power with God, and affection with the Father. Why, then, do we pray the Father for power in this passage? Because the greatest display of power is not connected with God as Creator, or with the reconciliation of the sinner, or even with great supernatural manifestations. Far more is needed to give the saints a grasp of the love which underlies this latest overflow of God's affection, as manifested in the Ephesian secret. If the reader of these lines has been enabled to apprehend the truth of the epistle to this point and goes on to lay hold on the love which it reveals, he may rest assured that it is the fruit of a spiritual force far beyond any other in this administration of God's grace.

On all sides saints are seeking power—power for service, power for miracles, power for healing, power for everything except the one thing essential: power to entertain and respond to the truth of the Ephesian secret. It is this response for which the apostle is bowing his knees. And why should not the supremest display of God's grace and wisdom lead us into the greatest grasp of His affection? How else could this be revealed? Yet even after we are graced with the spirit of wisdom and revelation in order to fit our minds to apprehend God's secret grace, we may still be unable to fathom the love from which all springs, and for which all operates.

God's glory is the universal goal. From the tiniest insect in its aimless seeming way, to the most sovereign sun star in its parabolic path, all have one common aim, one pure purpose to perform. Men may deem the one a foolish, fruitless wandering; they cannot see the star's objective; but God has harnessed both to His chariot of glory. The earth is His most fruitful field. Mankind is the creature fittest to display His varied excellence. To trace God's footsteps in the earth—that is the true history of humanity. And such a narrative will yet transform this darkling world into the brightest of the heavenly luminaries, whose effulgent rays will reach the utmost borders of the universe, and radiate the deepest recesses of God's love.

God's goal is not gained until He receives the heartfelt adoration of all His creatures. Great as are His efforts on our behalf, they are but the means to make Him known. Ephesians does not find its climax in the secret itself, but in a prayer for its appreciation. A knowledge of the secret is not sufficient or satisfactory to God unless it includes a heart-hungry occupation and enjoyment of the surpassing love of Christ. Even before the secret was made known the apostle could say, "If I should be perceiving all secrets . . . yet have no love, I am nothing" (1 Cor.13:2). Nothing has any vital value unless it leads to love. It is the glory of God's wisdom that all things in the universe, including sin and hate, shall be lured into the livery of love.

At present most of God's creatures are out of harmony with Him. He is either unknown, ignored, or defied. The ideal relationship with God is well expressed by the word "complement." His creatures should combine with Him to make one harmonious whole. All that is in Him should find a response in them. There should be such mutual reciprocation in every relationship of life as will be most delightful to both. He is the Creator and we should take our place as His creatures. He is the Father, we His beloved sons. He the Reconciler, we the reconciled. He the Deliverer, we the delivered. But more than this, we are accorded a place with Christ in His work of revealing Him to the celestial hosts. It is only as we ourselves are filled with His affection that it can overflow to others.

HIS GLORIOUS RICHES

No epistle in the Scriptures is so full of harmonies as Ephesians. There is a continual assurance that each phase of our blessing is in accord with all the rest. Our sonship suits the delight of His will (1:5). The "forgiveness" of our offenses is raised on the scale to harmonize with the riches of His grace (1:7). The secret of His will is consonant with His delight (1:9). Our predestination is in unison with His purpose (1:11). Paul's dispensation agrees with God's grace which, in its turn is attuned to His powerful operation (3:7). The insight of the celestials is in line with the purpose of the eons (3:11). So, now, power is desired such as will harmonize with His glorious riches (3:16).

Paul prays for a power which will accord with the wealth of glory which has become ours through this new revelation.

God's riches are glorious. In these last days riches have increased. There are many men of vast wealth, and fortunes have been amassed which are amazing. Much of our unrighteousness and crime is connected with money. It occasions far more misery than it alleviates. In general, riches are a menace to society. Yet all will acknowledge that wealth has power. It is fast becoming the paramount force in human affairs. It overrides social prestige and political influence. What could we not accomplish with an unlimited command of means! Yet one thing cannot be bought by all the wealth of all the world. That is love. God's wealth alone has the moral glory that influences the affections.

Outwardly we may be as weak as Timothy, with his frequent infirmities. We may be clothed in rags and live in the meanest of shelters. There may be nothing to indicate that we are rolling in the real riches. This wealth is not for the outer man at present. It is spiritual, and for the spirit. It is for the man within. Men behold the external appearance, God looks on the heart. Through His spirit our hearts become the habitation of Christ. This is the ground of our strength. The meanest human heart, indwelt by Christ, has a glory that surpasses the temple of Solomon. All its moral values are living in him.

GROUNDED IN LOVE

Our vitality and stability depend upon the apprehension of God's love. As a plant seeks its sustenance and strength in the soil, so we should search for our sustentation and support in the subsoil of all of God's activities, the fact of His affection. We can flourish in no other ground. Here alone can our roots find nurture and our trunk find strength. Both of these are necessary for fruit. The most beautiful tree in all my garden fell to the ground. It had ample roots, but was not well grounded. It could not withstand the winds of adversity. How many of us have failed to fasten firmly on the love transcendent? Only in this can we stand and bring forth fruit for God's delectation. Nothing else will delight Him. No substitute should satisfy us. Hence, let us pray this prayer for ourselves. Let us make it a petition for all saints. Only thus can we grasp these immeasurable measurements.

THE TRANSCENDENT DIMENSIONS OF THE LOVE OF CHRIST

The transcendent love of Christ and the dimensions of the secret are usually merged into one. However, let us remember that the apostle has interrupted his prayer to explain the secret, and this is the subject on his heart as he proceeds. He expatiates on the vastness of its scope in order to make this a stepping-stone to that which lies beyond. No one can grasp the transcendent dimensions of the love of Christ without an amazed wonder at the moral breadth and length and depth and height involved in this, God's latest and highest revelation.

THE BREADTH

A characteristic feature of the tabernacle in the wilderness was the width of the gate which led into the court. It indicated something of the breadth of the evangel in the era which it typified. Though Israelites could enter, yet all aliens were shut out. So with the proclamation in the early part of Acts. They spoke to the Jews only. Gentiles could not enter without becoming proselytes of Judaism. Now, the evangel is for all. In effect, the gate of the tabernacle is only a hindrance, for the whole wall surrounding the tabernacle is now taken down. Access to God is unhindered. The evangel could be no broader. Corresponding to this, the central wall of the temple has been abolished. In this aspect the present grace is unlimited in breadth.

Not only is the secret evangel all inclusive now, but the future service of the saints is all embracing. Israel will broaden out to evangelize the whole earth in the day of her glory. When we enter our proper allotment, we will reach out to the utmost bounds of the universe. Our parish will include all of the celestial hosts. Tell me the breadth of the universe and I will give you one of the dimensions of this secret. The physical measure is an index of its moral extent. It is an indication of the vastness of Christ's love.

THE LENGTH

In space, we can hardly make a distinction between its length and breadth, for both are beyond our grasp. Perhaps we should think of time, when meditating on its length. It goes back before the eons, long before the entrance of sin. It preceded the disruption in God's purpose. It is the earliest intimation of God's love for His creatures. We were not an afterthought with God. Let us revel in the realization that He thought of us long before He took up His earthly people Israel. His care for us is not due to the rebound arising from Israel's rejection of His favor. We are His first love, the earliest to call forth His affection.

THE DEPTH

The Ephesian secret not only has the greatest sweep of any of God's administrations, but it digs down into the very dregs of human depravity and soars to the highest heavens. Israel had promises and privileges which raised them above the balance of mankind. The Gentiles were below them, far from God, sunk in sin, ignorant and alienated, deserving only death. The grace of God reaches down into the deepest depths of degradation for the trophies of its triumph.

Never in the story of this somber scene, had come a time so dark and dismal as the days that followed Paul's final visit to Jerusalem and his imprisonment in Rome. The Jews will not have Messiah. Neither will they allow the other nations any place. Paul is a prisoner. Every avenue of blessing seems effectually choked. Everything is ripe for judgment. So it seemed. Then, with a spiritual convulsion as great as the material cataclysm which ends Yahweh's day, a place is prepared for a new creation. God creates a new, a spiritual sphere, unheard of and unknown. He reveals this present secret administration, which fills the hosts of heaven with admiring wonder and the hearts of His hallowed with impassioned praise.

THE HEIGHT

Israel will have the highest place on earth. We will have the supreme position in the heavens. What can be higher than that? No celestial creature will be above us. All will be beneath. Had we been raised to a place of blessing under Israel, as will be the portion of the nations in the coming eon, that would have been an undeserved and undreamed exaltation. Had we been put upon a par with them, that would have been an almost unthinkable elevation. To be the humblest in heaven, how far beyond our highest hopes! To be equal to celestials would seem the limit of human anticipation. Truly, it never has entered into the human heart what God has for those who love Him! Highest of the high, we shall be above all the heavenly host.

TRANSCENDENT LOVE

All of these dimensions are love tokens. Each adds to our assurance and appreciation of His affection. Each is a step which raises us to the temple of Christ's love. We cannot now measure these dimensions. We have no means to calculate their immensity. They are beyond our powers. So is the love to which they lead. It is like the universe itself, which seems to expand as it is explored. The most powerful telescope, with photographic plates that picture millions of stars that human eyes have never seen, cannot find the boundary of God's material world. Its transcendent size is a parable of the immensity of the love that conceived it, which is embodied in His Christ, and which has been revealed in the moral dimensions of the Ephesian secret.

THE EONS OF THE EONS

The coming eon is particularly concerned with God's glory in Israel. It includes the day of Yahweh. The succeeding eon approximates our present status. It will be the day of God. Then God's glory will be publicly displayed in accord with the present spiritual manifestation.

Israel's spiritual supremacy will be past in that concluding eon. Now it is only eclipsed temporarily. Then God will tabernacle with mankind, as such. No temple, no priesthood will bar their approach to Him. It is serenely satisfactory to see that the only occurrence of this phrase, "the eon of the eons," occurs in Ephesians, for this epistle sets forth spiritual blessings for the nations which parallel those of that day. It is true that the Son still rules, and the saints still reign, but their authority will be near its vanishing point for lack of opposition. Those who are near God need few restraints.

But that eon will not only witness the nearness of the nations on the earth. It will be the scene of celestial splendors among the star strewn empyrean. God will be glorified on earth beyond all previous administrations. But His greatest glory will shine forth through the celestial saints, the ecclesia which is Christ's body. Having learned the lesson of Christ's transcendent love, it will be their lot to publish it abroad among the heavenly hosts, from the north star to the Southern Cross. Then we shall have the greatest privilege which can be accorded to any person.

We shall bring glory to God and good to His creatures. Vessels of grace are we, not only to have and to hold, but to give and to gratify. Our bliss will not be based on ourselves, but in blessing God and benefitting His handiwork.

This is the keynote, on which our happiness began. Our salvation, our justification, our reconciliation, our glorification are merely the means of glorifying God. This thought, once it enters into our heart, will give us rest and relief from ourselves, and serene surcease from dread of the future. Our personal destiny is so pitifully unimportant in this great universe, when viewed by itself. But when it is seen to be a part of God's own glory, it ceases to be insignificant. It is no longer inconsequent. It must be safe and sure. It cannot fail or fall. It is not the reward of our merits, for we have none. It is reared on our demerits, of which we have no lack. Let us but see that we are the instruments for revealing God's grace, and essential to His goal, and we have the best basis of eonian bliss which man has ever imagined.

Hence we too are bowing our knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that Christ may dwell in our hearts through faith, and that we, having been rooted and grounded in love, should be strong to grasp the breadth and length and height—so as to know the transcendent dimensions of the love of Christ.

THROUGH FAITH OF JESUS CHRIST

The third of Romans, especially the paragraph from verses 21 to 28, is of the highest importance to the understanding of justification. It is for (into) all and on all who are believing through faith of Jesus Christ . . . .

"Jesus" is our Lord's personal Name, so it is difficult to understand anything else than the personal faith of the Man of Sorrows when we read of the "faith of Jesus." Hence it is difficult to see why almost all translators simply change it to in. A. E. Knoch

CHOICE AND DEITY

FREE WILL is a hallmark of orthodoxy. It is believed not only that it is true, but that it is essential, upright and noble. Many even claim that it is the chief capacity distinguishing man from beast. Consequently, its proponents often become filled with "righteous indignation" at the least suggestion of its untenability. They earnestly desire the concept to be true; and, that the scriptures might be fulfilled, it has long been certain that they will defer to their own desires, instead of the word of God (2 Tim. 3:1-8; 4:3,4). They seek to discover this idea in the Scriptures, and are confident that they have done so in many places. But their sedulous efforts are in vain, for, as with the Trinity, it is nowhere expressed, frequently disproved, and only falsely inferred.

Like every good thing, the great and foundational truth that all is out of, through and for God (Rom.11:36), can be abused. Its liberty can be misused by the foolish as an incentive to the flesh (cp Gal.5:13). Yet the wise must learn the truth on this theme so that they might make good use of it and be freed from the evil imposed upon them through its denial. God's truth is not only true; it is also vital and beneficial.

Even those believers whose consciences are generally sensitive as to the need for sound words, seem to have no compunction when it comes to the misuse of volitional terms. They regularly employ words such as "choice," "decision" or "responsibility," in quite the same sense as is common in the world. Much of this is the result of peer pressure and the influence of popular ethics.

Good and glorious as it is, like the teaching of eventual universal reconciliation, the teaching of God's deity seems both false and wicked to those who cannot receive it. And even if we should receive it, it may be that we will do so only faintheartedly, and so fail to "herald the word" concerning it or live our lives in accord with it. Yet if this should be the case, this too will be the wisdom of God.

THE NECESSITY OF ACTION

In light of Romans 11:36, I freely agree (in essence if not in semantics) with the renowned physicist Albert Einstein, who said, "I do not at all believe in human freedom in the [popular] philosophical sense. Everybody acts not only from external compulsion but also in accordance with inner necessity . . . . A man's actions are determined by necessity, external and internal, so that in God's eyes he cannot be responsible [i.e., able to act otherwise], any more than an inanimate object is responsible for the motion it undergoes . . . . [This realization] mercifully mitigates the easily paralyzing sense of responsibility [i.e., in the sense of contrary choice] and prevents us from taking ourselves and other people all too seriously; it is conducive to a view of life which, in particular, gives humor its due."[1]

"If men had not this false refuge of human responsibility, many more would be forced to reconsider the fiendish doctrines of human destiny which they hold. As it is, if their hearts are not utterly hard, they will not believe in the damnation of infants, and are led into many non-scriptural notions as to the age of accountability, the appointment of sponsors at baptism, confirmation, and what not, seeing that eternal torture or annihilation can never be justified in the case of those who are not fully answerable. If they could only see that God holds none responsible, they would find everlasting suffering or death utterly repugnant and impossible. 'Responsibility' is a twin heresy with eternal doom . . . ."[2]

MISUSE OF VOLITIONAL TERMS

At the outset, advocates of free will commandeer the word "choice" (and its synonyms) and boldly incorporate the thought of avoidability into the term itself, even though this is actually no part of the meaning of any volitional synonym. Instead it is merely what most believe to be true concerning human choice. This extremely common practice is completely unwarranted, and leads to much error. For a choice is simply that which is chosen or selected; man's opinion as to whether or not choices are avoidable forms no part of the meaning of the word itself and should not be forced into it.

It is most unwise to impose the idea of "avoidability" onto the word "choice," as if this somehow validated the concept of freewill choice. To do so is both linguistically incorrect and logically fallacious. It is also unfair, and exposes its own prejudice. Worse still, it is deceptive, for to those who are unable to think clearly, it seems to give much credence to the idea of free will.

Reading the idea of avoidability into the word choice is the equivalent of reading the word "flat" into the word "earth," or the word "endless" into the word "eons": (1) "The only earth fit to be called such is a flat one." (2) "The only number of eons worthy of the saint's life and the sinner's punishment is an infinite number." (3) "The only choice worthy of the name is an avoidable one."

The problem is only compounded by those who otherwise speak plainly, who may not fully realize that clarity of expression is needed on this theme as well. We are not at all suggesting any undue or gratuitous strictness, but only that we avoid being ambiguous or evasive. We must define our terms and speak clearly in order to be clearly understood, so as not to be sadly misunderstood.

2. A. E. Knoch, The Problem of Evil and the Judgments of God, p.234

Due to common misconception, one might well suppose that only the proponent of free will believes that men do whatever they want, according to their own choice or voluntarily. Yet these are our convictions as well, and are concepts which are fully in accord with our teaching. The fact that we act according to our own choice, and, had we chosen to do so, could have acted differently than we did, is not at issue and is acknowledged by all.

THE VAUNTED "POWER OF CONTRARY CHOICE"

No one can be what he is not, or, at present, act contrary to his present character. "How can Satan be casting out Satan?" (Luke 11:15). Even God cannot deny Himself (2 Tim.2:13). "From their fruits you shall be recognizing them. . . . A good tree can not bear noxious fruit, neither is a rotten tree producing ideal fruit" (Matt.7:16,18).

Due to influences from within and without, a man may well change in the next moment from what he is in the present moment, but in any certain moment his deeds are simply the outflowings of his heart (Prov.4:23b). They reflect what is presently choice to him; that is, they constitute his true preferences, however excellent, or awful, they may be.

Though we do what we want, according to our own choice, and therefore act voluntarily, we cannot always want what we want. That is, we cannot truly want, in a decisive sense, what we want, simply in an abstract sense, so long as there are other things that we want more, in a decisive sense, than we want the ideals for which we abstractly long. Even if, abstractly speaking, we love righteousness, often, decisively speaking, we prefer the "temporary enjoyment of sin" (Heb.11:25). This is the very message of Romans 7:15-23, as well as that of all perceptive personal observation. It is vital for us to be clear as to these two distinct senses in which the word "want" (or, "will") is used.

Of course what those who advocate "free will" actually mean to stand for by means of this expression is the notion that men have the power of contrary choice: Even though, in fact, we chose as we did, we could have chosen otherwise. That is, we could have done so at that time. It is not contended (nor is it disputed) that, hypothetically and by itself, we might have chosen otherwise. That is not the idea at all. Instead, it is claimed that, notwithstanding the fact that we did choose as we chose, we nonetheless could have chosen otherwise. This, and this alone, is the question to be resolved.

Due to our self-reliance, pride, impatience and anger, as well as our self-assured ethical notions about praise, blame and judgment, this idea of contrary choice is an extremely attractive one. Then there is the matter of our strong desire, whether acknowledged or not, for independent personal glory. Thus the wish becomes the father to the claim, and, consequently, the very foundation of human ethics.

Advocates of this position, which should be called, "the power of contrary choice," prefer to perpetuate it instead under the innocuous and advantageously ambiguous title "free will." At once, this gives it the advantage of a respectable-sounding name, and makes those few who are constrained to reject the actual doctrine appear as strange extremists, inasmuch as they reject such a well-accepted, desirable and seemingly reasonable concept.

The advocate of free will actually stands for the position which asserts that man's choices are uncaused—absolutely devoid of all necessity. And yet he does not realize, or at least he refuses to admit the fact, that the denial of causality will not bring him any closer to what he wants than its advocacy.

Essentially this matter is a simple one: It is impossible to prevent anything that is the product of a cause from coming into existence; and, it is also impossible to prevent anything that is not the product of a cause from coming into existence. If a truly uncaused event were ever to occur (were such a thing even possible), being the product of nothing, uninfluenced and uninfluenceable, it would simply "show up," appearing "out of nowhere." While it would not be brought in, neither could it be kept out.

Whether "determinism" (i.e., causality), divine or otherwise, is true or false, we cannot possibly be free either way—that is, in a freewill or contrary-choice sense. If we are caused to choose as we do, we cannot help choosing as we do. And, if we are not caused to choose as we do, we still cannot help choosing as we do.

"Surely we cannot be free agents, in the ordinary, strong, true-responsibility-entailing sense, if determinism is true and we and our actions are ultimately wholly determined by causes which existed anterior to our own personal existence. And surely we can no more be free if determinism is false and it is, ultimately, either wholly or partly a matter of chance or random outcome that we and our actions are as they are."[3]

Neither determined nor random will afford any place for free will. Neither determinedness nor randomness (nor any mixture of the two) can give or allow what is wanted, even though between these two the field of possibilities is exhausted. Therefore, contrary choice or "free will" not only does not exist but cannot exist.

OUR NEED OF ENLIGHTENMENT

Perhaps an illustration would be helpful. Whether an object falls to the ground because of the law of gravity or by sheer chance, in either case, it is not responsible for what it does. It could not help falling. The principle is the same concerning man's chosen deeds. For either they are caused to be as they are or they are not. Whether a man behaves as he does due to some cause or entirely apart from any cause at all, in any case, he is not responsible for (able to avoid) what he does.

3. Galen Strawson, FREEDOM AND BELIEF, p.25; London: Oxford University Press, 1986

Therefore, man is never responsible and cannot ever become responsible for any of his actions at any time. The recognition of this fact depends solely upon one's ability to think sensibly and fairly. It does not depend upon a personal conviction that the Scriptures are the Word of God, much less upon any judgment that our exegesis thereof is correct. Indeed, even if both of these were to be rejected, it would still remain true that man is not responsible and that free will is a foolish myth. Unless we have a secret fondness for myths (at least when it comes to this subject), we will be grateful to see them exposed and disproved.

Whether causality should be affirmed or denied, either way, free will is false. Thus we possess conclusive evidence that free will is not only a mistaken position, but is logically impossible, and consequently, inconceivable. The acceptance of this fact, however, requires not only intellectual honesty but genuine understanding.

This issue is far from complex, and where understanding is granted, is easy to comprehend. We cannot expect assurance, however, apart from understanding, for true assurance is impossible apart from genuine understanding. May we be growing into maturity (Col.1:28), "into all the riches of the assurance of understanding, unto a realization of the secret of the God and Father, of Christ, in Whom all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are concealed" (Col.2:2,3).

Otherwise, even where simple and sufficient evidence is given —perhaps we should say, especially where this is the case—it may not yet be recognized. While stubbornness is certainly a cause of the rejection of truth, so is a lack of understanding. It is the glory of God to conceal a matter (Prov.25:2), and, in His greatness, even as He is able to reveal the most complex things imaginable, He is also able to hide the simplest things conceivable.

Samuel Johnson had the perfect answer to the man who has not yet been convinced by sufficient proof: "Sir," he said, "I have found you an argument; but I am not obliged to find you an understanding."[4] If, however, in the case of the reader, the light is beginning to dawn, it is important that you act upon your newfound knowledge, thus being adjusted by it while rejoicing in it (cf 2 Cor.13:11). Indeed, since we are men, and, "men love the darkness rather than the light" (John 3:19), "be walking while you have the light, lest the darkness may be overtaking you" (John 12:35).

INVIGORATION BY GRACE

So many, inferring ability from duty, have claimed, "I ought, therefore I can." This simply does not follow, and it is not true. Others have cleverly said, "Though you cannot, Christ can, and He will if you will only let Him." If it were acknowledged that both any "letting" of our own and any action in us by our Lord were themselves entirely the work of God in His own time and way, we would gladly concur. As these are denied, we cannot do so. Apart from the truth of God's deity, any talk of "letting the Lord have His way," degenerates into ill-disguised religious self-help, for it gives the vital glory to man, upon whom all depends.

We are indeed entreated to put on the new humanity and to think and walk ideally in every way, according to the apostle Paul's wise counsel which he got from the Lord. This includes our implementation of the panoply of God. But what we are not entreated to do is to create those influences which will cause us to heed these very counsels. For this we have a God, and He will see to all our needs.

This simple point is of great significance—indeed it is revolutionary—and, as it begins to influence us more, it will remove much of our self-hatred for our failures while enabling us to obey. This is so, even though we will have to bear the proud attitudes of others who cannot understand, since they do not rely on God alone for victory but ultimately look to themselves.

Having the spirit of sonship, as those who are loving God and are fond of the Lord Jesus Christ, we long to be well pleasing. We already have a new disposition and a new walk. It is too late for us to do our part by attempting to work one up. We are invigorated in the Lord and in the might of His strength (Eph. 6:10). We are invigorated by the grace which is in Christ Jesus (2 Tim.2:1), and so do not need to have any confidence in the flesh (Phil.3:3).

In addition, we are aware that ideal acts are beneficial and that all that are otherwise are destructive, both at present and at the dais of Christ. So as Paul says, "we are ambitious . . . to be well pleasing to Him" (2 Cor.5:9). We do not reason, Since I cannot help it if I should sin, let sin be increasing. Rather, we say, Even though that is true, if we should sin, we shall suffer and God will be displeased.

We do not need any help from myths about free will and contrary choice to give us an incentive to obey. Rather, we have the word of God which is operating in us who are believing (1 Thess.2:13). Therefore, let us pursue righteousness, faith, love, and peace (2 Tim.2:22), recognizing our self-control and faithfulness for what they are, the fruit of the spirit, the spirit of our dear God and Father.

GOD'S RIGHTEOUS LOVE

IN COMING to Romans 5 as it is introduced in the closing references to God and Jesus our Lord at the end of chapter 4, we resume the focus on God's evangel concerning His Son which was there in 1:16,17 and 3:21-28. But now there will not be so much playing on words, for Paul speaks plainly and openly of the death of Christ. "For Christ, while we are still infirm, still in accord with the era, for the sake of the irreverent, dies . . . . God is commending this love of His to us, seeing that, while we are still sinners, Christ dies for our sakes" (Rom.5:6,8).

That is the bedrock of God's evangel concerning His Son. The Son of God dies. That is the bedrock of what we are believing. Jesus our Lord is given up (to death) because of our offenses (Rom.4:24,25). Christ dies for our sakes.

To be sure there is no evangel apart from God's rousing of His Son from among the dead. But He is roused because of our justifying which occurs in His death. "Now if Christ has not been roused, vain is [our] faith—[we] are still in [our] sins" (1 Cor.15:17). But it is His death which deals with our sins as sinners. "Judging this, that if one dies for the sake of all, consequently all die . . ." (2 Cor. 5:14). ". . . for one who dies has been justified from sin" (Rom.6:7). The death does the work, and the resurrection shouts the victory. "Where, Death, is your sting [of sin]?" (1 Cor.15:54,55).

Thus the evangel we have accepted is, first of all, "that Christ dies for our sins," and then to secure the fact that He really dies Paul adds "that He is entombed," and then he adds the joy-filled word "that He has been roused" (1 Cor.

15:3,4). Here as in Romans 5, it is the death of Christ that deals with our sins even as it does with the sinner and the whole problem of sin itself. Death and its sting of sin must die, but our death because of Adam does not bring this about. Only the death of the One in Whom we are created (Col.1:16) can do this.

Let us hear it again as summarized in Romans 5:8:

> 'God is commending 'this love of [sf]His [io]to us,
> Seeing that, while we 'are still sinners,
> Christ dies [ov]for our sakes.

Here there are three (God, His Son, and human beings) as in Romans 1;16,17 and 3:21-28. As God's righteousness is revealed (manifested and put on display) in the previous passages, so God's love is now commended to our attention. As the source and channel of this revelation is Jesus Christ's faith earlier, so also this is now explicitly made known as His death. And as we are previously seen as believers who along with everyone else are sinners, we are now still seen as sinners, and as soon to be repeated here we are sinners along with everyone else.

In the center of this there is God's Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, as He is sent in the likeness of sin's flesh (Rom.8:3), coming in the likeness of human beings (Phil.2:7). "For there is one God, and one Mediator of God and human beings, a Human, Christ Jesus" (1 Tim.2:5). The faith of Jesus Christ is His obedience in humiliation unto the death of the cross (Phil.2:8).

Through this faith unto death God's righteousness is made known and His love is commended. It is not His righteousness in His righteous judgment of the irreverent and unrighteous human (including the Jew), for in view of our acts, not one of us can be justified, not even one (Rom. 3:10-20), and we all would get what we deserve (Rom. 1:32). That would be the end of it all. No indeed God's righteousness now manifested is one in which Christ's death is the end of every sinner, (but not the person) and every sin of every sinner, even the death of the old humanity. This will be followed (in due time) by the vivifying (the making alive) of everyone in Christ (1 Cor.15:22).

In this way God's righteousness is a righteousness of love, and God's love is righteously expressed. God will have annihilated the old humanity and brought forth as a new humanity all who then will know God, having learned what God's righteousness, power, wisdom, glory and love are.

SIN ENTERS

In Romans 5:2 Paul adds the blessings of peace, and access to that of the joy of justification. Peace and access are the features of conciliation as Paul brings it out with clarity in verses 9-11. So with both justification and conciliation in view we come to Romans 5:12. This takes us back to Genesis 3 and leads us forward to God's evangel concerning His Son in terms that can hardly be mistranslated or misunderstood in verses 18 and 19.

But before that we come to verse 12 (which has been mistranslated and sadly misunderstood):

> 12 Therefore, even as through one human
> 'sin enters into the world,
> And through 'sin 'death,
> And thus 'death passes through into all human > beings,
> On the basis of which all sin—

This speaks of one human and his effect on all. This leads up to verses 18 and 19 which speak again of One and His effect on all. It has proved possible to mistranslate 5:12, but 5:18,19 can be translated (honestly) only as it is done in almost every version. The only way to make these two verses mean what they do not say is to introduce a problem that is not there or claim that Paul overstates the matter and does not really mean what he says.

18 Consequently, then, as it is through one offense
*iofor all human beings *iofor condemnation,
Thus also it is through one righteous response
*iofor all human beings *iofor life's justifying.
19 For even as through the disobedience of the one
human the many are constituted sinners,
Thus also through the obedience of the One
the many shall be lconstituted righteous.

There is no getting around it. The one offensive response of Adam to God's instruction is set in contrast to the one righteous response of Christ to God's will (cf Matt.26:39). In both cases what is done affects all human beings. The offense brings condemnation which stands in direct contrast to life's justifying which the righteous act of Christ in dying for the sake of sinners brings. The same pattern of contrasts affecting all human beings is repeated in verse 19. What comes about through the disobedience of the one human is that the many human beings are constituted sinners. What shall ultimately come about through the obedience of the other One, Jesus Christ, is that the same many human beings will be constituted righteous.

To say otherwise is not only to deny what is written here in God's Word, but to say that the obedience of Jesus Christ to the death of the cross was not enough for the justification of the sinner, for salvation from sin and death, for life of joy and peace, but requires something from us who are flawed even in our believing. But more than this, to say otherwise is to say that even we who are believing (to the extent than we may be blessed with a measure of the spiritual endowment of faith which God gives us) cannot be saved righteously.

Nevertheless many say otherwise than what Paul says in Romans 5:18,19 much to their loss at least in the present era of their lives. Perhaps this is best seen in the translation of Romans 3:21-26 in the New International Version (NIV)[1] and comments on Romans 5:18,19 based on that translation.

Clarity is a major goal of the NIV along with accuracy. This is certainly commendable. Its translation of Romans 5:18,19 is as follows:

> Consequently, just as the result of one trespass was condemnation for all men, so also the result of one act of righteousness was justification that brings life for all men. For just as through the disobedience of the one man the many were made sinners. so also through the obedience of the one man the many will be made righteous.

As far as accuracy is concerned some details in vocabulary and verb form might be improved (in my opinion), but Paul's thought comes through with clarity. Commenting on this NIV reading, Everett F. Harrison writes, "One trespass brought condemnation for all humanity and one act of righteousness brought justification for all."[2] Nevertheless as with many other commentators, Professor Harrison finds the clarity going too far, for he adds: "Does the sweeping language used ('the many' being all men) suggest that all mankind will be brought within the circle of justification, so that none whatever will be lost? Some have felt so. But if the doctrine of universalism were being taught here, Paul would be contradicting himself, for he has already pictured men as perishing because of sin (2:12; cf. 1 Cor.1:18). Furthermore, his entire presentation of salvation has emphasized the fact that justification is granted only on the basis of faith. We must conclude, therefore, that only as 'the many' are found in Christ can they qualify as belonging to the righteous" (p.65).

CONTRADICTIONS

Paul does not contradict himself. What he says in Romans 5:18,19 is not a suggestion but a declaration. The NIV clearly renders the Greek as a statement of truth: "the result of one act of righteousness was justification that brings life for all men . . . through the obedience of the one man the many will be made righteous." Professor Harrison takes this to say that "one act of righteousness brought justification for all." The translation and its explanation might be improved, but they are definitely worded as true statements, not suggestions. And there is not the slightest hint that some important qualification is left out. The words stand as they are.

However if Paul's "entire presentation of salvation has emphasized that justification is granted only on the basis of faith," and "faith" is understood as the believer's faith there is a contradiction. Romans 1:17 and 3:21,22 as rendered in the NIV as follows:

> For in the gospel a righteousness from God is revealed, a righteousness that is by faith from first to last, just as it is written: "The righteous will live by faith."
>
> . . . a righteousness from God, apart from law has been made known, to which the Law and the Prophets testify. This righteousness from God comes through faith in Jesus Christ to all who believe. There is no difference, for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God, and are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that came by Christ Jesus . . . .

It is certainly a contradiction to say that justification is granted only on the basis of the [believer's] faith" and then to say that "one act of righteousness [of Jesus Christ] was justification that brings life for all men [i.e. human beings]," and "through the obedience of the one man [Jesus Christ] the many [who were made sinners through Adam] will be made righteous."

How can this contradiction be eliminated? Is it caused by taking Romans 5:18,19 as meaning what it says? Or does the problem lie with the translation and understanding of the meaning of Romans 1:17 and 3:21-24 which has been held by many at least from the sixteenth century? The translation of Romans 5:18,19 is not in dispute; it is only the meaning that is in dispute. But the translation of Romans 1:17 and 3:21-26 (besides many other passages which relate faith to justification or salvation or any other such happy achievement) is very much in dispute.

The contradiction is introduced by the claim that Paul's "entire presentation of salvation has emphasized the fact that justification is granted only on the basis of [the believer's] faith." There is no contradiction with Romans 5:18,19 if Paul's entire presentation of salvation announces the fact that justification is granted only on the basis of [Jesus Christ's] faith, and that the believer's faith is the condition in which God grants a special salvation, including reckoning to the believer already what Christ has gained for all.[3]

HARMONY

Let us therefore, look again at the revised CV of Romans 1:16,17 and 3:21-22 in which there is no contradiction with the fifth chapter:

[16] For not [l]ashamed[o] am I of the evangel:
For it [l]is God's power [io]for salvation to everyone [v]who

3. The Scriptures also tell of a special choice and calling pertaining to Israel with the nations in a future period of a thousand years, but that also is based on what Christ has done for all.

is believing it—to the Jew first, and to the Greek as well. [17] For in it God's righteousness is being revealed° out of faith, [io]for faith, according as it is °written°:  [y]Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living° . . . .

[21] Yet now, apart from law, God's righteousness has been made manifest° (being attested° by the law and the prophets), [22] yet God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith [io]for all (and on all who are believing it), for there [l]is no[t] distinction, [23] for all sin and are wanting° of the glory of °God, [24] being justified° gratuitously in His °grace, through the deliverance, the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus . . . .

As for God, the issue of His own righteousness is prominent and fundamental in the CV translation of Romans 1:16,17; 3:21-24, just as His love is the foundation of the evangel in chapter 5. God takes first place as the Operator of all.

As for God's Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, the revelation, even the manifestation of God's righteousness is secured in and channeled through Christ's faith according to the above translation, just as God's love is commended by means of Christ's death according to chapter 5. Christ takes second place as Mediator of justification and salvation.

As for human beings, all are sinners who can be justified and saved unto joy and peace only by Christ's faith unto death as directed by His God and Father (and our God and Father) Who in every way is righteous and rich in love. In this deliverance the believer is already reckoned righteous with a special salvation. But the end of sin and death and enmity in life's justifying and being constituted righteous is for all.

But God's evangel concerning His Son is not completed in Romans, nor does Romans direct our attention to all its connections with God's promises given before through His prophets in holy scripture. There is much for us to search out. And there is much still to come before the glory of God's righteousness and love is fully realized by all throughout the universe—that we may safely say.

ALL SIN—CHRIST DIES—GOD IS GLORIFIED

Let us reverse the order and look at God's evangel from our standpoint as things are seen to be. Here we are as described in very unpleasant terms in Romans 1:18-3:20 and summed up so directly and simply in Romans 3:23 and 5:12—"all sin."

We are failures. God has created us, and (this is the really hard part many to accept) He is responsible. That is why Christ dies. That is why God spares not His own Son but gives Him up for us all. God, Whose most essential quality is love has brought about a world of chaos, vanity and darkness to which He sends the Son of His love to die in pain and sorrow, shame and forsakedness so that His love may be known, and this as a righteous love. To God be the glory!

TEXT AND TRANSLATION

There are a number of differences in translation between the NIV and CVNT in Romans 1:16,17 and 3:21,22. Most are minor and do not significantly affect Paul's thought. But the following stand out as important and critical matters of faith:

(1.) In both passages the NIV has "a righteousness from God" where the CVNT has simply "God's righteousness."

(2.) The NIV brings over Habakkuk 2:24 as referring to "the righteous" while the CVNT has "the Righteous One."

(3.) Where the NIV has "through faith in Jesus Christ," the CVNT has "through Jesus Christ's faith" in 3:22.

(4.) Following those renderings in verse 22, the NIV has simply "to all who believe," but the CVNT reads "for all (and on all who are believing it)."

GOD IS RIGHTEOUS

As true as it may be God's evangel concerning His Son is not a manifestation of righteousness from God. All good things come from God (for all is out of God), but this is not what Romans 3:21,22 is saying. The righteousness here is not the justification of the sinner, by means of Christ's faith (which also is true). It is that the justification of every sinner by means of the faith of Jesus Christ is the manifestation of God's righteousness. What Christ's death means to us must take second place to what it means to God. And if it does not reveal that God is righteous the evangel comes to us without its most fundamental basis. The manifestation of God's righteousness precedes the commendation of His love, so that, as noted above in this article, we come to see that God's love is a righteous love.

Long we may meditate on and enslave our minds to the fact that God's sparing not of His own Son but giving Him up for all of us sinners manifests God's righteousness as well as commending His love. There is no manifestation of God's righteousness in God's righteous judgment, nor in His operations apart from the sending of His Son to die, not even in His heeding of Abel's sacrifice and not heeding that of Cain, nor in the preservation of Noah and Noah's three sons and their wives while everyone else was put to death in the deluge, nor in God's choice of Israel, nor in His choice of us as members of the body of Christ, except as all these acts of mercy and kindness and grace are connected with the death of Christ and God's rousing of Him out from among the dead. It is only here that we may see God's righteousness.

How important is this revelation that God is righteous? It is absolutely critical. God is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will (Eph.1:11). Yet the world is filled with unrighteousness, irreverence, transgression, sin and offense. So also it is filled with dangers, sufferings and vanity. We may say, in truth, that there is good mixed in it all, and occasions of happiness and peace, but what we see and experience is as a whole hardly a testimony to God's righteousness. It is only as we believe God's evangel concerning His Son that God's righteousness is made manifest, even God's righteousness in all that occurs.

JESUS CHRIST IS THE RIGHTEOUS ONE

It was revolutionary when A. E. Knoch wrote in an article published in Unsearchable Riches[4] in 1916, the following:

"The faith of Christ is brought before us in the otherwise enigmatical statement 'from faith to faith.' There are two faiths in view. The latter is our faith; the former is Christ's. Justification is founded on His faith: It is conferred on our faith . . . . Just as it was in Abram's case, faith and righteousness are inseparably linked together. Not only that righteousness will be ascribed to us as it was to Abraham when we, too, believe God, but the faith of Jesus Christ is always put as the basis out of which this blessing flows."

Yet it was not seen clearly at that point that Jesus Christ is the "Just [Righteous] One" of Habakkuk 2:4, and so every CV edition to the present has "the just one," indicating that Paul saw the human who believes God being in view in the Habakkuk quotation. Indeed there was no evidence in 1916 that the prophet's words referred to Christ, and Martin Luther's understanding of this text stood supreme in Brother Knoch's mind, despite his insight regarding "out of faith" in the previous line. No coordination was noted between the "out of [Christ's] faith" and the "out of faith" by which the JUST ONE would be living. Yet now the evidence is very strong that this title refers to 4. vol.7, pages 266, 267.

Christ in Habakkuk 2:4, Romans 1:17, Galatians 3:11 and Hebrews 10:38 just as it does in Acts 3:14; 7:32 and 22:14 (see also Isaiah 53:11).

How important is it that we see the words THE RIGHTEOUS refer to Jesus Christ our Lord? It is extremely important to us who are believing God's evangel concerning His Son, that He is explicitly introduced here in Romans 1:17. He must not be left out of this opening preview of the evangel. And certainly we must not take His place as the ones out of whom God's righteousness is revealed and through whom God's righteousness has been made manifest.

THROUGH JESUS CHRIST'S FAITH

That Paul speaks of the Righteous One's faith in Romans 1:17 and similarly of Jesus Christ's faith in Romans 3:22 (as well as making the same association of faith with our Lord in a number of places throughout his epistles) is the theme of this present series of studies. To me it is firmly settled that these passages refer to Christ's faith, not to our faith in Christ. God's evangel concerning His Son speaks of His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord's faith in giving Himself unto the death of the cross. To focus on Christ's faith as the channel of the manifestation of God's righteousness and commendation of His love in the justification and salvation of sinners is our joy and our peace as well as the channel of God's power for present salvation. To suppose that Paul speaks of our faith in these passages does not keep out boasting in ourselves or bring in assurance of salvation, let alone lead us forward in the appreciation of God's righteousness and the abundant measure of His love. Nor indeed does it strengthen our awareness of and thankfulness for the spiritual endowment of faith which comes from the righteous God of love.

This, then, is of the highest practical importance to us day by day as we live our lives in infirm and dying flesh within this present wicked eon. Jesus Christ is the faithful One Who dies for us in pain and rejection, even forsaken by God, so that we may be constituted righteous in living, as He is living, unto God.

TWO PREPOSITIONAL PHRASES

Despite the omission of the words "and on all" in the earliest extant Greek manuscripts the CV continues to include them. The short reading, "for all the believing (one)s" appears in codices Sinaiticus, Vaticanus and Alexandrinus, which are the basis of the Concordant Greek Text, carefully handwritten in the fourth and fifth centuries (as well as a fragment written on papyrus even earlier). That is certainly a strong point in its favor. Yet the long reading with two prepositional phrases, "for all and on all the believing (one)s" is found in the majority of all the preserved handwritten Greek manuscripts up to the introduction of printing. And it also is added to Codex Sinaiticus by its principal editor who claimed to work from a compilation of mostly scriptural writings made in the second century, whose editings are given special attention in our Greek Text. I believe this longer reading accords best with the context and is well defended by the fact that in transcribing from one text to another omissions are more likely than additions.

The current theory of textual scholars is that the short reading, "for all the believing (one)s" was combined with another reading "on all the believing (one)s" (which appears in some early manuscripts, mostly Latin, producing the longer reading. But a strict combination would be "for all the believing (one)s, and on all the believing (one)s." This would have settled the question of whether both "for" and "on" had the same object. But the reading we accept (and as used by the AV and all English translations up to present times) was often seen as providing two distinct thoughts: "for all [human beings], and on all believers." Thus in his commentary on Romans[5] first published in the nineteenth century, Robert Haldane wrote: "While it [this righteousness] is proclaimed to all men, it is actually upon believers . . . placed upon them as a robe" (p.141). Thus the Calvinistic idea of a double predestination was preserved. And this is reflected in such Bible translations as Robert Young's Literal Translation (Baker Book House, Grand Rapids) and Darby's The Holy Scriptures (Stow Hill Bible and Tract Depot, Kingston-on-Thames, England) by placing a comma after the first "all." Starting with the 1944 edition, the CV also separates the first prepositional phrase, "for all," from the second, "and on all who are believing," but with the understanding that the revelation of God's righteousness manifested through Jesus Christ's faith is actually for all human beings, and will be actually realized by us all, and furthermore it is already placed on (in a sense parallel to "reckoned to") those who are believing it. So that this present distinction not be overlooked, the CVNT puts the second phrase in parentheses. Thus it can be seen that the evangel declared here in Romans 3 speaks of blessing gained by means of Christ's death is for all mankind, while having a special application to believers, just as this is made clear in Romans 4 and 5.

How important is this distinction between "all" and "all who are believing"? It carries forward the coherence of the opening chapters of Romans in the critical matters of God's righteousness in the creation of all and His purpose of good for all. It does so while preserving the revelation of God as the Saviour of all especially of those who are believing. Indeed Paul writes to believers, but not as though they were wholly exclusive from unbelievers. We are included in the "for all," that great mass of human beings from Adam forward, all of whom will receive ultimately what God has achieved for them in the giving of His Son. But not all are included now in the "on all" (to whom we would make known this evangel that they may join in the blessing of perceiving God's righteousness through Jesus Christ's faith).

through jesus christ

Romans 5 ends with that joy-filled phrase, "through Jesus Christ, our Lord" (Rom.5:21) which recalls the beginning words of the epistle: "Paul . . . having been severed for God's evangel . . . concerning His Son . . . Jesus Christ, our Lord" (Rom.1:1-4). God's righteousness has been made manifest through Jesus Christ's faith for all (and on all who are believing it), for all sin and are wanting of the glory of God, being justified gratuitously in His grace through the deliverance, the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus" (Rom.3:21-24). "Therefore, even as through one human sin enters into the world, and through sin death, and thus death passes through into all human beings, on the basis of which all sin—[Rom.5:12] . . . even as through the disobedience of the one the many are constituted sinners, thus also through the obedience of the One the many shall be constituted righteous" (Rom.5:19).

"Yet law comes in by the way, that the offense would increase. Yet where sin increases, grace superexceeds, that even as sin reigns in death, thus also grace should reign through righteousness for life eonian through Jesus Christ, our Lord" (Rom.5:20,21).

Consequently through Jesus Christ's faith, in that while we are still sinners He dies for our sakes, yet not for believers' sakes alone, but for all. This is God's evangel of grace which is the gratuitous gift of joy through the death of our Lord, yet not for us alone, but for all, while placed on us and reckoned to us in spirit already.

"What, then, shall we be declaring? That we may be persisting in sin that grace would increase? May it not come to that! We who die to sin, how shall be still be living in it?" (Rom.6:1,2).

Here then is the evangelical meaning of Christ's death as it relates to us who are believing that He dies for us (even as He dies for all). We are baptized (in spirit) into Christ Jesus's death! We are entombed together with Him into that death, that even as Christ is roused from among the dead ones, through the glory of the Father, thus we also should walk in newness of life (Rom.6:3,4). This evangel which declares that in that Christ dies, we as we are in the old humanity die (the fact form of the verb "die" does not speak of time, but of simple truth). The explanation of how Christ's death can bring about salvation is that when He dies the old humanity also dies as absolutely and finally as Christ as the One Who was made sin dies. This is what theology calls so poorly "the theory of the atonement," not that Christ died in our place, but that the sinner died in and with Him. And this is not for ourselves alone but is true of all human beings. "For the love of Christ is constraining us, judging this, that if One dies for the sake of all, consequently all die" (2 Cor.5:14). This evangel "is being God's power to everyone who is believing it" (Rom.1:16). It is not the law which is being God's power every day for salvation from the wretchedness of the war between that law and the law of sin and death which is in our members (Rom.7:18-24). It is rather "God's law" of grace and peace through Jesus Christ, our Lord that rescues us (Rom.7:25).

Concordant Version of the Old Testament

Over a century has passed since a "concordant version" of the Scriptures was first proposed by A. E. Knoch and Vladimir Gelesnoff. When the translation of the Greek Scriptures, or "New Testament," was then published in 1926, an announcement was made that work had begun on the Hebrew Scriptures ("Old Testament"). Now after all these years, with thanksgiving to God, we announce that the entire CONCORDANT VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT is in print again and available to order.

By analyzing the contextual usages of each Hebrew and Aramaic word, a single English word was first selected as its most suitable equivalent. Then, to achieve readability, some words were given a limited number of idiomatic variants that are harmonious with the sense derived from the investigations. English words used as the common translation of particular Hebrew words, and even idiomatic variants, were not used for other Hebrew words.

Boldface type was used for words (or even parts of words) having exact counterparts in the Hebrew. And lightface type was used for words (or parts of words) which were added to clarify the meaning of the respective word in the Hebrew text. In addition small symbols and abbreviations were inserted between or attached to words to represent omitted terms, to indicate grammatical features and the sources of emendations to the Hebrew text.

It has been extremely difficult for me in these days of my increasing dissolution to put together a further revision of Romans 5:12-6:23 together with comments and explanations. Yet I feel there are important matters here which at least need to be brought out whether or not it is done with clarity. Too often Romans 6 has been taken as a sort of correction of Romans 5 in which it is supposed the case is overstated. May it not come to that. There is complete harmony between the joyous gratuity of God's evangel concerning His Son and what is said about our walk in newness of life and our enslavement.

First of all let me say that the scripture in translation is far more important than my explanations, and this is so even without any revision. But what is being said in this passage and within its near and far context? Using the word "listening" for "obedience" I take it that our job as believers is to listen to what God says to us in this passage—yes, that we listen from the heart to the type of teaching to which we are given over. It is not a teaching of law but rather of grace which is essentially joy. It is a teaching of God's joy which reveals God's righteousness and commends His love. It is a teaching which tells of Jesus Christ's listening unto the death of the cross—or as we learned earlier in Romans, a teaching of Jesus Christ's faith which is for our faith.

What our Lord heard with perfect and full submission was instruction from His God and Father. And so our present use of the word "obedience" may seem appropriate. But what we hear is revelation, and our present usage of the word obedience is not very enlightening in that context and even seems to work mischief. How can one carry out a revelation of God's righteousness? The point of the Greek word [h]upakoê (UNDER-HEARing) is to listen, to pay attention to what is heard. The listening is fundamental. And so it was for our Lord.

So we are to listen to God's message of gratuitous joy in the crushing of His beloved Son! And we are to listen to the message of Christ Jesus's faith in giving Himself up because of our offenses and dying for us while we are still sinners.

Believing and listening are mental activities. We are directed to pay attention in mind and heart to what God has done through His Son (note how often the preposition "through" is used in Romans 5:17-21 in relation to Jesus Christ as the channel of our blessings). The death of the sinner in the death of Christ is God's evangel concerning His Son in Romans 6:2,3. The rousing of Christ is set forth as the pattern of our future walk in newness of life (Rom.6:4). Both our death with Christ in His death and the assurance of living together with Him are brought forward in 6:5-11. There is so much joy in all these passages where God speaks of that which is not as though it were, for it has been accomplished with assurance in the death of Christ and assured in His rousing. It is not a passage of what we must or ought to do in order to secure our blessings, but of what God has done through His Son's death, and of what shall be because of that most glorious and critical event. To such joyous revelations we are to enslave our minds. Thus we are to be reckoning (taking into account) ourselves to be dead to sin and living to the God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I have not drawn attention here to A. E. Knoch's two articles concerning the joint body of Christ and its future place as the complement of Christ in His work of completing all—nor to James Coram's article concerning the One out of Whom and through Whom is all. But such glories rest on the death and rousing of Christ Jesus our Lord, so that all themes of Scripture stand in harmony around His death and resurrection. D.H.H.

BOTH BLESSED TOGETHER IN A JOINT BODY

> "Who makes both [groups, Uncircumcision and Circumcision] one . . . creating the two, in Himself, into one new humanity, making peace . . . reconciling both in one body to God through the cross" (Eph.2:14-16).

IN THE PRECEDING article of this series, we have shown that there was "an allotment from God" (Rom.8:17) for believers among the nations long before Ephesians was written. Even in those days, long before Paul came to Rome, the same believers were known to be members of the body of Christ (Rom.12:5; 1 Cor.12:12-31).

Also that the believers among the nations were joint partakers of His promise in Christ Jesus through Paul's evangel, was made known early in his ministry. It is the burden of the latter half of the book of Acts. Writing to the Roman saints (Rom.1:7) speaking of the contribution about to be taken for the Jerusalem saints (15:26), Paul declares: "If the nations participate in their spiritual things, they ought to minister to them in fleshly things also" (Rom.15:27).

Since the Ephesian secret evidently did not consist in being an "heir" or allottee, or in membership in the body of Christ, or in participation in the promise, wherein does it lie? Its whole point and force is found in that thrice-repeated word TOGETHER, fellow, or, as we have rendered it, joint (Eph.3:6). The joint body, as we have pointed out before, is the result of vivifying, rousing and seating together, among the celestials, both groups of believers, those from among the nations, and the Pauline Jews (Eph. 2:5,6). The apostle refers to the two groups as "nations" (or "Uncircumcision") and "Circumcision" respectively (Eph.2:11).

The believers among the nations could not have been joint allottees before because the allotment was on the earth and Israel must have the supreme position there. They must always be aliens from the earthly commonwealth. They could only be guests (Eph.2:12). The Jew was first (Rom.1:16; 2:9). The nations were Israel's debtors (Rom.15:27).

The secret reveals that the believers among the nations as a group have been accorded an allotment, a membership in a body, and a partnership in the promise which Paul had preached, all in equal measure, in as high degree, and in every way the same as that given to the group of Pauline Jews to whom they are united. This is the message of the small but emphatic prefix joint.

These three distinct items of the secret are each elaborated in the first two chapters of the Ephesian epistle. Ephesians 1:3-14 deals with the first item, the allotment or "inheritance," and concludes by giving the nations the same seal, the same spirit, hence the same allotment, as Paul and his fellow Israelites. Ephesians 1:20-2:10 deals with the second item, the one body, and shows that the nations are blessed in it equally with the Jews. Ephesians 2:11-22 shows that the physical inferiority of the nations no longer bars them from the fullest participation in the promise of Paul's evangel, which is the third item.

Each of the three unfoldings of the secret is concerned with a different relationship[1]. The Godward side is seen in connection with the celestial allotment. It is concerned with our place in His predestination and plan and purpose. The Christward side comes before us in dealing with the joint body, of which He is the Head. The manward side of the mystery is developed in dealing with our joint participation with all believers.

JOINT ALLOTTEES

The Godward aspect of the mystery comes before us first (Eph.1:3-14). It is divided into two sections. In the first (1:3-12) the allotment of Paul and the Israelites associated with him is transferred from earth to heaven. The blessedness of this group is among the celestials. They reign, not on earth, but in the wider sphere of the universe. In the other section (1:13,14) the nations as a group—"you also"—are accorded the same allotment because they have received the same spirit, and have the same pledge. Hence they are joint enjoyers of these celestial honors.

THE JOINT BODY

The Christward side of the secret is developed next (Eph.1:20-2:10). First He, as the Head of the whole universe, is given His place above all. Then His body is introduced as His complement. Israel will be His instrument in earth's redemption. The ecclesia which is His body will supply what is needed in the heavens. Thus it is the complement of the One Who is completing the entire universe (cf Eph.1:23). Christ, including the members of His body, will administer the government of the empyrean.

What place will the nations have in this? On earth they must be the subjects of Israel. In the heavens, however, the celestials are the subjects. The body was made up of both Jew and Gentile. In this new sphere, are the Jews to keep their superior place? They are not. First, the apostle addresses the believers among the nations—"And you" (2:1). In the third verse he turns to the Israelites—"among whom we." But both groups are included when He vivifies us together (2:5), rouses us together (2:6) and seats us together (2:6)

among the celestials, in Christ Jesus. Hence the two groups are of equal rank. Both are blessed together in a joint body.

CREATING ONE NEW HUMANITY

The cross is the end of the old creation in regard to the flesh and circumcision and approach to God. In Galatia the apostle put the Judaizers in their place, who made much of flesh and the religious rites of Judaism. That belongs to the evangel of the Kingdom, which will flower during the millennium. But it has no place today, for, in spirit, we are already beyond that eon. In Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is anything, but a new creation (Gal.6:15). The new creation is not a figure confined to Ephesians and applied to the "mystery" or the one body. It is never applied to these directly. It has to do with mankind, with the vanishing of the fleshly preeminence of the favored nation in its approach to the Deity, as will be the case in the literal new creation, after the thousand years.

Ephesians simply repeats and reapplies the figure of the new creation to the relation between those who were near and those far from God. Its two main and complementary occurrences (Eph.2:15; 4:24) deal with the new humanity (in the third item of the secret), not with the joint body (the second item, Eph.1:20-2:10; 5:21-6:9). Those who confound these two figures will never be able to see the truth of the joint body clearly. In Ephesians 2:13-18 the apostle is dealing with two classes of believers, those among the nations and those in Israel, two distinct groups. Just as it will be in the thousand years, those among the nations were far off even if they were believers. There was a wall between them and God, which was made by their flesh and by the decrees (Acts 15:20) of the apostles. They belonged to a humanity split into two by the rite of circumcision.

In the future the nations who were kept at a distance during the millennium will be brought near in the new creation (Rev.21:1-4). They will not worship a distant God, shut up in a temple to which only the Circumcision have access. God will be with them Himself. There will be a new humanity. Religiously, the cleavage between Jew and Gentile will disappear. Priesthood will vanish. That is the message of Ephesians to believers now. The figure of the new creation which Paul had previously brought in to show God's relationship to all mankind at present, that is, the conciliation, he now uses afresh to show that the barrier keeping believers out of God's presence has been abolished and they enjoy the same access to God that Israelites have, not because of a creation confined to saints, but because of one affecting all humanity. Only the believers, however, enter this new humanity now, for it is a matter of joint participation in faith and spirit.

In fullest accord with this revelation concerning a new humanity in the doctrinal section of Ephesians, we find a similar statement in the second half, dealing with deportment. To see the exquisite symmetry of this, study the structure of Ephesians.[2] These two references to the new humanity in the new creation are in the complementary sections dealing with joint participation (the third item of the secret), not with the figure of the joint body (the second item). Putting on the new humanity (Eph.4:24) deals with conduct, and is not nearly so limited in its scope as the figure of the new humanity in 2:15. The corruption and seduction of the old humanity go, and the righteousness and benignity of the new are to be put on, just as the millennial conditions, ending in the great apostasy, vanish and give place to a new creation in which righteousness dwells.

INDIVIDUAL CREATION

Twice we have the figure of an individual new creation, once in Paul's earlier epistles (Gal.6:15) and once in his perfection group (Eph.2:10). In both cases the context deals with the same themes as the corporate creations. In Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is anything, but a new creation. After dealing with the conduct of Jew and Gentile, we read that we are His achievement, being created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready beforehand, that we should be walking in them. It is really a picture which will be fulfilled literally by those on the new earth, when religious distinctions will be done away. God has prepared only good works for them, and they are part of a new creation, hence sin will be almost unknown at that time.

ONE BODY AND ONE NEW HUMANITY

The figure of "one body" is also used in a variety of ways, as we shall see. In Ephesians 2:15,16 the one body simply denotes that two groups of believers, those of the Circumcision and those of the Uncircumcision, are now changed into one body. Literally this cannot be done. Figuratively such things can be done, and often occur. The body of a man and a body of people are not subject to the same limitations, nor can they be made the object of the same reasoning. We cannot reason about figures as we do about facts. The creation of one new humanity (Eph.2:15) is connected with the *re*conciliation of the two classes of believers, just as the creation in 2 Corinthians 5:17 was concerned with the *con*ciliation of mankind. One is based on the other. The secret of the evangel flows from conciliation, and the third item of the secret (joint partakers) flows from this reconciliation of two groups of believers.

ONE BODY COMPOSED OF GROUPS

Let us seek to settle clearly in our minds what is literally intended by the figure of a "body." This faded implication is used so freely in English that we apply the term to any aggregation of persons or things, or to the mass of anything. In the passage we have already considered (Eph. 2:16) it is used in this way. Two groups accepted Paul's teaching. The Circumcision were near, the Uncircumcision were far. The flesh separated them. In spirit, in Christ, these two became one. That is the one body. In this case the adjective one is prefixed to express the fact that there are no divisions among believers today, for we all have one spirit. There is only one body, not many groups, as there seem to be in Christendom today, humanly speaking.

In Ephesians 2:15,16 it seems clear that the one body results from the union of two groups, a thought altogether foreign to the figure as used before in Romans and Corinthians. There there were many members and many functions. Here it is not a question of functioning, but of peace and reconciliation between two groups. These two aspects should be kept entirely distinct. It is the special message of Ephesians, which recognizes and adapts the body made of members, but adds to it the body made of differing or hostile groups. This is its peculiar and crowning revelation, which culminates in the secret that, in spirit, the nations are not only joint enjoyers and joint partakers, but a joint body (Eph.3:6).

THE JOINT BODY

Mature reflection has convinced me that the force of the prefix sun (joint) does not refer to the many members of the body so much as to the two unequal groups of which it was composed, the Circumcision, who were near, and the Uncircumcision, who were afar off. Now that both are near, in spirit, the cleft between them is gone, and it has become a joint body, in which both are of equal rank; the two groups have been reconciled.

It is this special figure, one body composed of both Circumcision and Uncircumcision (or any other groups), which brings about peace or reconciliation among the believers (Eph.2:16). By the cross all fleshly distinctions, and all attainments, privileges, pride, or other causes of division, are set aside, so that no strife has a right to raise its head. In entreating the believers, therefore, to keep the unity of the spirit with the tie of peace, the first unity is the one body (Eph.4:4). No different or dissenting groups are to be in this body, or it will disturb this peace. And has the experience of well nigh two millennia not shown us that, where this unity is not kept, there is strife and contention?

ONE BODY COMPOSED OF INDIVIDUALS

But there is another aspect of this figure used especially in Paul's earlier epistles, which we ourselves have never clearly distinguished. That is, a body composed of many individual members (Rom.12:4,5; 1 Cor.12:12-27). This is referred to as the body of Christ, for each member is anointed by the Spirit, and all together they form a living organism which is to Christ what our body is to us, the medium through which we operate. This is referred to in Ephesians 1:23: the ecclesia which is His body, the complement of the One Who is completing the All in all; 4:12, 13: the upbuilding of the body of Christ, unto the end that we should all . . . ; 4:16: the entire body, being articulated together . . . making for the growth . . . for the upbuilding of itself in love; 5:30: we are members of His body.

Even in this aspect we can see vast differences in the figure, according to its application. In Romans and Corinthians the point is variety in unity. One body, but many members with varying functions. In Ephesians 1:23 the body is the complement of Christ in His Headship of all. In 4:12,13,16 the picture is altogether different, for there the vital union serves for growth. In 5:30 the scene changes once again to the nourishing and cherishing which we humans accord the physical frame.[3] Almost every occurrence of the figure of the "body" has a setting of its own, and we ought always to regard it in our expositions.

Let us always keep the many aspects of this figure distinct. Let us never confuse the body of Christ, and Christ as the Head of the body. The figures are very different, even if the word "body" is used in both. In one, Christ is one of the members of the body, the Head, and the rest is subject to Him. In the other all the members, including the eyes in the head, are Christ's body, through which He works, and which He cherishes.

THE SEX OF THE BODY

Among the most humiliating aspects of my early effort to clear up the question of the body and the bride was the attempt to fix the sex of the body. I read some most remarkable statements on both sides. I now see how utterly inane it all was. If Paul could be both father and mother of the Thessalonians (1 Thess.2:7,11), then the ecclesia could be a bride as well as a body. Reasoning is most illogical here. Yet it may help some if we give the facts of the case, and point out some of the pitfalls into which we fell before we knew how to handle figures of speech.

The word body, in Greek as well as in English, has no sex at all. It can be used of the body of Dorcas (Acts 9:40) who was a woman, as well as of a man. Of course, when it is specifically used of Christ, we might infer that it is the body of a male. But this is utterly beside the point, and worse than useless. Much was made, at one time, of the fact that the word ekklêsia, in Greek, is feminine, and this was used to prove that the body is female! From this was deduced that it was the bride of Christ! By similar mental processes we could prove that it has no males but is composed entirely of females!

One of our favorite methods was to bring in some other figure to show that the body is male. We thought that the "one new man," of course, must be identical with the body of Christ, hence this was a favorite proof until we found out that anthrōpos, though masculine, simply meant human, or humanity. The new humanity of the future will not be composed of males only. Neither is the present figurative one. That would exclude the sisters from participation in the grace of Christ!

The latest along this line seems to be based on Ephesians 4:12,13, where we read of "the upbuilding of the body of Christ, unto the end that we should all attain to the unity of the faith and of the realization of the son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature of the complement of the Christ, that we may by no means still be minors . . . ." Is it not evident that this passage deals with the individuals which compose the body, some of whom are minors and only some mature? The body at that time was evidently composed of both, and the gifts were given to make mature saints out of the minors. So that the phrase "mature man" is a figure, just as applicable to a woman as a man. It is not descriptive of the body as a whole, and cannot be used to determine its sex.

I understand that some go even further than this, in that they render the Greek word here (anêr) husband, and this is the status and goal of the church which is the body of Christ. This is so startling that it calls for investigation. But we must note first of all that the Greek of the Scriptures has no term for "husband." This word is simply man, that is, a man, not a child or a woman. How foolish it would be to translate it husband in all of its occurrences is evident from these samples: Jesus of Nazareth, a husband (Acts 2:22), I [Paul] am a husband, a Jew (Acts 22:3), or even this passage itself, unto a perfect husband (Eph.4:13). The Greek usually says own man for husband. That is why we read of your own husband (Eph.5:22). The word husband is only an idiomatic idiosyncracy, and should not be made the basis of a new teaching such as this.

But why stop reasoning, once we have begun? If the body is a husband, it must have a wife. Who can this be? I suppose the bride, believing Israel, is the only one in view. But if our destiny is the heavens and theirs the earth, there is much ground to fear for our future felicity. They would be absent from each other most of the time! They would not be congenial. Their interests would be quite different. More than that, we would come into conflict with the real husband of the restored nation— Yahweh. They are not the bride of Christ, but of Yahweh. And we are not Yahweh. Our reasoning will not carry us that far. Into what absurdities do we fall when once we desert faith for fallible, foolish reasoning!

The rendering husband reminds us of a remarkable rendering in our Authorized Version, which the Revisers did not change. There we read that Paul had espoused the Corinthians to one husband! (2 Cor.11:2). This may have been understandable when the Authorized Version was made, but now it would be a crime to betroth a pure virgin to a man who is already a husband. I am inclined to regard the word rendered espoused or betrothed, not as married, but engaged to be married, and I find that the best German versions so render it. This is the real figure. Not a marriage, but the condition of a virgin before marriage, calls for singleness and purity in a special way.

Literally, Paul wished the Corinthians to be wholly and altogether for Christ. They could be this without literally becoming Israelites or taking a place in the Kingdom. We, members of the body, should be like this. Even if we should illustrate it by means of the marriage relation, that would not take us out of the body and put us in the bride. Figures are not facts.

The attempt to force the figure of the bride of Yahweh into one of Paul's epistles seems to me to be most unfortunate and reprehensible. A "proof" seems to be needed that the Corinthians were "Jewish," and since none can be found, one must be invented. Would we also lose our membership in the body of Christ and be joined to the bride of Yahweh if we should be single and pure toward Christ? This is all that the figure conveys.

ALIENS—FELLOW CITIZENS

In the preceding era, in flesh, the believers among the nations were aliens, having no civil rights, as it were, in the Kingdom which is Israel's (Eph.2:12,19), but at the crisis when the epistle was penned they became fellow-citizens, not, indeed, of Israel, but of the Jewish believers. Philippians takes up this figure and locates our citizenship above. It does not belong to the earth but to the heavens. Let us not confuse this figure with facts. Paul had a Roman citizenship in Tarsus (Acts 21:39; 22:28). There was no conflict between the two. One was for his body, the other for his spirit. In due course we will enjoy our celestial rights and drop our earthly ones.

GUESTS—MEMBERS OF THE FAMILY

In the era before Ephesians, the Uncircumcision had rich spiritual possessions, but could not enter the family circle of Israel on account of their fleshly disabilities. They could only take the place of a guest at Israel's board. This is a beautiful figure of the place of the nations when they participated in Israel's spiritual blessings. Now, however, our status is different. We have become members of God's family. We are not proselytes, or full-fledged Israelites, but, on another basis, not of the flesh, we are bona fide members of God's great family. A figure, not a fact. We do not need to desert our families, a wife or children, in order to enter this relationship. We retain both (Eph.2:12,19).

THE WIFE AND THE ECCLESIA

The husband is head of the wife, even as Christ is Head of the ecclesia (Eph.5:23). For years after I had fought myself free from the teaching that the church is the bride, I was very loath to consider any feminine figure for the ecclesia. Now I have no fear. The facts are clear. We must be subject to our Head. And why should not a wife learn from this subjection to find her true place in relation to her husband? If we go on and inflate this figure beyond its legitimate bounds, as we did with other figures, then there is cause for fear. Then we will come into conflict with the wife of Yahweh and of the Lambkin. But if we leave it without artificial additions, as it stands, all is well. There is not even any infringement on the fact that the husband is to love his wife as his own body—as Christ loves His ecclesia.

MINORS AND MATURE

Since "perfection" or maturity came with Paul's latest revelations (1 Cor.13:10), it is open to all believers to attain it. This figure has to do chiefly with the disposition. The Authorized Version rendering "in understanding be men" (1 Cor.14:20), should read "in disposition become mature." It was possible for some to whom the apostle Paul taught wisdom to be mature, because he divulged to them the secrets about to be revealed (1 Cor.2:6,7), yet the believers as a rule were immature minors, except in relation to the law. The mere revelation of the present secret administration does not guarantee the attainment of maturity, but makes it possible. Paul admonished and taught in order to present every man mature in Christ Jesus (Col.1:28). The apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers were given to adjust the believers to the present era of maturity in order that they should not remain minors, surging hither and thither and being carried about by every wind of teaching . . . (Eph.4:11-14). Judging by this test, few have attained maturity yet. They are disposed to the playthings of childhood, religion, rites, self-righteousness, displays, power, and all that is not found in the cross of Christ. Those who are mature will find their disposition set forth in the Philippian letter (3:1-16).

ROOTED AND GROUNDED

Figures are by no means confined to the realm of which they speak. Some of the most magnificent figures in the Hebrew Scriptures represent the Lord as a wild beast. Here we have the saints pictured by a plant with roots sunk in the ground. The thoughts seem to be sustenance and steadfastness. A plant well-rooted lives and grows. Properly grounded, it stands sturdy and strong. Love is the soil in which we may thrive and stand. All flesh is grass, because it soon fades and vanishes. We are not in flesh but in spirit, and, with love as our garden bed, we will not emulate the grass, but grow and stand firm.

And now we pray that God will graciously grant the reader the spirit of patient and quiet investigation. It may be painful to forsake much that we have held dear, and which may have cost us much to gain and to maintain. But let us weigh these things before God. Let us take years to ponder our position, and to adjust ourselves if necessary to the divine message of the Ephesian epistle.

JOINT PARTAKERS OF THE PROMISE

> You were, in that era, apart from Christ, being alienated from the citizenship of Israel, and guests of the promise covenants, having no expectation, and without God in the world. (Eph.2:12)
>
> In spirit the nations are to be joint enjoyers of an allotment, and a joint body, and joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which I became the dispenser. (Eph.3:6,7)

JOINT PARTAKERS

The manward aspect of the secret is the last to be elaborated (Eph.2:11-22). The distinction between Israel and the nations was a matter of flesh, summarized in the rite of circumcision. This left the nations, even after they believed the evangel, ineligible to the citizenship of Israel. Thus believers among the nations were aliens, mere guests of the covenants, with no expectation or God of their own, as far as flesh is concerned. But now that they are joint allottees and members of a joint body, and all their blessings are spiritual, the fleshly disabilities vanish. As a result they are fellow citizens, and members of God's family and built together for God's dwelling place in spirit (Eph.2:19-22).

It is of prime importance that we note the channel through which this grace flows. It is not that we are made "partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel" (Eph.3:6, AV), but "joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which I [Paul] became the dispenser" (CV). The apostle is not so absurd as to inform the Ephesians, or any other believers to whom this epistle was sent, that he was a minister of the gospel! He is not telling them that they are joint partakers through the evangel of the Circumcision, which was proclaimed by the twelve, for they never can be blessed on equal terms with Israel in her earthly Kingdom. He is rather telling them that this grace comes to them through the evangel which he had been preaching to them, which he called "my evangel" (Rom.16:25), including the great truths of justification, conciliation, and glorification (Rom. chapters 3 to 8), which they had received, but which gave them a place subordinate to Israel in the flesh.

Hitherto they had a standing "in flesh," or on the physical plane. They were the Uncircumcision, and as such must take a lower place than the Circumcision. They were bidden to remember that time (Eph.2:11,12). This does not refer (as the translators evidently thought, judging by their rendering) to that time when they were unbelievers or "unsaved." It refers to the time when they were partakers, but not joint partakers. Then they were guests of (not strangers to) the covenants of promise. This they could not be before they believed. From the physical standpoint (not from the spiritual) they had no expectation, for Israel monopolized that. They even had to acknowledge the Deity as the God of Israel. If they should be physically present in Jerusalem, all of this would be painfully apparent to them. No matter how great their spiritual attainments, they dared not enter the temple precincts beyond the court allotted to them. They were emphatically not joint partakers.

But now that the secret is revealed, the Jew is not shut out of the holy places nor is the gentile kept at a distance, but both, in spirit, enter into the holiest of all. The fact that a Jew is not of the seed of Aaron cannot keep him out. Though the gentile is not of the seed of Israel, that does not bar his approach. Physical disabilities vanish before spiritual graces.

IN SPIRIT

We must not fail to emphasize the fact that every one of the three items of the mystery is modified by the introductory phrase, in spirit. All other translations I have ever seen join this with the preceding verb "revealed." They tell us that it was revealed "by the Spirit." There is little point to this, as that is the ordinary mode of revelation. Standing, as the word does, between two statements (Eph. 3:5,6), either ending one or beginning another, it must be emphatic. Once we see how important it is as applied to the secret, we cannot but connect it with the mystery.

The nations are not joint allottees in flesh; they are not members of a joint body in flesh; they are not joint participants in flesh. It is only in spirit that all this is true. Physical preeminence belongs to Israel. Physically the nations can claim no equality. Fleshly blessings have no place in Ephesians. They are not involved in the secret. We are blessed with all spiritual blessings among the celestials, hence the threefold divisions of the secret are all dominated by the opening phrase: in spirit.

The nations are joint enjoyers of the allotment because they were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise, which was its earnest. They had a spiritual pledge of a spiritual portion (Eph.1:13). They are in the joint body because of the purely spiritual grace of being vivified and roused and seated together with a faithful remnant of Israel (Eph. 2:5,6). The believers among the nations, once the Uncircumcision as to flesh, kept at a distance from the material temple at Jerusalem, now have access, together with Pauline Jews, in one spirit, to the Father (Eph.2:18).

PAUL'S EVANGEL

Now that we have seen that the secret consists in a change from a subordinate place to a position of equality we will be able to judge its effect on previous revelation. As the allotment to Israel in the land will not brook any equality with the nations, an entirely new allotment is revealed, among the celestials. As the body of Christ was already in existence, a new body was unnecessary, but it was modified into a joint body. As the evangel Paul had preached was almost exclusively spiritual in its blessings it merely needed to drop a few physical phases to be the channel of the mystery.

As we are distinctly told that joint participation comes through the evangel Paul had been preaching, it is of the utmost importance that we give it a place in the administration of the mystery. It continues in force. The promise it brought is not set aside, but is definitely incorporated into this secret economy. There are only such minor modifications as the secret itself demands, due to the new destiny and the changed relations of the Jews and gentiles who come into its embrace.

In his itinerant ministry Paul deemed it necessary to speak to the Jews first (Acts 13:46). The priority of the Jew is recognized, even in his previous writings (Rom. 1:16; 2:10; 3:9). It is necessary to insist that this is no longer true, for it is contrary to the very essence of the secret now revealed. His previous teaching is modified by the addition of a celestial allotment and the withdrawal of all physical distinctions and blessings, for this is essential to the administration of the mystery.

Paul's previous proclamations, as presented in his Preparatory and Promise epistles, may be summed up in three words, Justification, Conciliation, and Glory. All three are the subjects of Romans, and its companion epistles, Corinthians and Galatians. The Thessalonian epistles also bring in the future glory in connection with the coming of our Lord. The revelation of the mystery does not involve a reconsideration of these great doctrines, but assumes them, amplifies them, glorifies them. As they were all given to Paul after his separation from the rest, and in preparation for the secret economy about to be revealed, they are incorporated in it.

JUSTIFICATION

The grand doctrine of justification is not repeated in Ephesians, rather it is recognized[1]. In the panoply provided for us in our conflict with the spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials is the cuirass of righteousness (Eph.6:14). True, this is composed of our actual conduct. But apart from the enjoyment of justification such conduct is impossible.

Philippians, the companion epistle of Ephesians, written to correct the conduct of those who come into the light of the mystery, clearly sets forth our connection with justification. There Paul eagerly grasps this grace. He had striven to attain to righteousness under the law. But now, "Things which were gain to me, these I have deemed a forfeit because of Christ. But, to be sure, I am also deeming all to be a forfeit because of the superiority of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord, because of Whom I forfeited all, and am deeming it to be refuse, that I should be gaining Christ, and may be found in Him, not having my righteousness, which is of law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is from God for faith" (Phil.3:7-9). Here we find the aged apostle, who doubtless apprehended the mystery as no one else ever did or could, resting on the firm foundation of justification by faith. It not only fails to conflict with the latest revelation, but is in fullest accord with it. It supplies the only basis on which it can be built.

1. For a more direct connection see "Romans in Ephesians" p.179.

THE CONCILIATION

Romans records the great truth that God's attitude toward the nations has changed since Israel refuses to convey His blessing to them. God is conciliated to all mankind. Those who receive this are reconciled (Rom.5). Second Corinthians deals with the ministry of the conciliation (2 Cor.5:18-20. It is our point of contact with the world, for our feet are to be sandaled with the readiness of the evangel of peace (Eph.6:15). It also is a secret, "the Mystery of the Gospel" (Rom.16:25). The Colossians had accepted it and were reconciled (Col.1:21). Eventually it will be enjoyed by the whole universe (Col.1:20).

In Ephesians this truth is amplified to accord with the secret. Those near (the Jews) and those far off (the gentiles) are reconciled with God in one body (2:16). To both He preaches "the evangel of peace" (2:17). Even the Israelite was shut out of the inner courts of the sanctuary and could not enter the temple building. Only the chief priest could enter the holiest of all. So that this evangel of peace, this conciliation, now has a message for them as well as for the nations. Both are brought nigh, in spirit, into the very Presence of the Father (2:18).

FUTURE GLORY

The rendering "who first trusted in Christ" (Eph. 1:12, AV) has practically eliminated all reference to the Lord's coming from the Ephesian epistle. Change "trust" to "expect" or even "hope," as the Revisers have it, and we have an important link which connects the mystery with the advent of our Lord as revealed in the Thessalonian epistles. It was the Circumcision who first trusted in Christ, not the nations. And of these Paul was among the last, not the first. But he and the believers among the nations expected the return of Christ before His coming to the earth. They had a prior expectancy. This is revealed in Thessalonians.

Peter and James and John show conclusively, by their epistles, that they never received the truth contained in Paul's writings. The advent of our Lord for them was just the same as the prophets had foretold, and our Lord had predicted, and as they themselves had proclaimed in the Acts. It was to be a glorious manifestation to His people Israel, resulting in the millennial Kingdom. Such an expectation leaves no place for a celestial destiny such as Ephesians unfolds.

But those to whom Paul had gone with his evangel did not expect to wait until Messiah should come in glory to the Mount of Olives. Paul had said to them by the word of the Lord, that they would be assembled to Him (2 Thess. 2:1) when He shall be present in the air before His wrath is visited upon the earth (1 Thess.1:10; 4:15-18; 5:9). That it was "by the word of the Lord" shows that it was one of those truths which enabled him to speak of "my evangel," and so is included in the third item of the mystery. This surely was a "promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel" of which he became the dispenser (Eph.3:6,7).

The nations are now joint partakers of this promise (Eph.3:6). But were they not joint partakers when Thessalonians was written? The key lies in the title used. It is the coming of the Lord (not Christ). Peter makes this distinction when speaking to Cornelius. "Of the word He dispatches to the sons of Israel, bringing the evangel of peace through Jesus Christ (He is Lord of all), you are aware." Here we find the nations connected with Him as Lord, just as in the prophets they are connected with Adonai, and not Yahweh. So we find that Messiah, or Christ, is connected with Israel. At that time the nations, in flesh, were apart from Messiah, or Christ (Eph.2:12).

In keeping with this lower plane of blessing, the Thessalonians were told of the coming of the Lord to the air (not heaven). The fifteenth of first Corinthians adds to our knowledge of this event. It initiates us into the secret of the resurrection. In it we are told that our bodies will not only be raised, but changed—changed to a celestial body. Why is this? Philippians supplies the answer: Our realm has all along been in the heavens, out of which we are awaiting a Saviour also, the Lord, Jesus Christ, Who will transfigure the body of our humiliation, to conform it to His body glorious. Resurrection, change, ascension, transfiguration, glory.

In describing his ministry the apostle compares himself with Moses. Moses put a veil on his face that the sons of Israel should not see the consummation of that which is vanishing. He did not hide the glory from them, but the fact that it was a fading glory. It changed from glory to gloom. Paul's ministry does not do this. It leads in the opposite direction. It is continually gathering new glory. "Now we all, with uncovered face, mirroring the Lord's glory, are being transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as from the Lord, the spirit." (2 Cor. 3:18).

So it was with our precious expectation. It began in grace. All were to be snatched away, whether watching or drowsing (1 Thess.5:10). It will change our bodies from soilish to celestial at the sound of His trump. But even celestial bodies vary in glory. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars, for star excels star in glory (1 Cor.15:41). Not content with mere celestial glory, we are to excel the very sun itself, even as the glorified Christ outshone its Syrian noonday brilliance when Paul first met Him on the Damascus road. We are to be transfigured into the body of His glory.

Some expositors do not believe there is any secret in this epistle at all because Paul assured the Ephesians, on his last visit to them, that he did not shrink from informing them of anything which is expedient (Acts 20:20). The last word is usually rendered "profitable" in this passage, though the Authorized Version itself often translates it "expedient" (John 11:50; 16:7; 18:14; 1 Cor.6:12; 10:23; 2 Cor.8:10; 12:1). This word is the key to the fact that the secret was withheld until after Paul's imprisonment and the setting aside of Israel. So long as God was still dealing with the nation of His choice, he could reveal much of His grace to the nations in preparation for the transcendent revelations which were to follow. But it would have been most confusing and unwise, as well as unfair to Israel, to announce the new administration while the hope of the Kingdom was still held out to them. Paul could not reveal this secret when passing by Ephesus, and it is for this reason that he qualifies his statement by this expression; he did not inform them of everything, but everything which is expedient.

A little later, in the same discourse, he almost repeats himself. He did not shrink from informing them of the entire counsel of God (Acts 20:27). God's counsel is always distinctly limited to His public revelation. When the Pharisees and those learned in the law repudiated the counsel of God for themselves (Luke 7:30), they were concerned only with what was open to all. They could not reject a divine secret which had not been revealed. So Paul fully expounded so much as was due of God's counsel. The secret was not yet due. It was not yet true. In Acts Paul takes the believers up to it. In Ephesians he takes them through it.

This question resolves itself into a simple matter of faith. Shall we believe both Acts and Ephesians, or shall we pit one against the other and thus destroy both? Ephesians refers to a later time. There Paul says it is a secret. Faith immediately concludes that he did not make it known before. Faith then examines his words in Acts and finds that he did not claim to divulge the secret then, but was speaking of the truth which was applicable to that era.

In order to prepare the believers among the nations for the secret it was expedient that they be fully informed of God's dealings with Israel and the nations up to the time when the mystery itself could be made known. While Israel was apostatizing they lost their hold on God's counsel. They were being prepared for dismissal. But the believers among the gentiles were taken into God's confidence as far as possible under the circumstances. This is what Paul speaks of on his last journey past Ephesus.

To sum up: The "mystery," or secret, of the present administration is not the revelation of "the one body," sometimes called "the mystical body" of Christ. It is concerned with this in one of its three aspects. It changes it from a body with members of various rank to a joint body with two groups of equal rank. After the revelation of the celestial allotment for those associated with Paul's ministry, the status of the nations, or gentiles, is changed from subordination to the Circumcision to full equality. Together, both groups of believers are raised to the highest place in the universe. "To Him be glory in the ecclesia and in Christ Jesus for all the generations of the eon of the eons! Amen!"

REPOSING

We regret to record the deaths of two friends which whom we enjoyed fellowship in years past. Carl Anderson of Lakewood, Ohio, was put to repose at age 83 on November 5, 2024. His quiet steadiness will be greatly missed. Pauline Winter of Muncy, Pennsylvania who with her husband Elwood gave us much encouragement and support for many years died on January 7, 2025 at age 89. We extend our sympathy especially to her husband who survives.

HIS ACHIEVEMENT ARE WE

For in grace, through faith, are you saved, and this is not out of you; it is God's approach present, not of works lest anyone should be boasting. For His achievement are we, being created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready beforehand, that we should be walking in them (Eph.2:8-10).

This passage is a most enlightening one. Its revelations are clearly expressed and are exceptionally glorious. We are overwhelmed by the magnificence of these declarations, and are exceedingly glad that they are true. For they allow us—indeed, they constrain us—to glorify God as God and to take our proper place as His creatures.

Ephesians 2:8 begins with the word "for" (gar, SURELY-CONSEQUENTLY): "For in grace, through faith, are you saved." Gar is "a causal conjunction, introducing the logical reason" (KEYWORD CONCORDANCE, p.114, entry "for"). Whenever a sentence or clause begins with this word, what follows tells us why that which has gone before is so. It joins one thought to another, forming the causal link between them.

YET GOD

As in any passage in which gar appears, in Ephesians 2:8 at the beginning of the verse, we should note the causal relationship between a former and a latter statement, in order to understand why the declarations which have already been set forth are true.

The immediate revelation previous to Ephesians 2:8 is comprised in verses 1 to 7. There we learn that, notwithstanding our former walk, our shameful behavior in the lusts of our flesh, being, in our nature "children of indignation, even as the rest, yet God . . . ." (Eph.2:3b,4a).

Yet God! "O what meaning, O what wealth these words impart." It is true that, having become unnatural through our own inherent disposition with which we were born (Rom.8:7), besides the ravages of mortality and those influences of sin which "accord with the chief of the jurisdiction of the air" (Eph.2:2), we were indeed, "in our nature, children of indignation, even as the rest" (Eph.2:3b). Consequently, we could only anticipate severe divine judgment. This is because, in the day of indignation and revelation of, God's just judgment, "indignation and fury, affliction and distress" will be upon "every human soul which is effecting evil" (Rom.2:9).

Nonetheless, Yet God! It is evident that Paul is speaking here in an ultimate or final sense in accounting for the stupendous change that has occurred with regard to our present standing and future course. He has just rehearsed our awful past and insisted that insofar as anything related either to our acts or nature is concerned, it can only be said that we were, "children of indignation, even as the rest." That is, we had no more claim upon God's blessing and were no more entitled to exemption from indignation, much less to possession of eonian life, than anyone else.

Now if it were true, as many will say, that man is finally the key to his own welfare—especially to such unspeakable gain as exemption from indignation and deliverance unto glory—this would have been just the place to have made this known. In fact, if such a thing were true, Paul should have made this clear, and would have been terribly remiss in having failed to do so.

But what does our apostle declare? Does he say, "Yet man . . ."? Does he say, "Yet men, those such as ourselves who are saved, at the vital point, their former sinfulness notwithstanding, summoned something from within so as to make the right decision and thus qualify themselves for divine deliverance"? If this idea is the truth, Paul should have said as much, and he should never have said—especially at this vital juncture— "Yet God . . . ."

Yet this is just what he did say! He said, setting forth the truth, "Yet God . . . " "Yet God, being rich in mercy, because of the vast love with which He loves us (we also being dead to the offenses and the lusts [cp Rom.6:10]), vivifies us together in Christ (in grace are you saved!) and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials, in Christ Jesus, that, in the oncoming eons, He should be displaying the transcendent riches of His grace in His kindness to us in Christ Jesus" (Eph.2:4-7).

THE GRACE OF GOD IN TRUTH

The words of our Lord in Luke 6:32-35 give us an illuminating illustration of true grace: "If you are loving those loving you, what grace[1] is it to you? For sinners also are loving those loving them. And if you should be doing good to those doing good to you, what grace is it to you? For sinners also are doing the same. And if you should ever be lending to those from whom you are expecting to get back, what grace is it to you? For sinners also are lending to sinners, that they may get back the equivalent. Moreover, be loving your enemies, and be doing good, and be lending, expecting nothing from them, and your wages will be vast in the heavens, and you will be sons of the Most High, for He is kind to the ungrateful and the wicked."

Grace is that which is not out of works (Rom.11:6), which exists in order to bring joy and blessing to its beneficiaries (cp charis, JOY, "grace"; charisma, JOY-EFFECT, "grace"; chara, JOY, "joy").

While grace is not partial (sinfully preferential), it is

1. "thanks," literally, is "grace."

nonetheless purposeful. Any gracious gift, then, that is not intended for all, through its very purposefulness, necessarily excludes those for whom it is not designed, as much so as would be the case if its motivation were that of partiality.

"Grace" refers to God's work or action of grace, the work which He does for us and in us, as a favor or gracious gift. As ordinarily used, the expression "God's grace" is a figure of speech. It is a metonymy (figure of association) for "God's work of grace," in reference to whatever gracious gift may be in view. That is, literally, grace is not an action, but the character of an action.

The grace of God is effective, for it, like everything else, only exists according to God's own intention and purpose (Eph.1: 11; Rom.9:19; Isa.46:10,11). Indeed, it is the saving grace of the Almighty God (Titus 2:11; Rev.11:17).

Consequently, then, since it is effective, grace is a causal entity. This entails the necessary and inevitable existence of its achievements. That is, Grace cannot fail.

Grace is not a wage or requital in response to service or cooperation (Rom.4:4). Instead, it constitutes a favor. Grace acts in order to bless. It does not offer to bless, but actually effects blessing. Therefore, at the deepest level, grace always initiates, out of its own intrinsic virtue. Though it responds to need, it is never under extrinsic obligation to do so and can never be put under such obligation.

Our God is in the heavens: He has done whatsoever He has pleased (Psa.115:3; cp Psa.135:6). Though He loves His creatures and provides for them ideally, He is never beholden to them. "For, who knew the mind of the Lord? or, who became His adviser? or, who gives to Him first, and it will be repaid him? seeing that out of Him and through Him and for Him is all: to Him be the glory for the eons! Amen!" (Rom.11:34-36).

"The word of the truth of the evangel . . . is bearing fruit and growing . . . [in] you . . . ," "from the day on which you hear and realized the grace of God in truth" (Col.1:5,6).

IN GRACE, THROUGH FAITH

In light of these prior and related revelations, Paul declares, "For in grace . . . are you saved" (Eph.2:8). We have all that we enjoy in Christ, because we are saved in grace. It is true, in the nature of things, that we are saved by grace, for we are saved by God Who acts in grace in saving us. "Grace," however, is in the dative case, and this idea is most clearly conveyed in English by the word "in" (or "to," or "into"). It speaks of the sphere in which salvation occurs, in which we find ourselves, the effectual agency of which having wrought our salvation.

We are about to address the question of the words "through faith," which we omitted (indicated by the elliptical dots) in our citation from Ephesians 2:8 in the previous paragraph. We did so not because we wish to minimize them or pass them by altogether, but because we wish to show that they do not represent the primary revelation here. The emphasis of this passage is upon God's grace, not the means which it employs.

FAITH IS A CHANNEL

It is frequently very helpful to simplify a statement into its most basic form, for apart from the wider thought of its complete expression, the basic expression of a thought in itself remains fully true. For example, if we are told that "thus God loves the world, that He gives His only-begotten Son . . . ." (John 3:16a), it must be so, first of all, that "God loves the world." He could not love the world "thus" if He did not love the world at all.

Similarly, we could never be saved in grace "through faith," if it were not first of all true that, in any case, "in grace . . . are you saved." We have been saved in grace.

The revelation of any further particulars concerning our salvation in grace will not change this fact.

In most considerations of the phrase, "through faith," "through" is usually ignored altogether, "faith" alone being given any attention. Yet what does it mean for something to come to us "through" something else? That is, what does "through" mean? "Through" is a preposition which means "by way of." A synonym for "through" is "by means of." That which serves as the means through which something else is achieved, is merely a channel. It is the means which the one who achieves the objective in view uses in order to accomplish his purpose.

The fact that God uses the faith that we have[2]—which He first of all grants us—in order to effect one aspect or another of the salvation which He Himself thus works in us, does not make faith into some type of contributing factor which ultimately owes its existence to the flesh and not to God.

GOD'S APPROACH PRESENT

Similarly, before giving emphasis to our own pursuit of a righteous walk, we would emphasize God's righteousness, and seek to perceive its significance as well as its achievements. God's righteousness is manifested to us "through Jesus Christ's faith" (Rom.3:22). Even Christ's faith, His faithful obedience to God even unto the death of the cross, is only the channel of God's own righteousness. Ultimately, it is the Deity Himself Who alone is our God and Saviour. Our Lord's sacrifice would have occurred in vain were it not the fulfilling of God's own counsels (cp Acts 2:23; 3:18; 4:27,28).

In speaking of our glorious salvation in grace through faith, Paul would have us know that "this is not out of you;

2. More likely "through Jesus Christ's faith" as in the next paragraph; cf Romans in Ephesians, p.179.

it is God's approach present, not of works, lest anyone should be boasting" (Eph.2:8b,9). We doubt that any are so foolish to suggest that salvation itself is actually man's creation and that God only makes use of it after it comes to Him "out of us." This cannot be what the words, "this is not out of you" are denying (Eph.2:8b). Rather, Paul's point is that it is not due to something from (i.e., "out of") us that we now find ourselves in Christ and the beneficiaries of God's saving operations.

Instead, our salvation in grace through faith, is God's "approach present" (dōron, GIVE-GUSH). Our salvation, in its entirety is a present! It is that which God has given us out of His love. Dōron is practically the same word as dōrea (GIVE-GUSH) and is defined for us by the adjectival form, (dōrean) (GIVE-GUSHed), which means "gratuitously" or "freely."

This clearly shows that it is completely mistaken to conceive of one's faith as a means of qualification, a practical warrant entitling its bearer to God's salvation while placing the Deity under obligation to grant it, as if He had promised to do so on such a basis.

In Greek this special form, doron, served to represent the Hebrew "corban" (korban, Heb. qrbn, NEAR, approach; Mark 7:11). In the figure, here in Ephesians 2:8b, instead of the sinner bringing a sacrificial gift unto God, God brings a sacrificial gift on behalf of the sinner in order that he may approach unto God! The gift has already been purchased and its character fully determined before we are even told what it is. Any "rejection" of it by ourselves will not change the fact that it is ours. That is, this will be so if we are indeed among God's chosen ones, which is evidenced not by our understanding of these mature revelations of Ephesians but by our basic faith in Christ's death and resurrection.

Indeed, if we should reject the salvation encompassed in the approach present of God of Ephesians 2:8, it can only be because we really do not believe at all, or because while we do believe in Christ and His sacrificial death, we do not yet believe what God actually says as to the nature of His approach present for us which is presented in this passage. This, of course, will not change the character of God's gift; it will only mean that, at present, we cannot enjoy what we actually possess, being in the trap of the Adversary, having been caught alive by him, for that one's will (cf 2 Tim.2:25,26).

THE DOINGS OF GOD

Our salvation is not out of ourselves. We do not possess it because we have done this or that in order to acquire it. Consequently, boasting is debarred (Rom.3:27). This is because we are God's achievement. "For His achievement are we" (Eph.2:10a). We are saved because we are God's achievement. It is just that simple and this is fully the truth.

The word "achievement," is poiêma (DO-effect). We are the product of God's doings. It is only unbelief that will seek to modify this or to explain it away. This unbelief is due to the deceptive influences of the worldly philosophy known as free will. We do not care for the fact that we ourselves, who effect much evil and some good, are the product of God's own doings.

God, however, is able to operate in us, to will and to work for the sake of His delight (Phil.2:13), so that we think of these matters continually, and in a profitable and uplifting way. As those who are God's achievement, being created in Christ Jesus for good works, ones which God Himself prepared beforehand, there is no possibility but that we should be walking in them. Indeed, since the subjunctive, "should," in this case, points us only to God, the good works to which it refers are just as certain to be accomplished as would be the case had the indicative "shall" been used instead.

May God grant us a foretaste of the superabundant and transcendent good works of the future in a measure of good works even now, even if the best of these should be totally eclipsed when compared to our labors to come, during the oncoming eons, when we are conformed to the image of God's Son and seated together among the celestials (Rom.8:29; Eph.2:6).

"Lest anyone should be boasting"—lest we ourselves should artfully contrive some way to look to and lean upon the flesh—we would glory only in God and in His Christ. We are saved in grace through faith, faith being an assumption, based upon God's own word, concerning what is already true prior to and apart from our conviction in it. "For His achievement are we, being created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God makes ready beforehand, that we should be walking in them" (Eph.2:10).

ROMANS IN EPHESIANS

IN an article entitled "Whose Faith?" appearing in Unsearchable Riches, volume 112, p.111-118, I claim that in at least two places what Paul says in Romans is repeated quite closely in Ephesians: ". . . being justified gratuitously in His [God's] grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus [through Jesus Christ's faith] . . . boasting . . . is debarred" (Rom.3:22,24,27); "for in that grace are you ones having been saved through [Christ Jesus's] faith, and this is not out of you; it is God's approach present, not of works lest anyone should boast" (Eph.2:7,8). Then in Romans 5:2 Paul speaks of our access by that faith [of our Lord Jesus Christ] into this grace in which we stand, while in Ephesians 3:12 he says that "in [Christ Jesus our Lord] we are having boldness and access with confidence through His faith."

To be sure the evangel in Ephesians is that of salvation, while in Romans it is justification. And the source and channel of both justification and salvation is out of and through Christ's faith, for our faith (cf Rom.1:17; Phil.3:7-9). We might conclude, then, that justification is salvation from unrighteousness unto being constituted righteous, and this is for our believing (and listening). D.H.H.

LISTENING TO GOD'S EVANGEL OF JOY

WHEN Paul first presented God's evangel concerning His Son (of which he was not ashamed) in Romans 1:16,17, he described it as God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it. "For in it God's righteousness is being revealed out of [Jesus Christ's[1]] faith, for [everyone who is believing's] faith." So now the apostle will speak of this evangel as the joy of God (Rom.5:15) in "the listening of the One, Jesus Christ" (Rom.5:19) for our listening (Rom.6:16-23).

THEREFORE

"Therefore" in light of what has been said before concerning the death of Jesus Christ for sinners (Rom.5:1-11), this matter of sin and death comes before us in greater detail in Romans 5:12. But it only gets as far as how these two evils relate to human beings. There is an "even as" concerning us, but not yet a "thus also" concerning Jesus Christ.

As for human beings our attention is first directed to one human (Adam, whose name means "Human"). It is through him that the sin enters into the world (the system of things).

Through one man only (not through all of us, and even Eve is left out here) the sin enters into the system of things. Paul does not direct attention to sin in general (though that is also true) but to a definite, specific missing of the mark of

1. Jesus Christ's: as in Rom.3:22, the same designation given to God's Son in Rom.1:6,8 and 2:16, Who now in 1:17 is called "the Righteous One."

righteousness. He tells us what this particular sin is when he resumes the "even as" in verse 19, and there he supplies the "thus also." The sin is the BESIDE-HEARing[2], the setting aside of the message of instruction which the one human hears, which is: "From every tree of the garden you may eat, yea eat. But from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, you must not eat from it . . ." (Gen.2:16,17a).

Indeed Adam hears this instruction, but he puts what he hears in Genesis 2 aside and listens to Eve who had listened to the serpent and was deceived. We may say that he also sees that the fruit is desirable, and even that he remembers Yahweh Elohim's words of Genesis 2:24 about clinging to the woman. In any case he makes his choice and can do no other. He disregards Genesis 2:17a and thus his sin becomes a particular transgression of law (Rom.5:14) and a particular offense (Rom.5:16) to the God.

It is through this particular sin that a particular death enters the world. This death is the death described in the warning: "for on the day you eat from it, to die you shall be dying" (Gen.2:17b). We are all familiar with that death, for it passes through from Adam into all human beings. We are dying unto the point of death. This is the death of Romans 5:12. It is not the death of Romans 6:3-7 where we hear of "the death of Him," that is of Christ Jesus, into which we are baptized in spirit (1 Cor.12:12). The death of Romans 5 is one of great evil. But the death of Romans 6 is one of great goodness, righteousness and glory, for this death puts the evil death to death (to be realized in God's own time). And this is for all, for in that Christ dies for all, all die (2 Cor.5:14), and ". . . since in fact through a human comes death, through a Human also comes the resurrection of the dead ones. For even as, in Adam, all are dying, thus also, in Christ, shall all be vivified" (1 Cor.15:21,22).

2. The use of this term in Mark 5:36 shows it does not signify "disobey" but rather, "disregard."

That sin of disregarding God's words of instruction leads to the death of dying unto the state of death, the death of mortality and its consequence. Then also we are told here that the death described in Genesis 2:17b passes through into all humans beings.

So Paul brings us to the words "on which" in Romans 5:12 concerning which there is a great deal of controversy because of a failure to listen to what they say. The preposition "on" may seem strange here (but it does not mean "for"). But the pronoun "which" most certainly refers to "the death," grammatically and logically. It is only because this is denied for theological reasons, for predetermined convictions which arise from human reasoning that what is said here is set aside. Nevertheless it is on the basis of the death of Genesis 2:17b that "all sin." The many human sinners are constituted sinners because of the disease of death that is in them which no medicine and no religion can remove.

Only the death of Jesus Christ can rid the world of that which entered through Adam.

THUS ALSO

We, then, come to the "thus also" of Romans 5:19b which carries forward the "even as" of Romans 5:19a and the "even as" of Romans 5:12 as well. This "thus also" is God's evangel concerning His Son. It has already been presented over and over again, and with striking clarity in the present context in Romans 4:24-5:11 and even more recently in 5:16-18. But now in verse 19 this evangel is put in glorious contrast to what has been said about "the sin" and "the death" and "the disregarding" which relate to the one human, Adam, and drastically affect all of us.

The translation, "through the obedience," as in most English versions including the previous editions of the CV does not represent the Greek thought as well as it probably did when the AV was translated. The word "obedience" was directly carried over from the Latin word which meant something like "toward hearing," that is, the action of directing one's attention to what has been heard. Similarly the Greek word was composed of the elements: UNDER-HEARing, giving a sense of submission to what was heard. In Greek, in Latin, and even in middle English[3], a sense of hearing or listening was dominant.

But in modern English that sense has almost disappeared. My American Heritage Dictionary (Second College Edition, 1982) defines "obedience" as "The quality or condition of being obedient" and "obedient" as "Obeying or carrying out a request or command; dutiful," which is indeed true of our Lord in dying for our sins. But Paul's word is focusing on the quality or condition of attentive hearing,—not the carrying out of an instruction but of listening to it. My dictionary defines "listen" as "1. To make an effort to hear something. 2. To pay attention; give heed." That reflects the sense of under-hear and toward-hear quite well. While Adam set aside what he heard in Genesis 2:17 Jesus Christ paid attention with intense faithfulness to such passages as Genesis 22 and Isaiah 53 (and Habakkuk 2:3,4).

The evangel tells of our Lord's hearing submissively, that is, listening to the instructions of His God and Father concerning what He was to observe and do. All that He hears He does despite the opposition from His disciples and the jibes and cruel taunts of the crowd as well as His own will to avoid the cup of suffering and forsakenness He was to drink. We however are to listen attentively to the revelations of joyous justification, conciliation, salvation and deliverance which the evangel declares, and do so without diluting the glory of Christ's listening by inserting something of ourselves for boasting.

Joy to God for the listening of His Son, Whom He spares not but gives up for us all. And joy to God for the evangel concerning the listening of His Son which is for our listening.

JOY

It needs to be seen, then, that the Greek word, charis, which is translated "grace" in most of its occurrences is essentially a matter of JOY. Hence it is first defined in the KEYWORD CONCORDANCE (p.132) as "an act producing happiness," and in ENGLISHMAN'S GREEK CONCORDANCE as "that which gives joy, pleasure, delight . . . ." This fundamental meaning of charis is not directly brought out in the widely used work, A GREEK-ENGLISH LEXICON OF THE NEW TESTAMENT prepared by William F. Arndt and F. Wilbur Gingrich[4], but there it is noted at the beginning that "It seems that charis is not always clearly differentiated in meaning from chara" which is consistently rendered "joy."

I would say, judging by its usage, that charis always conveys much the same sense as chara, and in one way or another all Greek words in the char- family (e.g., chairō= "rejoice"). It is to be noted that charis is sometimes rendered thanks as in Romans 6:17 and 2 Corinthians 9:15, but in those cases the word "joy" would serve as well (i.e., to give God charis is to give Him joy).

However, a problem has been introduced by giving charis a second associated definition which has confused our understanding of its essential meaning. That is, after giving charis the meaning of happiness (representing the root sense of JOY), the KEYWORD CONCORDANCE adds that it is "a benefit bestowed on one who deserves the opposite," and THE ENGLISHMAN'S GREEK CONCORDANCE adds as a "b" definition: "grace, undeserved favor." Indeed in the contexts of Romans 3:24 and 5:15-21 the charis (as well as the charisma) is undeserved. This is true of God's evangel. We do not deserve the joy of justification, of conciliation, of salvation, of reconciliation, whether present in spirit or future in full experience and enjoyment—joy that is based on God's giving of His Son and His Son's response in faith and His listening to the will of God. But the undeservedness is not brought out solely by the word charis, but by its association with the word "gratuity" (dōrea), and by the fact that we are sinners.

When we see how dominantly joy defines grace we may come to see that "the grace of God" as Paul speaks of it in Romans 5:15 is a reflection of Isaiah 53:9,10 where the prophet declares: "Although He does no wrong, And no deceit is in His mouth, Yet Yahweh, He desires to crush Him, And He causes Him to be wounded"! Such a joy and such a desire can be understood only by the results of Christ's listening unto death, even the death of the cross. "Wherefore God highly exalts Him and graces [rejoices] Him with the Name that is above every name" (Phil.2:9).

How can we listen to such a revelation without exclaiming "Joy be to God!"

SUPEREXCEEDS

In Romans 5:20,21 Paul declares, ". . . where the sin increases, the joy grace superexceeds, that even as the sin reigns in death, thus also the joy grace shall reign through righteousness for life eonian through Jesus Christ, our Lord." Then immediately the questions of Romans 6:1,2 come up: "What, then, shall we be declaring? That we may be persisting in sin that joy grace shall increase?" That idea is decisively dismissed: "May it not come to that!"

The declarations of 5:20,21 are positive and fully in accord with God's evangel concerning His Son. The declaration of 6:1,2 is rejected and is not to be declared as evangel. To say that the grace which is God's joy in the giving of His Son to the death of the cross could be something that increases as we persist in sin is sorely to mistake that grace. The joyous grace is the act of God that superexceeds over the entirety of sin introduced through the sin of Adam in ignoring God's instruction. That grace is the once and for all (Rom.6:10) death of Jesus Christ our Lord in which we die to sin. That grace, as it affects us is our inclusion with Christ in His death, being entombed together in His entombment that we shall walk in newness of life when we are vivified in Him. Such a grace cannot be increased—certainly not by anything we do. It is superexcessive over all sin, for the doing is that of our Lord in giving Himself for our sins. That has been done. The superexcessiveness of that grace over our sins and the whole problem of sin cannot be increased!

The very idea that something we do makes it necessary for what God has done through His Son to somehow be increased must be rejected. May it not come to that!

Let us then be declaring God's evangel as it is expressed in Romans 1:17 and 3:21-28 and Romans 5:1-21 and Romans 6:2-7 (not excepting what it says in Romans 4 and 6: 8-8:38) and throughout Paul's letters). Let us be enslaved to listening to the teaching to which we are given over (Rom.6:17,18). This is God's power for being saved in the present—God's power as it is being believed (Rom.1:16). And this is ultimately for all (Rom.3:22; 2 Cor.5:14), everyone of whom shall be constituted righteous (Rom.5:19). Yet in that God has graciously (joyfully) endowed us with a message of faith, this evangel is already saving us in many special ways (1 Tim.4:10) and with full enjoyment in the oncoming eons. Joy be to God for His superexcessive joy to us and His indescribable gratuity!

THE SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD

In Greek the subjunctive verb (indicated in the CV by the words "should" and "may") is closely allied in its usage with the future indicative (that which "shall" or "will" be). It serves many times to draw our attention to a preceding statement which stands as its basis. We see this in Romans 6:6 where the subjunctive is indicated by the word "may." The contingency expressed by the verb "may be nullified" rests on whether or not it is certain that our old humanity is crucified, and this is what God has done in including us in Christ. In effect Paul is saying that our old humanity is crucified so that the body of sin shall be nullified. He certainly is not saying that the body of sin ought to be nullified. It shall be nullified. That is a certainty.

Yet somehow many take Paul as saying in Romans 6:4, that we ought to be walking in newness of life. Whether or not that is so, it is not what is being said here. Rather, the "should" is clearly to be understood as what shall be. "Even as Christ was roused from among the dead ones through the glory of the Father, thus we also shall walk in newness of life" through the glory of the Father. It is not through our efforts but through the glory of the Father in rousing Christ out of death.

This is the evangel of our future walk in newness of life gained for us by means of the glory of the Father. His glory is His giving of life, and we shall walk in newness of life even as Christ "is living," that is, "living to the God" (Rom.6:10).

This is our expectation. "For if we have become planted together in the likeness of His death, nevertheless we shall be living together with Him also" (Rom.6:5).

As for the present, it is in view of what God's evangel says concerning the death and rousing of Christ Jesus and us together with Him that Paul urges us to be presenting ourselves as slaves of listening.

LISTENING FROM THE HEART

If, however, a sense of carrying out instructions is in view here, it is puzzling how we can carry out the type of teaching to which we are given over. That type of teaching is a revelation of salvation and justification and deliverance and joy and peace already carried out in Christ Jesus and most certainly to be enjoyed in the future. How does one obey (in its current sense) a message that is apart from law? How does one carry out a revelation of the righteousness of God in gratuitously justifying sinners in His joyous grace? How does one carry out what has been carried out and is already made certain?

In Romans 6:16-22 Paul sees the primarily essential act of a slave is to listen attentively to what his or her master says. That act is to be carried out indeed, but we mistake it if we think what we hear in the evangel of God concerning His Son involves the carrying out of a type of teaching which was given to Israel, in the law.

The point Paul makes in Romans 6 is, therefore, not that we are obligated to cease sinning and live a new life, but that we are to listen with attention to God's evangel of joy concerning His Son. This evangel of the death and rousing of Christ and what it means to us is presented as a certainty. Nothing we do or do not do changes what is done and shall be. But there is spiritual power for the present salvation of joy and peace and other qualities of the fruit of the spirit (Gal.5:22) in our continued listening to this teaching of gratuitous joy.

EDITORIAL

THIS is a time of transition and adjustment for this magazine. I am no longer involved actively in its production and have requested that my name be withdrawn from the title page. Nevertheless I am writing this editorial. As has been so for many years, there are several workers involved in the production of this instrument of the Concordant Publishing Concern. And so it continues.

Yet I am grateful for this opportunity to speak personally here at the beginning of volume 116. What I wrote about "listening" and "joy" and "should" in the last issue keeps running through my head, and I would very much like to add a few words on these matters of the evangel.

My concern is mainly that what Paul writes with clarity in Romans 5 not be diluted by what he writes in chapters 6-8. We have already seen that the properly grammatical rendering of the phrase "faith of Jesus Christ" (not "faith in Jesus Christ") in Romans 3:22 opens up the harmony of the opening four chapters with chapter 5. When Paul speaks of Jesus Christ's faith he is saying the same thing as the words stated more plainly in Romans 5:8, "Christ dies for our sakes." The faith of Jesus Christ in dying for our sakes is God's evangel concerning His Son which is for our faith. Similarly, this evangel is worded in Romans 5:19 as "the listening [UNDER-HEARing] of the One," and it is this which is for our listening as a slave listens to the words of his or her master (Rom.6:16-18). The English word "obedience" no longer conveys a sense of attentive hearing as it once did. It is true that a slave is obligated to carry out instructions, but first it is critical to listen carefully to such instructions. To do what is not instructed and fail to do what is instructed is actually to be disobedient and may have harmful consequences. But what God says to us is "apart from law" (Rom.3:21), that is apart from instruction of what we are to do or not do. Rather we hear a message of revelation of what God has done through His Son and what this reveals about God. It is a message of joyous achievement. Our Lord, however, heard a message of what He was to do, or rather more exactly, what was to be done to Him. His listening was most attentive and submissive, first as His faith which was of the highest and purest quality. Our listening (or paying attention) to God's evangel of joy and peace concerning the death and rousing of Jesus Christ is, by comparison, more flawed (for we are sinners who are dying), but nevertheless Paul urges us to present ourselves as slaves of listening from the heart to the type of teaching to which we are given over.

This type of teaching is one of joy and peace. To be sure, the joy is undeserved and gratuitous, so it differs from the joy we give to God in the form of abundantly deserved thanks and praise for not sparing His own Son but giving Him up for us all. But in both cases the Greek word used (charis) conveys the sense of joy.

Accordingly I believe we must see that Paul's use of the subjunctive "should" in Romans 6:4 does not convey a sense of "ought," but a sense of certainty concerning the future, as in Romans 3:4 where "should" exactly matches "shall."

All of this calls for testing. A list of all the passages where a form of the Greek word UNDER-HEAR appears would be helpful with some form of the English word "listen" used. I am not opposed to obedience, but as that word is understood today the sense of the original term, UNDER-HEAR, is in danger of getting lost. As listening slaves we are to be listening attentively to God's evangel concerning His Son.

Dean H. Hough

THE "MYSTICAL" BODY OF CHRIST

"For even as, in one body, we have many members, yet all the members have not the same function . . ." (Rom.12:4).

"God blends the body together . . . that there may be no schism in the body, but the members may be mutually solicitous for one another" (1 Cor.12:24).

"Making peace . . . reconciling both [groups, Uncircumcision and Circumcision] in one body" (Eph. 2:15,16).

TO GET AT THE VERY HEART of the secret unfolded in Ephesians is a great spiritual achievement, far beyond the soulish man (1 Cor.2:14) and impossible to minors in Christ (1 Cor.3:1-4). It has become so mysterious that it is well called a "mystery."

Even among those well advanced in truth, who have not shaken themselves entirely free of the shackles which once bound them, there is much misapprehension on this matter. Well do we remember the notable series of articles on this subject by Dr. Bullinger. But even he made the Ephesian secret the body of Christ, as many spiritual divines, especially among the Puritans, had done before him. That position is well crystallized in the phrase "the mystical body of Christ." My own suspicions were aroused by the fact that no such phrase is found in Scripture. This led me to inquire what "the mystery" really is.

After much study, I found the answer to my quest in the categorical statement of Ephesians 3:6. There it is defined for us so clearly and concisely that we need never be at a loss as to its precise provisions. There we are told that, in spirit, the nations are to be > joint enjoyers of an allotment, > and a joint body, > and joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which Paul became the dispenser.

That the nations were to be heirs or allottees was no secret. Long before this Paul had written to the Roman believers: "For you did not get slavery's spirit to fear again, but you got the spirit of sonship, in which we are crying, 'Abba, Father!' The spirit itself is testifying together with our spirit that we are children of God. Yet if children, enjoyers also of an allotment, enjoyers, indeed, of an allotment from God" (Rom.8:15-17). Similarly he expostulates with the Galatians: "Now, seeing that you are sons, God delegates the spirit of His Son into our hearts, crying 'Abba, Father!' So that you are no longer a slave, but a son. Now if a son, an enjoyer also of God's allotment, through Christ" (Gal.4:6-8).

That the believers among the nations were members of the body of Christ was no secret either, as we propose to show.

THE BODY AS A FIGURE

The word "body" is frequently used as a faded figure for any group of people, as we say of a crowd, "They went to the place in a body." We wish, however, to consider particularly those passages where the body is used in a definitely figurative sense in the Scriptures, and see if we cannot correct our thoughts and expressions to accord therewith.

ISRAEL FIGURED AS A BODY

Before considering the special figures usually associated with the ecclesia of the one body it may be well to consider the word "body" as figuring other things. When our Lord was explaining to His disciples how it would be when the Son of Mankind is unveiled, they say to Him, "Where, Lord?" In reply He speaks this enigmatic parable: "Wherever the body is, there the vultures also will be assembled" (Luke 17:37). In the parallel passage (Matt. 24:28) the body is called a corpse. The most probable interpretation makes the body to be Jacob, as the victim of the nations in his time of trouble. As the vultures assemble about a dead body, so will the nations of the end time be drawn together to destroy Israel. Here the word body is used of those whom we usually exclude from "the body."

THE BODY OF JESUS

Our Lord used His physical frame in a figurative way frequently. He would have them eat His flesh (John 6:51). To this they took violent exception, because they did not recognize His meaning. Our life depends on food and drink. Just so our spiritual life depends on Christ. Unless we get nourishment from Him we will die.

The figure used in the Lord's dinner is different. There we have emblems, which we may literally eat and drink. And here it is His broken or given body and His shed blood, tokens of His sufferings and death, which are brought to our recollection, not merely to our minds, but to our feelings, by this figure.

HIS BODY IS A TEMPLE

He also compared His whole body to a temple (John 2:21). The Jews asked for a sign, and He answered, "Raze this temple and in three days I will raise it up." They should have realized that the literal pile of stones before them did not really house the Deity. God lived in His body, hence it was well worthy of the figurative appellation, "temple." They razed it and He raised it.

THE BODY AND BLOOD OF THE LORD

Those who delight in the exquisite diction of the Scriptures, and especially in the marvelous way in which the titles of our Saviour are varied to agree with the context, will enjoy the change from the communion of the blood and the body of Christ (1 Cor.10:16), to eating and drinking unworthily of the body and blood of the Lord. It is precisely the same body and the same blood, but the viewpoint in one case is privilege, in the other conduct. The passage follows (1 Cor.11:27,29):

> So that, whoever should be eating the bread or drinking the cup of the Lord unworthily, will be liable for the body and the blood of the Lord. . . . For he who is eating and drinking unworthily is eating and drinking judgment to himself, not discriminating the body of the Lord.

The Corinthians seem to have made a literal meal of this figurative memorial. They ate when hungry, instead of waiting to partake of the memorial in common with the rest. To set this right, they were disciplined. That which figures sacred spiritual realities must not be made a means of physical and literal satisfaction.

THE BODY OF CHRIST

The body of Christ is literally, of course, the same as the body of Jesus, or of the Lord. But, in figures of speech, the title used indicates a vast difference, which must be noted, or its force will be lost. Perhaps we should vary the title "Christ" occasionally for its equivalent, "Anointed," to show its official character. The main need, however, in these days, is to distinguish the various figures in which the body of Christ is employed. The thoughtless acceptance of these as one and the same has created much confusion, which need not continue if we will only test each context carefully for the literal interpretation. In figures, each usage stands by itself, and cannot be transported into another context. The word "body" here may figure one thing, yet quite another picture may be presented there. This is exceedingly important in concordant study. The meaning of a word is constant. It is the same everywhere. On the contrary, the figurative usage is special. It may occur nowhere else.

The first occurrence of the phrase, "the body of Christ," has been largely overlooked, because the figure does not fit well with so-called "body truth," which deals with the believers of this administration as a whole, not as individuals. But the individual saint has a relation to the body of the Anointed quite apart from his place in the one body. In dealing with the law, the apostle writes, "you also were put to death to the law through the body of Christ . . ." (Rom.7:4). Here we have the death of the body, and through that death all who are in Christ and under law, die to law. The important point for us, in this study, is to see that there is an individual relationship to the literal body of the individual Christ.

Let us foolishly try to carry over the "one body truth" into this passage, as is sometimes done with other texts. Then the "body of Christ" dies, literally, and through that death those in it who were under the law of Moses are dead to it! But when did it die? And how could the death of its members, in any sense, provide a release from the law? Is it not clear that "the body of Christ," though usually used figuratively of a company of saints, can also be used literally of His actual body of flesh and bones?

THE PERSONAL BODY OF CHRIST

To clear the way, let us first consider those passages in which the personal body of our Lord is referred to. When He said "This is My body" (Matt.26:26; Mark 14:22; Luke 22:19; 1 Cor.11:24), the bread was not transmuted into flesh, hence His words are not true as to fact. The figure is explained to us by Paul by the words communion and partaking (1 Cor.10:16):

> The cup of blessing which we are blessing, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we are breaking, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? . . . all are partaking of the one bread.

That the one body of the saints is not in view here is evident from the parallel with the blood. The believers have in common both the blood and the body of Christ. By the figure of Association (usually called Metonymy) we partake of the benefits associated with the sufferings by His sheltering blood and the sustenance suggested by the bread and body.

THE BELIEVERS TODAY AS A BODY

We should seek to draw a clear line between those figures already presented, in which we partake of Christ and He comes to be in us, and those to which we now turn, in which we are in Christ. In these alone we have what is intended by the phrase "body truth." The blessings in store for Israel were shadowed by food and drink and festivals and sabbaths, but our blessings are in Christ, and are illustrated by various points which are literally true of His physical body.

MANY MEMBERS WITH DIFFERENT FUNCTIONS

Paul uses the body as a figure first in Romans 12:4,5:

> For even as, in one body, we have many members, yet all the members have not the same function, thus > we, who are many, are one body in Christ, yet individually members of one another.

Let us note carefully just what the picture here really illustrates. It is not the relation of Christ to the saints which is uppermost, but of believers to one another. There were many different kinds of persons, with varying functions among them, yet all are in Christ, hence, like the members of the human body, all cooperate and are dependent on one another, and make one complete whole, because all have the same spirit.

If we are accurate in our statements we will not refer to this as the body of Christ. The literal is our body, not necessarily that body which He has in glory. The emphasis is on the individual members, as is fitting in Romans. They are spoken of as members of one another. The point is not their relationship to Christ. They are "in Christ," but the figure does not illustrate that. The emphasis is laid on the variety of functions in many members, which make up one body. Literally, it may be interpreted thus: The believers in Christ form a single organism, although they are given different gifts. These graces are complementary, so that the whole makes one complete organism. Let us carefully keep this figure distinct from similar ones in Corinthians and Ephesians. These are not "different bodies" but different figures concerning the same company of believers. In Romans we may take our own body as the basis of the figure, but in Corinthians the picture varies. In some connections it is our body (1 Cor.12:23), but it begins and ends with the body of Christ (1 Cor.12:12,27).

THE FIGURATIVE BODY OF CHRIST

In order to explain the spiritual endowments of the believers, the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians uses a figure almost identical with that used in Romans. There it is illustrated by any body. Now the figure is expanded and enriched. As all the saints are anointed by God's spirit, the ecclesia is compared with the body of the Anointed. It is called "the Christ" or "the Anointed" (1 Cor.12:12). In Romans, the emphasis was placed on the diversity of the members. In Corinthians it lies on their unity. This unity is brought about by the baptism of the spirit. See how the figures are mixed! We can baptize many "bodies" and thus unite them, but you can hardly baptize the members of one body to unite them! But the literal is clear. All who enter the sphere of God's spirit are incorporated into one body.

The fullest unfolding of this figure is found in this passage. The object is to illustrate the relation of the believers to one another, especially in regard to the spiritual endowments which obtained at that time. It will be worth our while to study the occurrences of this figure very carefully, hence we will give the full text of this passage.

1 CORINTHIANS 12:12-31

For even as the body is one and has many members, yet all the members of the one body, being many, are one body, thus also is the Christ. For in one spirit also we all are baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free, and all are made to imbibe one spirit.

For the body also is not one member, but many. If the foot should be saying, "Seeing that I am not a hand, I am not of the body," not for this is it not of the body. And if the ear should be saying, "Seeing that I am not an eye, I am not of the body," not for this is it not of the body. If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the scent? Yet now God placed the members, each one of them, in the body according as He wills. Now if it were all one member, where were the body?

> Yet now there are, indeed, many members, yet one body. Yet the eye cannot say to the hand, "I have no need of you," or, again, the head to the feet, "I have no need of you." Nay, much rather, those members belonging to the body supposed to be weaker are necessary, and which we suppose to be a more dishonored part of the body, these we are investing with more exceeding honor, and our indecent members have more exceeding respectability. Now our respectable members have no need, but God blends the body together, giving to that which is deficient more exceeding honor, that there may be no schism in the body, but the members may be mutually solicitous for one another. And whether one member is suffering, all the members are sympathizing, or one member is being esteemed, all the members are rejoicing together with it.
> Now you are the body of Christ, and members of a part, whom also God, indeed, placed in the ecclesia, first, apostles, second, prophets, third, teachers, thereupon powers, thereupon graces of healing, supports, pilotage, species of languages. Not all are apostles. Not all are prophets. Not all are teachers. Not all have powers. Not all have the graces of healing. Not all are speaking languages. Not all are interpreting. Yet be zealous for the greater graces. And still I am showing you a path, suited to transcendence.

First let us note that it illustrates a temporary condition. It is suited to the grace then shown to the nations, but this was far below that which was revealed later. But, when the path suited to transcendence led to maturity, the figure of the body was not abandoned. It was used over again seven times, but always with a different point. The human body is not merely a composite unit, as here set forth. It may be looked at as needing food, or as being cherished, as executing the will of the mind, etc. In these and other relationships the ecclesia is also called a body.

In order to keep from confounding this figure with that of Christ's headship, let us note carefully that the growth and subjection of the believers is quite foreign to the theme here. The saints are the complete body of Christ, head included. The ear, the eye, the scent, are all members even though they are in the head. The relation of Christ to this body is not that of Head. He is All. Just as His literal body in glory consists of feet and hands and head, so His figurative body is a complete organism, and His spirit gives life to every member, whether it is the lowest (the feet) or the highest (such as the eyes in the head). And He is full grown. No growth is possible on the part of His literal body, so that it cannot be used to illustrate growth or increase. Growth is true only where He is the figurative Head (Eph.4:16).

The literal truth so graphically set forth under the figure of the body (in 1 Cor.12:12-31) should be clear to each one. It is the spirit they receive which unites all who are in Christ, and which gives them the power of cooperation and mutual sympathy. The more this spirit fills us the more this will be apparent. The less there is of it the less we will see of the cooperative unity and sympathy which should be the most marked feature of the church.

It is seldom, indeed, that a figure is so detailed as in this example. There are many points of contact. There are many members in one organism, and mutual dependence, helpfulness, and sympathy.

THE BODY IN THIS SECRET ADMINISTRATION

Ephesians does not repeat all that Paul gives us in his previous epistles, even if it is included in the truth for today. It simply incorporates what was already revealed by referring to it under some clear designation. Thus, little is said of our expectation in this epistle, yet the subject is based upon what had been made known before.

"Those who are in a state of prior expectancy" clearly recognize what he had written to the Thessalonians and Corinthians (Eph.1:12); then follows the prayer that they should be able to perceive the prospect now revealed (Eph.1:18), and the exhortation to keep the unity made by the one expectation (Eph.4:4).

So also with the truth of our spiritual union in Christ. No detailed illustration is needed, since it has already been given, and the saints associated with Paul's ministry have come to be called "the ecclesia which is His body" (Eph.1:23). It is the special designation for them when their relation to Christ is before us, as the expression "body-church" is with some today. Since, in fact, the same believers and the same unity are shown by the same figure we are hardly justified in making different bodies of these.

THE JOINT BODY

At this point I hope to help our friends by freely confessing my own failure in confusing the figure used in Ephesians with that in First Corinthians. Even though there is a basis in fact, as we shall see, the two figures are too different to form a direct contrast. More mature reflection has led me to see that the joint body of Ephesians and the one body of Corinthians must not be mixed in our minds. They were made by different methods and cover distinct areas of truth, which may, indeed, overlap, but are not identical. The one body was brought about by spirit baptism, and unites its many members, Jews and Greeks, but also slaves and free, and those who vary in the scale of respectability and honor. It leads to sympathy in suffering, and rejoicing in esteem. It is concerned with the mutual care we should exercise for one another while in weakness and insufficiency and shame in this nether sphere (1 Cor.12:13,26).

This joint body, however, is the result of vivifying and rousing and seating two groups of believers, those among the nations together with an election out of Israel, among the celestials (Eph.2:5,6), both groups being dead to their offenses. The action is literally true of Christ's body. In this view it is not composed of many members, but of only two groups, which have been dealt with together, or jointly. It is not concerned with their sympathetic exercise, but with the display of God's grace in the coming eons. The words joint and together are the same in the Greek, and mark a distinction between this aspect (two groups brought together) and that of a body with many members, though, of course, both describe a unity, and may be called one body.

Yet the fact that this joint body does away with the prerogatives and preeminence of Pauline Jews and gives them the same place among the celestials as believers among the nations, in Christ, has its effect on the constitution of the one body of Corinthians. This is clearly indicated by the different lists of the gifts. Those in Corinthians were suited to the time. Ephesians does not discard them all, and start fresh. It continues those suited to the new grace, drops those which are not in line with it, and adds two new ones. Apostles and prophets continued in the foundation (Eph.2:20). Teachers are still with us, as well as evangelists and pastors. As we also are baptized in one spirit, and have gifts, we, as many individuals, are one body, as in Romans and Corinthians, composed of various degrees or ranks with different functions, which are figured by the differently esteemed members of the body in all of these epistles.

Thrice, in Ephesians, the nations are addressed in order to explain their jointure with some believers out of Israel, which constitutes the secret. First, in relation to God and their celestial allotment, we read in 1:13: In Whom you also . . . are sealed with the holy spirit . . . which is an earnest of . . . our allotment. The nations are joint enjoyers of an allotment with select Israelites because they, too, have been sealed with the spirit of promise, which is its earnest. In relation to Christ the joint body is explained in 2:1-5: And you being dead . . . we also . . . God . . . vivifies us together . . . and rouses us together and seats us together among the celestials, in Christ Jesus. The nations belong to the joint body because they, as well as those of Israel whose lot was in Christ among the celestials, are vivified, roused, and seated jointly. In the coming eons our bodies will be literally raised together and He will display His transcendent grace through us. The nations form a joint body with Pauline Jews because they are vivified, roused and seated together.

In relation to each other, their joint participation is set forth in 2:11: once you, the nations in flesh, and 2:13-18: now . . . you . . . far off . . . near . . . our peace . . . both one . . . the two . . . into one . . . into one new humanity . . . we both have had access. The nations participate with selected Israelites in spirit because they are no longer shut out from access to God on account of their physical relationship.

BOTH BLESSED TOGETHER IN A JOINT BODY

Let us, then, confine the figure of the joint body to our union with the Circumcision, and let us revel in the transcendence of the grace which is thus revealed. It would have been a great mercy had we been blessed as subordinates of Israel, on the earth. Quite unthinkable would be the favor had we been made their equals in the Kingdom. Much higher than this would have been our blessing had we been put beneath them among the celestials. But how unsurpassable is the grace that blesses us together and makes us a together or joint body in the highest sphere in all the universe!

THE EVANGEL OF THE UNCIRCUMCISION

Galatians 2:6-14

IN Galatians 2:3, Paul refers to the time when "not even Titus, who is with me, being a Greek, is compelled to be circumcised." This was during the period of Paul's second visit to the holy city, after the lapse of fourteen years, when he again went up to Jerusalem together with Barnabas, taking Titus along with him (2:1). Yet while not even Titus, who was with Paul, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised, Paul adds that nonetheless, "it was because of the false brethren who were smuggled in, who came in by the way to spy out our freedom which we have in Christ Jesus, that they shall be enslaving us—"(2:4). That is—and the sense is so evident that Paul breaks off his words without actually expressing his thought—it was because of the claims (cp Acts 15:1,2,5) of certain "false brethren" that Titus was then pressed by some to be circumcised, even though even these could not well compel him to undergo the rite, contrary to the counsel of the pillars of the Jerusalem ecclesia.

Now from those reputed to be somewhat—what kind they once were is of no consequence to me (God is not taking up the human aspect)—for to me those of repute submitted nothing. But, on the contrary, perceiving that I have been entrusted with the evangel of the Uncircumcision, according as Peter of the Circumcision (for He Who operates in Peter for the apostleship of the Circumcision operates in me also for the nations), and, knowing the grace which is being given to me, James and Cephas and John, who are supposed to be pillars, give to me and

Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, that we, indeed, are to be for the nations, yet they for the Circumcision—only that we may be remembering the poor, which same thing I endeavor also to do. (2:6-10)

In speaking of the twelve as "those reputed to be somewhat," Paul should not be understood as disparaging them. Paul does not refer to any exalted claims which the twelve made for themselves, but to those advanced in favor of the twelve by the circumcisionists, in the interests of their own legalistic devisings.

Those who were apostles before Paul "submitted nothing" to him. The twelve acknowledged the message and ministry of Paul as sufficient unto itself. Paul's evangel needed no addition—and received none—from the twelve. But on the contrary, since God was operating in Paul for the apostleship of the nations, as well as in Peter for that of the Circumcision, the twelve perceived that Paul had been entrusted with the evangel of the Uncircumcision, according as Peter of the Circumcision. Hence, James, Cephas, and John "knew" the grace which was being given to Paul. As a result, they gave Paul and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, acknowledging that Paul and Barnabas were to be for the nations, yet they themselves for the Circumcision. The only word they wished to add was a request that Paul and his fellow workers may be remembering the poor among the Jews, which same thing, as Paul assures us, he endeavored also to do.

Considered in itself, it is possible to understand the phrase "the evangel of the Uncircumcision" as a metonymy for "the evangel*ization* of the Uncircumcision." But it is not translation but interpretation to render this phrase, as in most modern Bibles, "the gospel to the Uncircumcision." Such a rendering supports the popular claim that in all respects Paul's gospel is the same as that of the twelve. It gives credence as well to the related common assertion that by the words "the gospel of Christ," we are to understand a singular message of good news which, in all particulars, applies to all who are in Christ.

Both "Uncircumcision" and "Circumcision" are in the genitive case. As will be explained later in this article, the sign of the genitive in English is OF- not TO-. Ideally, objective translation requires the former and precludes the latter. There may be a few cases where, due to the idiosyncracies of English, good diction may be strained if the genitive should be represented by OF. Nearly always, however, and certainly in this case at hand, it makes perfectly good English to say "the evangel of the Uncircumcision," as much so as to say, "the epistles of the apostle Paul." They are not the epistles to the apostle Paul, but the apostle Paul's epistles. Similarly, Paul does not speak of the evangel to the Uncircumcision, but of the Uncircumcision's evangel.

No one claims that the phrase "the apostleship of the Circumcision" (2:8), ought to be translated "the apostleship to the Circumcision." Further, it should be noted that by the words which follow in verse 9, "we, indeed, are to be for [lit., "in*to*"] the nations, yet they for [i.e., "in*to*"] the Circumcision," any general thought of evangelization directed, respectively, to both the nations and the Circumcision is thereby adequately expressed. Hence it becomes all the more untenable to render verse 7 as "the evangel to the Uncircumcision."

We are plainly told that the One Who operates in Peter for the apostleship of the Circumcision, is the One Who operates in Paul also for (the apostleship of) the nations. And, the word to us also is, that Paul has been entrusted with the evangel of the Uncircumcision, according as Peter (with the evangel) of the Circumcision. Let us accept the Scripture for what it says, while adjusting our faith accordingly.

Paul speaks explicitly of "the evangel which I am heralding among the nations" (2:2); "the evangel which is being brought by me" (1:11); which he neither accepted from man nor was taught by man, that instead came to him "through a revelation of Jesus Christ" (1:12). The apostle himself will inform us as to its particulars. If we believe and understand both the revelations of Paul's evangel, according to Christ Himself, as well as the teachings of the twelve according as the Lord instructed them, we will soon know whether Paul's evangel "of the Uncircumcision" is a fresh revelation, distinct in various respects from the teaching of the twelve, or is, however expressed, essentially merely a restatement of their teaching.

It is not that the evangel of the Uncircumcision is the exclusive province of those of the nations; nor is it that the evangel of the Circumcision debars all but those who are Israelites by nature. It is rather that the evangel of the Uncircumcision is the evangel which is primarily for those of the nations, as brought to the nations through the ministry of the apostle Paul, who is the apostle of the nations (Rom.11:13; cp 1 Tim.2:7; 2 Tim.1:11; Eph.3:8).

Certain Israelites (such as Paul himself) are also called and blessed according to that evangel which, characteristically, is the evangel of the *Un*circumcision. Similarly, certain non-Israelites were themselves called and blessed according to that evangel which, characteristically, is the evangel of the Circumcision.

In the former case, any such descendants of Jacob lose their standing as Israelites and forfeit the advantages of the law—while concomitantly gaining the even greater benefits of the evangel of the Uncircumcision. If they are faithful, like Paul, they gladly forfeit all such benefits of flesh, while deeming them mere refuse (cf Phil.3:4-8).

In the latter case, like those of old who sojourned in Israel, any such non-Israelite believers who were nonetheless called and blessed according to the evangel of the Circumcision, were required to heed the law of Yahweh, which attended that evangel. Any such ones must become proselytes (cf Acts 2:10; 6:5; 13:43); that is, they must "come toward" Israel and observe the "one law," which applied not only to the native-born, but to the naturalized citizen as well (Ex.12:49). Initially, such ones had to undergo the rite of circumcision; subsequently, they would make a passover to Yahweh. They would then be deemed "natives of the land [of Israel]" (Ex.12:48,49). As naturalized Israelites, they would also be required to keep from violating the sabbaths, as well as to keep their hand from any evil, according to the law of Moses. Only thus could they hold fast to Yahweh's covenant (Isa.56:1-7; cp Acts 15:21) and be worthy of the resurrection of the just (cf Luke 14:14; 20:35; cp Matt. 5:17-20; 7:21-23).

Thus it is fitting for Paul to declare that God will be justifying the Circumcision "out of faith" and the Uncircumcision "through the faith" (Rom.3:30). In each case, the faith which justifies is "Jesus Christ's faith" (Rom.3:22); "the faith of Jesus" (Rom.3:26). As in Romans 11:36, where it is revealed that all is not only out of God, but through God as well, here too in Romans 3:30, it is certainly likewise true that under God, both the Circumcision and the Uncircumcision owe not only the origin but the agency of their justification as well to the faith of Christ.

Yet in the case of the Circumcision believers, who must center much of their attention upon their own observance of the law, it is not so obvious that even so, their justification is solely out of Jesus Christ's faith. After all, this truth, as such, is not even a part of the evangel of the Circumcision, even though it is certainly true concerning them, even as Paul declares.

However, in the case of the believers of the Uncircumcision, who are not under law at all (Rom.6:14), for whom Grace reigns even where sin increases (Rom.5:20,21), whose very evangel brings to the forefront the fact that their justification is not only out of (the faith of) Christ but is through (the faith of) Christ as well, it becomes fitting for Paul to emphasize that God will be justifying them "through the faith [of Christ]."

FEAR AND HYPOCRISY

Now when Cephas came to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, for he was self-censured. For, before the coming of some from James, he ate together with those of the nations. Yet when they came, he shrank back, and severed himself, fearing those of the Circumcision. And the rest of the Jews also play the hypocrite with him, so that Barnabas also was led away with their hypocrisy. (2:11-13)

Cephas was "self-censured" concerning his hypocrisy; he knew he was wrong and experienced guilt. Before the coming of "some from James," he had eaten together with those of the nations. "Yet when they came, he shrank back, and severed himself fearing those of the Circumcision." Then the rest of the Jews joined in, and they too played the hypocrite, together with him. They were all aware that even though the believers of the Uncircumcision did not observe the law, this was no reason to decline their fellowship, much less to sever themselves from them. It was those who came "from James" who were in the wrong, not Paul or the believers of the Uncircumcision. In supposing that those of the Uncircumcision must be circumcised and keep the law if they would be saved (cf Acts 15:1,2,5), or at this juncture, at least in imposing their own opinions as to practical holiness and perfection upon others, these unnamed men behaved most improperly. Yet to have such a profound influence not only upon Cephas but upon the rest of the Jews and even Barnabas besides, they must have been highly esteemed men of renown. Yet even so, they were in fact but self-appointed authoritarians engaging in shameful (albeit highly effective) fear tactics.

But when I perceived that they are not correct in their attitude toward the truth of the evangel, I said to Cephas in front of all, "If you, being inherently a Jew, are living as the nations, and not as the Jews, how are you compelling the nations to be judaizing?" (2:14).

It was not that they were wholly ignorant of the evangel heralded by Paul, but that they were incorrect in their attitude concerning it. They failed to give it sufficient honor and recognition. Thus under the duress of circumstance, their remarkable fear of these Circumcision authoritarians became the decisive influence in determining their behavior.

Cephas was "inherently" (i.e., originally, by right) a Jew; it was not that he had become a naturalized citizen, but that he was a Jew "by nature" (cp 2:15). Even so, in acknowledgement of Paul's evangel, Cephas properly had been living "as [those of the] nations" live, and "not as Jews," who commonly had little or no association with non-Jews. This is simply to say that in respect of free intercourse with those of the nations, Cephas, hitherto, had behaved as if he himself were one of the nations. Yet when some formidable ones from James came, due to his fear of these men of the Circumcision, he shrank back and even went so far as to sever himself from those of the nations.

How is it then, Paul asks, that you, Cephas, are compelling the nations to be judaizing? It was by no means Peter's teaching, in word, that judaizing was compulsory for those of the nations; in fact earlier, he had spoken against any such claim (cf Acts 15:7-11). Even though Cephas did not verbally affirm that it was compulsory for the nations to be judaizing, nevertheless, by his actions, he effectually did this very thing. That is, in light of Cephas' own behavior, the non-Jewish believers might well conclude that the only way for them to be accepted as faithful at least by their Jewish fellow believers if not by God Himself as well, would be by their taking up with Judaism. How inconsistent it was of Cephas to behave as he did, in light of the strong, negative influence that this would bring to bear upon the believers of the nations.

THROUGH FAITH OF CHRIST, OR FAITH IN CHRIST?

In the next article in this series, we intend to consider Galatians 2:16, which is centered in the revelation that "we may be justified through the faith of Christ and not by works of law." But in preparation for that study, we first need to consider the translation itself, "faith of Christ." This becomes a special need since most modern translations, even as they render "the evangel of the Uncircumcision" (2:7) as "the gospel to the uncircumcised" (e.g., the NASB), translate "faith of Christ" similarly, as "faith in Christ."

This question as to the sense of the phrase, "the faith x Christ," is by no means solely a question of grammar; yet it is indeed a question in which grammatical issues are an important consideration. Grammatically, the question as to what is to be understood by pistis Iesou Christou (i.e., "faith x Jesus Christ"), is a question of the usage of the genitive case. Grammatical case is the syntactical relationship of a noun, pronoun, or adjective to other words in a sentence, generally indicated by declensional endings in inflected languages (such as Greek), or by prepositions and word order in non-inflected languages (such as English).

The Greek genitive case includes the English possessive case. The genitive's presence is indicated in the CONCORDANT GREEK TEXT's sublinear by OF- (when no connective is present; e.g., "son of David," Matt.1:20). OF is intended as a neutral means by which to indicate the genitive (that is, to indicate that in some respect "this is of that").

Though the Concordant Version sometimes renders the genitive as an adjective (e.g., "His messengers OF-POWER" as "His powerful messengers," 2 Thess.1:7), otherwise, the CV nearly always represents the genitive case by the English "of."[1]

The genitive case is the case of genus or kind. It is the specifying case; the case of appurtenance. The function of the genitive is largely adjectival (e.g., "the day of preparation," was the preparation day; Luke 23:54).[2] Indeed, the Concordant Version renders "[after] the exile OF-BABYLON," as "[after] the Babylonian exile" (Matt.1:12). Similarly, "the blasphemy of the spirit" (Matt.12:31), in the Greek syntax, is "THE . . . OF THE spirit blasphemy."

The usual claim, however, is that the genitive "OF-Christ faith" is nonetheless translated true to sense as "faith in Christ," since, we are told, this phrase is an "objective genitive." It is said that as the phrase "faith of God" in Mark 11:22[3] concerns man's faith God-ward, the Pauline phrase

1. An exception is the genitive "faith OF-TRUTH" in 2 Thessalonians 2:13, which the 1976 edition renders "faith in the truth." Perhaps the idiom is along the lines of the thought that the Thessalonians' faith partook of the nature of truth. Thus it was "of-truth faith." Truth indeed fosters confidence in itself. Like ourselves, the Thessalonians found faith growing in them as they received truth; hence, "faith OF-TRUTH."

2. cp A. T. Robertson, A GRAMMAR OF THE GREEK NEW TESTAMENT, IN THE LIGHT OF HISTORICAL RESEARCH, p.493; Nashville, Tennessee: Broadman Press, 1934.

3. "And answering, Jesus is saying to them, 'if you have faith of God, verily, I am saying to you that whosoever may be saying to this mountain, 'Be picked up and cast into the sea,' and may not be doubting in his heart but should be believing that what he is speaking is occurring, it shall be his, whatsoever he may be saying." It should be noted that genuine "OF-God faith" (as opposed to mere fleshly credulity in its name), necessarily incorporates the ablative sense of faith which is from God, according as He has spoken. Only then, in turn, does it become faith that is also God-ward.

"faith of Christ" concerns man's faith Christ-ward.

The answer to this, of course, is that it does not follow that if, in the nature of the case, "faith of God" in the preceding text involves man's faith God-ward, "faith of Christ," as Paul uses this expression, refers to man's faith Christ-ward. By such faulty logic as this, nearly anything can be "proved." Yet beyond such fallacious arguments, there is little to commend the claim that "faith of Christ" means man's faith in Christ.

In fact, the main reason for the acceptance of this interpretation (which is made a part of the translation itself in most modern Bibles) is the age-old tradition that affirms that one is saved by his own believing. Such a notion is then read into the text. In turn, it is further claimed that through such very passages, Paul himself sets forth the self-same teaching. Thus, through such circular reasoning, the rendering "faith in Christ" is justified by its advocates.

All that the Greek says is: OF-Christ faith; that is, faith that, in some respect, has reference, or relates to Christ. The translation "faith in Christ," then, is not really a translation at all, but an interpretation. And, as popularly understood, it is certainly a mistaken interpretation as well.

Even on grammatical grounds the case here for an "objective" genitive (i.e., for a faith that is directed Christward) is very weak. Yet if one insists on such an interpretation, it would then become necessary to refer this "faith in Christ" to God, not to man, in order for this expression to accord with the evangel itself, the revelation that justification is gratuitous and in grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus.

In the Pauline epistles, apart from the disputed cases in which the genitive is "Christ" or its equivalent in every case (approximately twenty-four instances) in which "faith" is followed by a proper noun or pronoun in the genitive case, the genitive is unmistakably subjective. Twenty instances refer to the faith of believers; one to the faith of anyone who believes; two to the faith of Abraham; and one to the faithfulness of God.

When Paul wishes to speak of the believer's faith in (i.e., "into") Christ, he does so not by means of a genitive noun apart from a preposition, but by means of an accusative (i.e., objective) noun together with an accusative preposition: ". . . rejoicing and observing your order and the stability of your faith in (i.e., "into") Christ" (Col.2:5).

A parallel expression to the faith of Christ is that of the grace of Christ: "grace which is of the One Man, Jesus Christ" (Rom.5:15). It would never occur to anyone to translate this text as "grace in Christ," much less to claim that it speaks of the believer's grace! Yet the only real difference between the genitive "of Christ" here and those which we have considered elsewhere, is that here the phrase is appended as a modifier of grace, while in the others (as in Galatians 2:20) the same phrase functions as a modifier of faith.

Similarly, just as Romans 3:3 speaks of "the faith(fulness) of God" Romans 3:22,26 speaks of the "faith(fulness) of Jesus Christ," the "faith(fulness) of Jesus." Further, the phrase "the faith of Abraham" in Romans 4:16 forms a precise formal parallel to the phrase "the faith of Jesus" in Romans 3:26. Thus, as these parallels between the faith of Abraham and the faith of Christ make clear, "the faith of Christ" refers to His faithful obedience unto death; our Lord's trust in God concerning the cross.

The very notion that those texts which say "faith of Christ" nonetheless have in view faith in Christ—namely the believer's own faith in Christ—is but the stepchild of the long-standing tradition that affirms that "justification by faith" means man's justification not by his performing works of law, but by his acceptance of Christ and assenting to faith in Him. The idea is that man saves himself, or if it is preferred, qualifies for God to save him, not by a former method, that of performing righteous deeds, but by a new method, that of acquiescing in faith.

Traditional theology is not merely saying that salvation comes upon believing in Christ, and not apart from or prior to. What it is also saying (even if more implicitly than explicitly) is that salvation is of the nature of an exchange, a reward, requital, or compensation. When preachers say that salvation is "by faith [i.e., man's faith]," they are using "by" in a transactional sense, according to the meeting of a requirement (as in, "by doing your work, you are entitled to your wages").

The phrase faith OF-Christ however, is parallel to and must agree with the essence of the evangel itself, the revelation that we are "being justified gratuitously in [God's] grace, through the deliverance which is in Christ Jesus" (Rom.3:24). The deliverance is not said to be through our faith in Christ Jesus, but through Christ Jesus Himself. Similarly, it is not revealed that we were conciliated to God through our faith in the death of His Son, but that we were conciliated to God through the death of His Son (Rom.5:10). Further, it will not do to attempt to avoid this truth by artfully claiming that while this is so, it is only so on the "condition" (i.e., based upon a requirement) that we accept and believe on Christ. Any such claim is spurious; for we are not justified on a "conditional" basis that we meet some sort of requirement. Instead, we are justified apart from law, on a gratuitous and gracious basis, which precludes any and all requirements.

Therefore, all passages which declaim "the faith of Jesus Christ," out of which we are justified, must be understood to be referring to a faith which is His own: Christ's own perfect faith—not man's faulty faith in Him.

Of course we ourselves can only speak of our justification by means of our own faith, since it is by faith that we apprehend what God has achieved through the work of the cross, even as what He will yet achieve in the eons ahead, when His promises are fulfilled. Still, the saint's own faith only gains for him a recognition of the justification which God has already established for him—through the faith of Christ (cf Rom.4:25-5:1; 5:9).

THE GENDER OF PRONOUNS

GREEK nouns are usually masculine or feminine, quite apart from personality or sex. Logos, word, is masculine, alêtheia, truth, is feminine. How little this means may be seen in the statement "Thy word is truth." The word "truth" can have only a formal gender. Yet the relative pronoun, in referring to these words, must be he and she. Our Lord is the Truth feminine and the Life feminine. Shall we therefore refer to Him as She? That is one of the problems which perplexed the compiler of the sublinear in the Concordant Version. There are times when the literal is misleading. Let us suppose that John's account had opened with the word Truth in place of Word. Then our Lord would be continually referred to as She! Truth is always she, and word is always he—but not in English.

Few understand figures of speech. Our Lord is not literally a word. He is like a word, in that He conveys to our ears the thoughts of God. If He is called a word, however, we must refer to Him as It in English, to preserve the figure, just as the Greek calls Him She when He is the Truth. The pronoun must correspond with its noun grammatically in both languages, no matter what the actual gender may be. The same confusion has been introduced when speaking of God's spirit. The fact that it is referred to in a figure as he has been made the false foundation for one of the main items in the creed of Christendom. The plain evidence is ignored and a rule of English gender is ignorantly used to interpret the Greek, which is vastly different. Spirit is always it in Greek and English. When it is called a paraclete masculine it must be referred to grammatically as he. As a dove, the spirit is she (Matt.3:16).

AN EVANGEL IS BROUGHT TO THE DEAD

"AN EVANGEL is brought to the dead." This statement is found in 1 Peter 4:6. Many are the imaginative interpretations regarding these words penned by Peter close to two thousand years ago. It is often thought that this phrase is referring to 1 Peter 3:18-20, which is: "seeing that Christ also, for our sakes, once died concerning sins, the just for the sake of the unjust, that He may be leading us to God; being put to death, indeed, in flesh, yet vivified in spirit, in which, being gone to the spirits in jail also, He heralds to those once stubborn, when the patience of God awaited in the days of Noah while the ark was being constructed, in which a few, that is, eight souls, were brought safely through water."

We should note concerning the above passage, that Christ was first vivified out of death, then He went to the spirits (not humans) in jail (not "Hell"). "Therefore those who suffer for doing good will also be exalted in due time. With this in mind, it is evident that it is not the evangel which is proclaimed to the spirits in prison, for that would be entirely out of line with the argument. It would imply that, as a result of their sufferings, their enemies will be evangelized. Such grace is foreign to Peter's epistles. The word here used is not evangelize, but herald or proclaim. It tells us, not that they were blessed, but that He was exalted. And what is more likely than that, after His ascension, He should be proclaimed the universal Suzerain to all creation, obedient or rebellious?"[1] In order to correct the common misconceptions related to the phrase in 1 Peter 4:6, it would be helpful to first look at its context.

> "Christ, then, having suffered for our sakes in flesh, you also arm yourselves with the same thought, for he who is suffering in flesh has ceased his sins, by no means still to spend the rest of his lifetime in the flesh in human desires, but in the will of God. For sufficient is the time which has passed by to have effected the intention of the nations, having gone on in wantonness, lusts, debauches, revelries, drinking bouts, and illicit idolatries, while they are thinking it strange of you not to race together into the same puddle of profligacy, calumniating you; who shall be rendering an account to Him Who is holding Himself in readiness to judge the living and the dead. For for this an evangel is brought to the dead also, that they may be judged, indeed, according to men in flesh, yet should be living according to God, in spirit" (1 Peter 4:1-6).

The one who "spends the rest of his lifetime . . . in the will of God" (verse 2) is alive to God. The one doing the things of the flesh mentioned in verses 3 and 4 is dead to God. The evangel is brought to those who were dead to God in Peter's day. Though they were physically alive to sins, lusts, etc., they were, at the same time, "dead to God."

FIGURATIVE AND LITERAL USE OF "DEAD"

In the following conversation Jesus had with a scribe and a disciple we can see two ways in which "dead" is used in the same sentence.

"Approaching, one scribe said to Him, 'Teacher, I will be following You wheresoever You may be coming away.' . . . Now a different one of the disciples said to Him, 'Lord, permit me first to come away and entomb my father.' Yet Jesus is saying to him, 'Be following Me, and leave the dead to entomb their own dead'" (Matt.8:19-22). The first usage of "dead" is figurative and the second is literal. Jesus said: ". . . Be following Me, and leave the dead to entomb their own dead" (Matt.8:22). He was saying, let those who are dead to God be entombing those who are literally dead. He told the disciple, "Be following Me." If he would have followed Christ, he would have been alive to God. He would not be like those who were dead to God.

JUDGING OR SETTING RIGHT IS BENEFICIAL

Verse 5 of 1 Peter 4 is concerning the judging of those who are living to God verses those who are dead to God by their living in debaucheries etc. Those who were dead to God while they were alive, who were evangelized, were running to the puddle of profligacy. "Profligacy" according to the KEYWORD CONCORDANCE is "unsafe action." So these folks were racing together into the same puddle of unsafe action. I am reminded of little children who, upon seeing a puddle, run to it and jump into it, splashing muddy water everywhere. They get their nice shoes, socks and attire all muddy and think it is fun. Then they are judged, or set right, by their parents taking them home and cleaning them. An evangel was brought to those who were dead to God, who raced to the puddle of profligacy [so] "that they may be judged," or set right, as to their improper, sinful lives. Their being judged or set right is for the purpose that they "should be living according to God, in spirit." This judging will have a salutary effect upon them!

TWO WIDOWS, ONE LIVING, ONE DEAD

> "Now one really a widow, and alone, relies on God and is remaining in petitions and prayers night and day. Yet she who is a [prodigal, though living, is dead" (1 Tim.5:6).

Notice the widow who relies on God and remains in petitions and prayers night and day? She is alive to God.

And what of the widow who is considered to be dead? In 1 Timothy 5:9 Paul speaks of widows being listed to be cared for by the ecclesia. If a woman has widows living with her, she should be relieving them and they are not to be a burden to the ecclesia (5:16). These widows would not be on the list for the ecclesia to relieve their living expenses. This widow who is "dead" to God should not be on the list of care. Her prodigalling takes her off the list. If she was "attested by ideal acts: if she nourishes children, if she is hospitable, if she washes the saints' feet, if she relieves the afflicted, if she follows up with every good work" (1 Tim.5:10) she would be alive to God and on the list.

In the CONCORDANT LITERAL NEW TESTAMENT there is a vertical line in front of the word "|prodigal." On page 608 in "Instructions for Use" of the CV under the subhead |ACT FORMS we have this: "1. ACT (or ACTION) forms are incomplete, with action going on." If we take this information and apply it to the prodigal widow, we will see her life is characterized by the ongoing act of prodigalling. In the KEYWORD CONCORDANCE under "prodigal" we are told to see "squander." For squander, spatalaō, we have "spend freely and foolishly." Concerning the widow who is prodigaling her wealth, she has no need for God. She is spending freely and foolishly. Though she, by all outward appearances, acts as if she is living to God, she is actually dead to God. Therefore, when we see the word "dead" in relation to the widow and those to whom an evangel was brought by Peter and others, we are not to see them as literally dead.

DID JESUS PREACH TO THE DEAD WHILE HE WAS DEAD?

Another passage is often brought forth to promote the idea that when Christ died He went to some sort of "Hell" and preached to the dead. This passage supposedly proves

Jesus died, went to "Hell" and preached an evangel to the dead. As tradition goes, He preached the evangel to the lost suffering dead souls to give them a chance to "get out of Hell and go to Heaven." Here is that passage:

> "Wherefore He is saying, Ascending on high, He captures captivity And gives gifts to mankind. Now the 'He ascended,' what is it except that He first descended also into the lower parts of the earth? He Who descends is the Same Who ascends also, up over all who are of the heavens, that He should be completing all. And the same One gives these, indeed, as apostles, yet these as prophets, yet these as evangelists, yet these as pastors and teachers, toward the adjusting of the saints for the work of dispensing, for the upbuilding of the body of Christ" (Eph.4:8-12).

"The sooner the English reader realizes that he has but a translation of the word of God, and that the idiom is not English nor even Greek so much as Hebrew, the sooner will he make solid progress in the knowledge of God. There is no doubt but that the phrase 'in the heart of the earth' (Matt.12:40), means in the center of the earth, in English. But it matters not how we understand it. The real question is, how did those to whom it was spoken understand it? That they did not apprehend it to mean the center, but referred it to the surface is clear from other instances of its use.

"We have the similar phrase, the 'heart' of a tree, meaning the innermost part of the trunk. Absalom was left dangling from the branch of an oak. Yet we read that Joab took three darts and thrust them through the heart of Absalom while yet alive in the heart of the oak (2 Sam.18:9:14). The two words we have rendered 'heart' are the same in the Hebrew.

"But more conclusive is the phrase 'heart of the sea.' It is applied to the place at which the Israelites crossed the Red Sea (Ex.15:8). It describes the way of a ship upon the surface of the sea (Prov.30:19). But the most striking and instructive example is its fourfold reference to the city of Tyre, which was partly on an island on the coast of Canaan. Indeed, the island was so near the shore that Alexander the Great, in order to conquer it, built a mote out of the ruins of the shore city and thus connected it with the mainland. Tyre was far, indeed, from being in the center of the sea in any sense. And if Tyre might be described as being in the heart of the sea, what difficulty can there be in speaking of our Lord's tomb as 'in the heart' of the earth? It may sound strange to us, but most natural to those who heard Him.

"The same principle applies to the phrase 'the lower parts of the earth' (Eph.4:7-10). Neither the Psalm which is quoted nor the context in Ephesians give any color to a subterranean visit. The contrast is between Sinai (Psa.17), when our Lord did not condescend to the lower parts of the earth, but came down only to a high, inaccessible mountain, and the captivity to the law which was thus prefigured, and the humiliation of His earthly life, when He, literally as well as figuratively, condescended into the very vales and depths, bringing gifts, and, through His death, resurrection and ascension, leading captive the captivity which Sinai had brought. The rendering 'multitude of captives' has no foundation in fact" (A. E. Knoch, Unsearchable Riches, vol.6, pp.272,273).

IN CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, it is safe to conclude that Peter was not informing anyone concerning the literal dead when he stated in 1 Peter 4:6 that "an evangel is brought to the dead." Jesus was not alive while He was dead. Jesus was so dead that He had to be vivified by the glory of the Father.

Just as a living widow can be dead while she lives and that the dead, while living, can entomb their literal dead, so also we can see that when an evangel went to the dead, that such ones, while living, were dead to God by their sinful living. Their being judged will have a salutary effect upon them so they "should be living according to God, in spirit."

WHO RECEIVE THE SECRET?

> Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus . . . to all the saints . . . who are pre-expectant in Christ (Eph.1: 1,12). I do not cease giving thanks for you, making mention in my prayers that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may be giving you a spirit of wisdom and revelation in the realization of Him . . . for you to perceive . . . what the riches of the glory . . . (Eph.1:16-18)

THE SECRET that, in spirit, the nations are to be joint allottees, and a joint body, and joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which Paul was the dispenser (Eph.3:6) was not made public until after he was a prisoner at Rome. It is evident that it was neither sent to the twelve apostles nor received by them. The epistles of James, Peter and John, although they may have been written afterward, do not acknowledge it at all. Peter may have hinted at it, since he found "some things" in Paul's epistles "hard to apprehend" (2 Peter 3:16).

It is quite evident that those to whom Peter wrote did not receive the secret. The salvation which they received was that which the prophets had foretold (1 Peter 1:10). This was by no means a secret. They prophesied concerning the grace which was for them. They were a "chosen race," a "royal priesthood," a "holy nation" (1 Peter 2:9; Ex.19:4-6). Every one of these expressions is a direct negation of the truth of the secret. In the present administration there is no chosen race. All races are on the same footing. There is no royal priesthood. We need no priests, for we all have access to the Father. There is no holy nation. All nationalities are equally blessed in Christ.

Peter, in his epistles, is upholding the prior place of Israel over the other nations, in flesh, on the earth. Paul reveals the equality of the nations with them, in spirit, in the heavens. Not only Peter, but all of the Circumcision epistles, from Hebrews to Jude, and including Revelation, are saturated with Israel's superiority and base almost all blessing on a physical relationship to Messiah. Paul himself, in his earlier ministries, had "known Christ according to flesh" (2 Cor.5:16). It was not until the conciliation was revealed that the physical was entirely removed from his ministry. In his epistles—not in Acts—we find his distinctive message.

FAVOR CONVEYED THROUGH PAUL'S EVANGEL

Who, then, received the secret? If it was not meant for all, what were the distinguishing characteristics of those to whom it came? As might be expected, the answer is plainly given by God Himself, but men have dimmed its clearness by a defective version. The third item of the secret should read: "in spirit the nations are to be . . . joint partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus, through the evangel of which I became the dispenser . . ." (Eph.3:6). It would be very trite, indeed, to say that this grace came through the evangel. It would be still more trite for Paul to inform the Ephesians that he was a minister of the gospel. But to assure them that this new favor is conveyed through his evangel (and not that of the twelve) is most instructive and needful.

It is not true that the nations are, or ever will be, joint partakers of the promises contained in the gospel which Peter preached. Almost every promise in that evangel, apart from personal pardon, is based on the very opposite. The believers among the nations cannot be incorporated in the holy nation, the chosen race, or the royal priesthood, for these are dependent on the presence of faithful gentiles for their existence. Priests must have people in order to officiate. For some time the apostle Paul fulfilled this function in relation to the believing gentiles (Rom.15:16), but, now that the nations are joint partakers, priesthood is impossible.

We have the choice of two distinct lines of ministry, one for the Circumcision and one for the Uncircumcision. To one the very thought of copartnership is repugnant. To the other it is the logical and necessary sequel. Only those who had received the evangel Paul proclaimed were prepared for the reception of this secret. To them it was sent and to no one else. There are many considerations which confirm this. Let us see if we cannot discover the points of contact between Paul's previous preaching and the secret as revealed in Ephesians.

THE PROMISES OF THE EVANGEL ARE IN CHRIST JESUS

There is much significance in the titles of our Lord. "Jesus Christ" lays the emphasis on His humiliation and physical relationship. "Christ Jesus" is the title of His exaltation. As Paul was first introduced to Him in glory, his ministry is associated with His celestial dignities rather than His rejection on earth. The fact that the promises of his evangel are in Christ Jesus clearly cuts out the Circumcision evangel. The twelve apostles seldom used this title, for they were well aware of its significance. Until the Kingdom comes they must proclaim Jesus Christ, the lowly One, the suffering One, and now still the rejected One, so far as the Kingdom is concerned.

The refusal and increasing failure of the Kingdom proclamation was accompanied by the gradual introduction of Paul's evangel, which is based on His exaltation at God's right hand among the celestials, hence is associated with the title Christ Jesus. The significance of the title is in fullest accord, not only with Paul's preparatory evangel, but especially with its sequel, the secret now revealed. We do not wait for the Kingdom to be set up on earth. Our Head is already glorified in heaven. He is not despised or rejected there as He is on earth. And our destiny is that celestial realm, where He is exalted as Christ Jesus.

The promise in Christ Jesus included such transcendent blessings as justification, reconciliation, and glorification, and all flow from unforced favor. It also includes a future salvation from coming indignation (Rom.5:9), and our assembling to Him before the day of indignation should set in (2 Thess.2:1; 1 Thess.1:10; 4:13-18; 5:9). The Circumcision were never promised such immunity, but some of them will be carried through the time of trial. The hundred forty-four thousand will be protected in it.

WE ARE PRE-EXPECTANT

Thus the expectation set before those who receive Paul's evangel is to be fulfilled prior to that held by the Circumcision. They expect the Lord to come to the air before He descends to Olivet with His holy ones. This is referred to in the twelfth verse of the first of Ephesians, where the Authorized Version reads, "That we should be to the praise of His glory who first trusted in Christ." The Revisers changed this to "who had before hoped in Christ." This is still ambiguous, but much nearer the truth. Rotherham is much the same, "we who had hoped beforehand in the Christ."

The statement is not true as it stands in these versions. It is contrary to the facts. Paul and those with him were by no means the first to trust in Christ. Peter and those with him trusted in the Messiah long before Paul was called. The change from "trust" to "hope" does not help much. It would be more in accord with the records to put Paul among the last. He was the last to see Christ after His resurrection (1 Cor.15:8). Paul had not preceded the other apostles in either trust or hope. This cannot be the meaning of the passage.

The CONCORDANT LITERAL NEW TESTAMENT reads, "who are pre-expectant [in a state of prior expectancy] in the Christ" (Eph.1:12). The sublinear has it THE ones-HAVING-BEFORE-EXPECTED IN THE ANOINTED. The Greek verb form is proêlpikotas. It is in what is called the "perfect" tense. It does not denote a specific act, but the state or condition resulting from an act. The state of those associated with Paul was one of expectancy. As they looked for the fulfillment of it before the return of the Lord to rescue His people Israel, it was a prior expectancy, in the sense that it was to receive a prior fulfillment. The "before" refers to the future, not the past. They were to be snatched away in clouds, for meeting the Lord in the air before the Circumcision would meet Him on the earth.

THE NATIONS HAVE A CELESTIAL ALLOTMENT

To such as had received this prior expectancy the message now comes that, not only was their immediate expectation to be different from that foretold for Israel by the prophets and our Lord, but their subsequent destiny also was to be changed. They were not to come back to the earth to receive an allotment down here, after meeting the Lord in the air. The gentiles among them were not to take a subordinate place to the holy nation on the earth. Instead, they were to be joint enjoyers of the celestial allotment with a few of the Circumcision who also had received Paul's evangel and who had this prior expectation.

It is evident, then, that, speaking broadly, the mystery was received by the nations, the Uncircumcision, and that remnant among the Jews, the Circumcision, who had become associated with Paul. Most of the Circumcision did not receive it, but followed the fortunes of the Kingdom. They either died in faith, not having received the promises, or drew back and apostatized. Almost all gentile believers did receive it, for the Circumcision reached only a few, such as Cornelius and the Ethiopian eunuch, who became proselytes of Judaism. The division between the two classes was clearly marked by their future outlook. Those who held to the Kingdom expectation could not receive the secret; those who held the prior expectation could not do otherwise.

The entire context confirms this interpretation. Not merely are our blessings to be among the celestials (Eph.1:3), but Christ Himself is given the place preeminent. He is to be the Head in the heavens as well as on the earth (Eph.1:10). And this exaltation of His is the basis of our blessing, just as His suzerainty of the earth is the source of Israel's sovereignty.

The full force and special significance of "Who is operating all in accord with the counsel of His will" (Eph. 1:11) is lost if we do not see its peculiar application to the Pauline Jewish remnant. They are certainly entitled to a place in the millennial earth. Paul deserves the best place in the earthly Kingdom. What excuse has God to offer for changing his allotment to heaven and thus causing him to forfeit his place in the Kingdom administration on earth? It is this, that He is operating the universe, not only in accord with His revealed counsel, as proclaimed hitherto, but according to the counsel of His will, which includes the secrets now made known.

NO ONE CAN COMPLAIN

Of course, none of the Israelitish remnant can complain. The change is such a marvelous promotion, such a tremendous advance, so much grander and more glorious than the allotment they lose, that they not only acquiesce but exult. They do not murmur in disappointment but rejoice in His appointment. There is much to admire in what we may call the arbitrary graciousness of God. He gives, not merely what is expected, but what accords with His high intention.

The Uncircumcision had no promises, no allotment in the land. Yet they also had received the spirit of promise, which was the earnest received by the Circumcision. They had received this spirit, under Paul's preaching, simply on hearing and believing, without baptism or repentance (Acts 2:38) or the laying on of hands (Acts 8:17). Since they had the same pledge, they are entitled to the same possessions, hence are joint allottees.

THE SECRET HAD NO APPEAL TO THE TWELVE

It follows, then, that the secret was received by a special company who had been prepared for its message by Paul's previous epistles, or by his personal ministry in accord with them. It had no appeal to the twelve apostles, no place in their public proclamations or epistles. It does not even make contact with Paul's Kingdom ministry as detailed in the latter part of Acts, which clears the ground, but does not lay the foundation. This is laid in his epistles to the four ecclesias in Thessalonica, Galatia, Corinth and Rome. On these the secret is erected.

To put the matter briefly, we may say, then, that the key to this question is contained in the written name Paul. Those who received his written ministry also received the secret. Paul, separated from the rest by the spirit (Acts 13:2), learning nothing from them (Gal.1:12; 2:9), receiving added revelations (2 Cor.12:1-4, etc.), the prisoner of Christ Jesus for the nations (Eph.3:1), the fullest expositor of the secret of Christ (Eph.3:4), and the only one who can enlighten us as to the present secret administration (Eph.

3:9)—the name PAUL is the open sesame to the treasuries of transcendent truth.

The Circumcision, represented by Peter, found these things "hard to apprehend" (2 Peter 3:16), not because they lacked intelligence or spiritual understanding, but because the secret is outside the sphere where their own blessings are found. If it needs a special spiritual enduement (Eph.1:17) for us to perceive these great truths, how difficult and well-nigh impossible is it for those beyond the bounds of its operation to get more than a glimpse of the greatest of all of God's revelations!

GOD'S WISDOM IN A SECRET

Paul knew this secret when he wrote to the Corinthians. It seems that he even made it known in a private way to those who were mature (1 Cor.2:6-10). What else could he refer to when he says, "but we are speaking God's wisdom in a secret, which has been concealed, which God designates beforehand, before the eons, for our glory"? He plainly predicts its public revelation in the twelfth and fourteenth chapters, when not merely individuals would be mature, but the era of maturity should arrive.

It is more than probable that he had received the revelation of it fourteen years before (2 Cor.12:2), when he was snatched away to the third heaven. He knew this secret before he had penned any of his epistles. Hence they were written with it in mind, and with the object of preparing the readers for its reception. God was ordering all of Paul's acts and words in view of the impending deluge of grace, which could not come until the full apostasy of Israel. Then, after the apostle warns the Jews that the salvation of God is dispatched to the nations, and that they will hear (Acts 28:28), he commits the secret to writing.

While, therefore, we are plainly warned that some matters in these epistles are temporary and some would cease, the great controlling themes, like faith, expectation and love, abide. This is the point in the thirteenth of first Corinthians. Many have been imagining that the maturity there alluded to referred to the resurrection glory of the individual. It is concerned with the great administrative change which is impending. Faith and expectation will not engage us in the glory. They will be replaced by sight and fulfillment. Love alone lingers there. But now, in this secret economy, the signs of immaturity vanish, and the tokens of maturity abide.

SAINTS NEED ADJUSTMENT

The question may arise as to what authority there is for believing that the faith of early believers was modified by later revelations. Can we be sure that the saints themselves are the same, and that the teaching changed? This is evident from Ephesians itself. Teachers were specially given for the adjusting of the saints to the new revelation (Eph.4:12). The Authorized Version rendering, "perfecting," contains only a part of the thought. They themselves, however, have rendered it mend, fit, and restore, elsewhere. The saints needed more than perfecting. They needed to be adjusted to these later disclosures. Some doctrines were dropped and others took their place. All matters were modified by the change in administration.

The same adjustment is needed today, and should be the chief function of a teacher who knows the truth, for many believers have not only failed to understand the secret, but they cling to that which has been discarded by it, and even to that which never had a place in any of Paul's writings or ministry. Indeed, the word "adjusting" seems quite inadequate for some, who are almost wholly occupied with matters pertaining to Israel and the twelve apostles. But this does not affect their right to the blessings brought by the secret, though, of course, they cannot enjoy them until they recognize and appreciate their transcendent treasures.

The question is often asked: "If the Acts does not deal with the body of Christ, who are those of whom James speaks, when the subject of the nations comes up at the apostolic counsel (Acts 15:14)? Is not God visiting the nations now, to take out of them a people for His name?" James is speaking of the place accorded the nations in the prophets. He refers especially to the preaching of the Kingdom by Peter, who was the first to go beyond the Jewish pale in his proclamation. The passage that he quotes has a specific fulfillment at the time of the end, when the tabernacle of David is rebuilt. After the nations are almost destroyed by the judgments, the rest of them will seek the Lord.

James and the other leaders of the Circumcision had then no inkling of the secret. The nations themselves took the place of subordination to Israel. For the time being, they occupied the position which would have remained theirs permanently if Israel had repented and the Kingdom had come. The Pauline believers come before us in Acts only as they are related to the Kingdom with which the book is concerned. Therefore, while most of the persons immediately concerned probably later became identified with the present grace, they were not so then. They may, even then, have been members of the body of Christ, but it was not then a joint body, which was not known until the close of the Acts activities.

At such times of transition, we should not ask what "class" each company is in, as though that were fixed and changeless. Paul himself was probably in three different "classes" during his career. At first, though called for special service in an entirely different sphere, he was identified with the Circumcision. Later, in his ministry among the nations, he was separated from the Circumcision and in the one body, in its transitional aspect. Later, he lost his standing in the flesh entirely, and becomes a member of the joint body. There is, to speak accurately, no "body class" now. All are in the "joint body." The "body class" existed only during Paul's pre-prison ministry, and was merged into the present. Now there is only one "class," for grace has unified all who believe, by the Spirit of God.

ALL BELIEVERS ARE RECIPIENTS OF THE SECRET

The secret embraces all who belong to Christ today. Whether Jews or gentiles, Circumcision or Uncircumcision, now all who believe God are the recipients of its far-flung favor. We are well aware that the gospel of the Circumcision is more often proclaimed than the conciliation. We may almost affirm that the secret is never made known. But this is a day of grace. And it is not the way of grace to withhold what is not apprehended or appreciated. Men may proclaim pardon now, but God gives justification. They may insist on a new birth, but He makes a new creation. They get what He gives, not what they believe He is dispensing.

It is the fashion today to make God's gifts a matter of reward for service, or knowledge, or some fancied superiority. We trust that all who read these lines will enter into an exultant understanding of the secret we are unfolding. But may He ever shield us from the assumption that a grasp of His truth will give us a place superior to our brethren! As individuals we will receive rewards. But there are no divisions in the body of Christ, even though some, because of special enlightenment, will claim a different or a higher destiny. We are all one! In Christ the most ignorant and useless believer, by grace, has access to all of the treasures which the most intelligent and useful can enjoy.

Knowledge puffs up. Love builds up. Almost every advance in the knowledge of God has resulted in an arrogant, self-assertive division among His saints. We witness the sad spectacle of the followers of Christ divided into hostile camps, each proclaiming its own superiority and relegating the rest to an inferior position. Each claims a monopoly of His grace, because of some fancied attainment in faith or faithfulness. Let no one imagine that a knowledge of the secret is requisite in order to receive its benefits. If that were so, how few would ever find the place prepared for them by God!

We trust that many will be led into the enjoyment of this marvelous secret, and open their heart's eyes to apprehend this, the highest revelation given by God to mortal man. It is not only the grandest in glory, but also the greatest in grace. It is our earnest prayer that such a knowledge will be suffused with love. It is our fervent petition that no one will arrogate its benefits to himself and exclude others because they have not yet apprehended its message. All who believe now "receive" the secret in the most potent and precious sense of the word. They may never have heard of it, they may not understand it, they may even reject and oppose it. Yet it is theirs, and they will receive it in due time, as determined by the despotism of grace.

Other administrations call for conformity in faith or practice as a condition of participation. The coming era of indignation will have different "classes" to accord with degrees of faithfulness. But in this economy of purest grace, where the only requirement is to admit a lack of all deserts, the most elementary faith is the key which opens the portal to all of God's treasures. Having Christ, we have all. We can enjoy more as we explore what is ours in Him, but we can do nothing to add to our possessions. Hence we are all in the same "Class," we are one in Christ Jesus.

If, however, we press the present aspect of our question, and ask "Who receive the secret?", that is, who accept it, and enjoy it, and exult in its transcendent glories, the Scriptures give us a very clear answer. Two qualifications are necessary, according to Paul's Corinthian letter. He made this secret known to those who were mature (1 Cor.2:6,7), and could not reveal it to the fleshly (1 Cor.3:1). Spirituality, as well as "dispensational" maturity, is a necessary condition for the enjoyment of the secret.

Maturity is manifested in the rejection of human wisdom and philosophy, and a recognition of the rudimentary nature of the Kingdom activities. Those who follow a philosophy of human origin, though dealing with the Scriptures, effectually shut themselves up where they cannot receive God's secret. And those who, like the Corinthians, are occupied with the manifestations of minority, the affairs of spiritual childhood, will find it impossible to enjoy the secret in its plenitude and preciousness.

Carnality is chiefly manifested in sectarian divisions, and in walking as men in the flesh comport themselves. In my own experience I have found the futility of even trying to teach the secret to anyone whose heart cleaves to the confusion of man-made divisions, or even claims to be a follower of Christ in a sense peculiar to his own party. Sectarianism effectually destroys the possibility of delving into the secret. It is an impervious coating which truth cannot penetrate. The secret is only for the unsectarian and spiritual.

Indeed, so marvelous is this secret that Paul prayed for the believers of his day, who may not have been either immature or unspiritual, for a special spirit of wisdom and revelation for its realization (Eph.1:16-18). I join with Paul in praying for all who wish to enter into the enjoyment of this surpassing secret, the summit of divine knowledge, wisdom and love, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father glorious, may indeed enlighten the eyes of their hearts, that they perceive its call, its allotment and its power.

"ALMOST all of us are short-sighted. We see part of the way, but we do not see the end. We confuse the going with the goal." This observation by A. E. Knoch (p.75) might well serve as the theme of this issue of Unsearchable Riches. Yet also it is a truism to keep in mind day by day as we live our lives in the present state of things.

Things are not as they shall be. Yet they are in accord with the purpose of God Who is operating all.

So it is that the first two articles here are concerned with the unity of the body of Christ in the midst of disunity. The unity is of the spirit and thus cannot be seen, while the disunity is very visible. "The days in which we are living are days of dissension and discord and division" (p.55). Nevertheless, there is a true unity which "is a spiritual one and still exists in spite of all the apparent divisions" (p.56). This is the situation at present, but it is not the goal of God. It is part of the process toward the goal, which is a visible and wholehearted unity of all those who are members of the ecclesia which is the body of Christ. But even that is not the final goal and is indeed but part of the process toward that unity encompassed in God becoming "All in all' (1 Cor.15:28).

Backing up to the theme of the present unity of the spirit, which A. E. Knoch discusses in our opening article, we present as our second article, James Coram's thoughts on the same subject which concludes, "Our common quest is, in God's own time, that we should all attain to the unity of the faith (Eph.4:13)" (p.74).

Perhaps uppermost in this "quest" is that "the knowledge of God's Word is good, an acquaintance with the ways is better, but a realization of Himself is best" (p.78).

A future process which seems to be soon to commence is an adjustment of the eons (cp Heb.11:3) in which God's promises to Israel concerning a terrestrial kingdom will be carried out. Tony Nungesser writes on a certain feature of that kingdom in which select Israelites will be set up as preservers of an orderly system of government and society (pages 89-96). That will be a welcome improvement on the present. But it will last only for a thousand years (for it involves human works of law) and will be succeeded by a new creation in which all are headed up in the Anointed One.

Such in brief are some of the processes toward God's goal of becoming All in all. But what is the basis of all this? It is that sparing not of His own Son, and the Son's listening of faith unto the death of the cross (cf pages 83-88 for some partial meditations on this great and glorious evangel).

Therefore, listen! God's evangel for which Paul was severed from the Jerusalem apostles and from his birth heritage is promised throughout Scripture. Listen! God's evangel is concerned with His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Listen! God's evangel concerning His Son (not the law of God given at Sinai) is God's power for present salvation to those who are believing it. Listen! it is in God's evangel concerning His Son that God's own righteousness is being revealed. Listen! God's righteousness is being revealed out of (i.e., it is sourced in) the faith of the Righteous One, that is, manifested through Jesus Christ's faith. Listen! this evangel out of and through Jesus Christ's faith is for our faith. Listen! Jesus Christ's faith is that He dies for us while we are still sinners, which not only makes God's righteousness known, but also commends God's love. Listen! Jesus Christ's faith is His listening to the will of His God and Father unto the death of the cross. Listen! this evangel is for our listening as slaves listen to the words of their master, that is, listening to the teaching to which we are given over, the teaching that through the listening of the One, all will be constituted righteous.

D.H.H.

THE SPIRIT'S UNITY

GOD begins with Himself and ends with Himself. Before the eons God sits in His solitary majesty. With the eons comes the revelation of His Christ. Then we are called upon to consider His dealings with His creatures. As soon as the climax of the eons has been reached, history will recoil upon itself. Each former phase will be rehearsed on a vaster scale, until once more we find all beneath the rule of Christ, its earliest Head. Then comes the consummation, and God becomes All once again. Then, however, He becomes not All in Himself, but All in all His creatures.

The same course is followed in revealing the structure of the tabernacle in the wilderness. First He describes His own throne. Then He reveals the various excellences of Christ as displayed within the holy places, and later leads us without to the vessels of the court, and the outer gate. In practice, the priests reversed this order. They began outside the enclosure, and passed the altar and the laver before coming to the holy place.

Our meditations on Ephesians have been somewhat like this. Beginning with God in His inmost secret affections, conceived before creation, we have traced our relationship to Christ, as His members, and have considered the mutual relationships of His saints. We have come out from God, through Christ, to our fellows. The rest of the epistle reverses this order. We will now retrace our steps, and consider the present practical effect of these marvelous unfoldings. First we will take up the conduct consequent upon our relationship to one another; second, our responsibilities as members of the body of Christ; third, the warfare which awaits those who enter our celestial allotment by faith in anticipation of that day.

We wish to impress our readers with the helpfulness of the literary structure of this epistle. The exhortations which follow are not only based on the previous half in general, but apply to particular portions. Our deportment has the same three aspects as the doctrine. What we believe of God, and of Christ and of the saints, to the saints, and to Christ, and to God must be lived. It is instructive to read the epistle parenthetically. After considering our allotment among the celestials (Eph.1:3-19) we may skip to our heavenly warfare (Eph.6:10-20). From the first section which deals with the body of Christ (Eph.1:20-2:10), we may turn to the second (Eph.5:21-6:9). To understand the "new man" (Eph.2:11-22), see what is said about the new humanity (Eph.4:17-5:20). These remote contexts are corrective checks on our interpretation which may be easily undervalued.

The first half closed with a summary and a petition. Before entering on the three main themes of the epistle, we are given an exhortation and another summary, both dealing with conduct. The first six verses of chapter four present a plea of the utmost importance to all who wish to please God in this secret administration. Let us note that these are the first words which God gives to regulate our conduct, after making known the riches of His grace. At the same time they are a test. If we have really received the great revelation which goes before, this should be the fruit. If, for instance, we find a brother endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit, we may be assured that he is living in the power of the previous unfoldings.

We must not fail to note Paul's new title—the prisoner in the Lord. In order to present truth he is the prisoner of Christ Jesus (Eph.3:1). To enforce it, he is the prisoner in the Lord (Eph.4:1). We have been considering Christ

Jesus and our place in Him. Now we are called upon to acknowledge Him as our Master and consider what conduct is pleasing to Him. Christ serves out blessing.[1] [The Lord seeks a worthy walk. The key to all good conduct may be condensed into a single phrase, "Christ, my Lord."

All worthy conduct must be the unforced fruit of the former part of this epistle. It is utterly useless to enter Ephesians by the back door. No one can walk in accord with any of these exhortations, except through the power generated by the grace glorious. Anyone who seeks to enforce the exhortations in Ephesians apart from the enabling favor on which they are founded, degrades them to the level of the law. Let us not render a forced, unwilling compliance, but let each act be the outgrowth of God's most glorious grace.]

Who can walk worthily of a calling which he does not apprehend? Let us not strive to be what we are not. All God asks of us is to live up to what He has made us. The preparation for such a walk, the power for such deportment, lies in a consciousness of our high social standing among God's nobility. Among men we readily recognize a nobleman by the superficial niceties of his conduct. We ought to be the true nobility, known by the deeper and more enduring virtues which adorn the teaching we profess.

The rarest and most precious gem found in the field of human conduct is true humility. In these days it is derided and condemned. It is considered a weakness, if not a disease. The greatest hindrance to "success" is an "inferiority complex," to use the up-to-date philosopher's phrase. Even in the religious sphere, humility is at a tremendous discount. Aggressive self-assertion seems necessary for preferment. How far have we fallen from the great ideal! How little do we see of that genuine meekness which springs from a profound realization of the truth! The sunlight of God's favor has not only revealed our exaltation in Christ, but our degradation in ourselves. Though perfectly righteous in Him, we have lost all self-righteousness. We may glory in God and His Christ, but this involves the utter repudiation of all merit of our own.

Only one who has a low estimate of himself is in a position to bear long with the failings and shortcomings of others. Patience is the rare and precious virtue which follows humility and meekness. We are to bear with one another in love (Eph.4:2). All of this is based upon the unfathomable affection which God lavishes upon us and on all who are His. We cannot respond to His love without, at the same time, including those who are embraced by it. We can manifest it best in practice, by a becoming conduct toward His saints. When the apostle first gives us a glimpse of the transcendent path which we now tread, he summed it all up in one word—love (1 Cor.12:31-14:1). He begins his eulogy by saying "Love is patient" and he ends by affirming that it endures all (1 Cor.13:4,7). This is the greatest of the abiding trinity—faith, expectancy, love—and love shall never lapse.

Now we have a foundation for peace. The warring factions of Christendom are seeking peace by compromise. Real peace between God's saints is based on humility and meekness, patience, and forbearance, and a recognition of the spirit's unity. Apart from this there can be no real reconciliation. The peace and unification which is proposed today is based largely on indifference to the vital values of God's revelation. It is human in its method and its object. We can really unite with all who are hallowed only by ignoring the sects and parties and schisms to which they belong. Let us have fellowship with all, irrespective of their church affiliations. Do they belong to the body of Christ? Then they belong to us, and we to them.

THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT

The days in which we are living are days of dissension and discord and division. There is a continual and persistent effort for unity, but it seldom bears any fruit but schism. One of the saddest features is the fact that truth itself is made an excuse for further division. Every "movement" rapidly degenerates into a sect. And so fertile are the seeds of schism that it is only a short time until the division itself is divided into dozens of fragments.

The only human method of arresting this disintegration is to set up some human head, such as the patriarchs of the eastern churches, the pope of Rome, or the bishops and councils of the western churches. There must be some human authority. Leaders find that they cannot keep their followers together unless they assume jurisdiction over their faith and decide for them just what they must believe.

A very practical and searching question arises at this point. We have learned some great and precious truths, notably the reconciliation of the universe. Shall we allow this truth to separate between us and our fellow believers? Shall we let it be the nucleus of a sect? Shall we confine our fellowship to those who see as we do on this important point? Shall it create a division, another breach in the unity which God intends shall characterize His saints in this administration?

That this is its natural tendency no one will deny. And no one can help having more intimate fellowship with those of like faith than with those who are otherwise minded. To human wisdom a strong separate organization would be the surest method of promoting a successful propaganda. The answer to all these questions is found in the opening entreaty of the Ephesian epistle (Eph.4:1-6). There we have a unity—the unity of the spirit. We are not called upon to make this unity but to keep it.

This is most vital. All efforts toward Christian unity today are like the patching together of broken fragments. They are all directed toward restoring the outward semblance. The true unity is a spiritual one and still exists in spite of all the apparent divisions. All that is needed is to recognize this unity and ignore the other so-called unities and alliances and associations which are trying to create a superficial communion, but which are really the greatest hindrances to the display of the God-made unity which embraces all His own.

The unity which we are to keep with diligence is based upon seven fundamental truths. Its keyword is one. There is one body—and only one—one spirit, one expectation, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father. The apostle is not revealing to the Ephesians that there is a God, or that there is a body. He is insisting that there is only one. The church of today repudiates every one of these divine unities.

When we read of "the protestant bodies," or "the Methodist body," what is it but a denial that there is one body? But is it not still more sad to hear of those who meet "on the ground of the one body" yet exclude all who do not meet upon this ground? The body of Christ is no organization of our manufacture. It is an organism whose members are placed in the body as He wills (1 Cor.12:18). It has but one Head, even Christ. It is our duty and privilege first of all to acknowledge His headship and, in doing this, we must also recognize every member that He has. We are all members of the same body. We are not divided. We are one.

The lack of visible unity among God's saints is a source of the utmost shame and confusion to those who seek to please Him. To mourn over the many organizations which have marred the manifestation of this unity to the world is the constant exercise of all who know the truth. Not only are the castes of Israel revived, so that we have clergy and laity, but we have a hundred sects for every one of theirs.

There is only one body in Christ, but there may be a thousand in the world. There is but one faith, but creeds are numberless. There is only one Lord, but how diverse are the disciplines which have replaced Him!

Many attempts have been made "to get back to the ground of the one body," but each has resulted in another organization, another division. Every effort made to unify God's people seems to be but another means of further schism. A new truth is proclaimed. Some believe. Some do not. One faction leaves, and there is another "body." Unbelief creeps in, and such a movement as "Modernism" invades a congregation or a pulpit. Those who wish to be faithful revolt, and there is still another body. The tragic truth is that it is indifference and compromise which are tending to organize Christianity into one great dead body, and it is the sincere and faithful spirits (who ought to preserve the unity of the spirit) who are continually causing further disintegration. What are we to do? We cannot compromise nor do we dare divide.

The difficulty is that men are making their own unity while ignoring the unity of the spirit. The moment we make it we are sure to break it. It does not need making. It needs taking. Negatively, all that is necessary is to ignore all other unities, however fair they seem, however godly the saints that they include, however indispensable they appear. Positively, let us acknowledge all who are sealed by the spirit, all who know God and are members of the body of Christ. Let us acknowledge only one body, one spirit, one expectation, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God.

Unity is one of the controlling thoughts of Ephesians. It is not confined to this exhortation. Each item of the secret consists in joining together those who have been far apart. The first chapter gives the nations the same allotment as an election among the Circumcision, because they have obtained the same spirit. In the second chapter Jew and Gentile are roused and seated together, and later on, the two are made one and He creates the two into one new humanity. Physical distinctions are all repealed. The distressing divisions of the past are done away. One of the principal aims of all our lives should be the preservation of the oneness which actually exists between us and all the other saints of this era. Let us resist every effort to divide and sunder what God has joined together.

ONE BODY

In Israel, apart from the various sects, there were several "bodies" of divine appointment. The anointing oil was confined to a privileged class of men, the priesthood. They formed a distinct body, separated from the Levites, their brethren, and the rest of Israel. The priests were, in a special manner, God's christs, or anointed ones, in Israel. They had the oil, a sign of the spirit. All, in this administration, have the anointing of the spirit itself, and all today have access into the very presence of the Father. No one in the body of Christ is like a common Levite, or a mere Israelite of another tribe. There were at least three distinct bodies in Israel, determined by their distance from the Deity. Outside of these there were distinct "bodies" even among the nations. There were the proselytes, and others who believed, making two or three "bodies" among the Gentiles, though each had few privileges of any kind.

In contrast with these there is only one body today. It is a joint body in which all the members are of equal rank. Not only are the Circumcision, priests, Levites, and others, on the same level, but the proselytes and devout believers among the nations are not distinguished from one another or from the three bodies in Israel. The most uncouth and unlearned saint in far off Thessalonica ranked just the same as Barnabas, the Levite, in the body of Christ. There is no temple curtain, barring out the priests, no holy place into which the Levites cannot come, no court to which an Israelite has no access, no wall to shut out the nations, no ceremonies to mark off the proselytes from inferior ranks of Gentile believers. All are one body, for all are in Christ, so near and dear to God that distinctions are impossible.

Let us insist that the characteristic truth for today is not merely that we are the body of Christ, but that this is a joint body, and there is only one. There are differences between saints. There are degrees of knowledge or ignorance. There is variety in service, and in the rewards to which it leads. But let us remember that we are not in the body of the Lord, but in the body of Christ. Attainment and service are not necessary to membership. The most ignorant saint is entitled to a place in the joint body. No service whatever is needed to become a member. Faith alone is all that is necessary. Only thus can there be but one body.

Christendom today has many organizations. Yet in all of these, and outside of them as well, are those who are living members of that one great spiritual organism whose Head is Christ. This is the true "catholic," or universal, church. It is the only one worthy of our thought or serious consideration. Its membership is based solely on the possession of God's spirit, not on any man-made bonds whatever. God alone can put men in it, and no one can put men out of it. It is divine. It is the work of God's spirit. Let us recognize His handiwork and acknowledge His achievement. Many a saint is awed by the religious atmosphere of some great cathedral, but does not realize the solemn sanctity of God's real dwelling place, the church of Christ. It alone is hallowed. Let us make much of it.

ONE SPIRIT

We have so long been accustomed to reading "spirit" with a capital "S" and referring it to God's spirit exclusively that, to many, the small "s" seems offensive and derogatory. But the word spirit is by no means confined to God's holy spirit. It would be trite indeed to insist that God's spirit is only one. We have a spirit. Each act of our lives is characterized by a spirit. Each administration has its own peculiar spirit. The spirit of the Mosaic administration was legal. It has no place today. When the disciples desired to draw down fire upon their enemies they were told that they did not know what spirit pertained to them. The spirit of Elijah's ministry was quite different from that of our Lord's, though both were actuated by the same holy spirit.

The "spirit" speaks of the temper of the mind, the key to which life's activities are pitched. In every divine administration this is dependent on God's assumption and the nature of the work which engages Him. Elijah's attitude toward his enemies could not be duplicated by our Lord. Neither can we duplicate the spirit of our Master's day. Gentiles were treated as outsiders, deserving almost no consideration. The same spirit was not shown them which obtained in the churches in Israel. Only when a Jew was obstinate and would not bow to the decision of the congregation, then he also was to be treated like a man of another nation. Today no such distinctions may be maintained. Jews and Gentiles are on one common ground, and this a spiritual one. We deal with one another on the one high plateau of His exalted favor.

Those of the Circumcision who died in their faith never entered into this truth. Even after this letter was sent forth, Peter wrote to the dispersion, telling them to behave themselves ideally "among the nations" (1 Peter 2:12) where they found themselves. This is not an isolated statement, but one of many which show the double spirit which he and the surviving Circumcisionists showed to the end of their days. Nowhere in his letters, or, indeed, in any epistles except Paul's latest, does the truth of the one spirit receive acknowledgment.

Christendom has almost utterly missed the spirit which should distinguish it from all previous administrations. It has lived in the atmosphere of Sinai or Jerusalem instead of in the prison house of Paul at Rome. In the bondage of the law, or seeking to fit into the earthly kingdom, it has imbibed and manifested a spirit foreign to the truth. It should display such boundless grace and love, in accord with God's own attitude, that all men everywhere would recognize its every act by its delicious Christ-like spirit. Instead, it has become the opposite, and is described by God Himself as an unearthly monster, more ferocious than the beasts of the earth.

ONE EXPECTATION

The earliest written record that we have of Paul's peculiar ministry is stated thus: ". . . you turn back to God from idols, to be slaving for the living and true God and to be waiting for His Son out of the heavens, Whom He rouses from among the dead, Jesus, our Rescuer out of the coming indignation" (1 Thess.1:9,10). The wrath impending on Israel and the earth, of which Peter spoke at Pentecost, which is detailed in Revelation, will be endured to its close by the saints who survive for the kingdom. If our place were in that kingdom and we hoped to enter it alive, our future outlook would be one of terror and dread. At any moment the portals of Yahweh's day might open and we would enter its terrible trials and suffer its terrific tribulations. Only those who endure to the end will be delivered.

This is the key to Paul's epistles to the Thessalonians. This is what they dreaded, and this is the predicament into which they supposed that they had fallen. It seemed very real to them. Paul expresses the matter in a most realistic figure, in anticipation of their mistake. He puts it all into the present, notwithstanding the word "waiting" demands the future. Our Lord is presented as the One deliver*ing* them—not who will deliver them. In line with this they are delivered out of the indignation—not from—as though they had already entered it. Paul uses the same figure of himself when he speaks of being rescued out of the mouth of the lion (2 Tim.4:17). He was never in it. But such dangers impress themselves vividly on the mind, and it is more fitting to state the feeling rather than the fact.

A word of warning to close students of the Scriptures is called for here. It is well to be exact and to insist on the literal meaning whenever possible. I have great sympathy with those who point to the connective out of to prove that the Thessalonians will be in the coming indignation, for, they say, "How can they come out of it if they never were in it?" But there is a higher logic than this. It may be stated thus: Every word, in the Scriptures, must be interpreted in accord with its context and the entire production of which it is a part. Now it is the main burden of the Thessalonian epistles to prove that they were not appointed to indignation, but to the procuring of salvation (1 Thess.5:9,10). No single word in the epistle must be forced to teach otherwise, especially when its figurative use lends life and force, and is found elsewhere in the same sense. Let us feel that the Son of God is delivering us out of the coming indignation which might, at any moment, close its maw upon our helpless heads.

Israel's expectation in the kingdom finds no fulfillment until after the time of tribulation. Hence Paul gave the Thessalonians and the Corinthians a prior expectancy. This is what especially distinguished the Circumcision who followed Paul's teaching from the rest. Peter's words still held with the latter. The heavens must receive Christ until the restoration of all spoken by the prophets (Acts 3:21). They knew nothing of His previous descent to the air. When Paul seeks to identify those of the Circumcision who had received his revelations he falls back on this fact. They looked for Christ to come before the affliction. They had a prior expectation. The celestial allotment of Ephesians is for them (Eph.1:12). It is the mark which identifies Pauline believers among the Circumcision, hence the Ephesian revelation is limited to them.

Unlike the kingdom expectations, our outlook is the same for all. All will have a celestial allotment, all will be with Christ, all will go at the same time. There is only one expectation! This is the fruit of grace transcendent. It ignores the distinctions of flesh and makes favorites of all. In the kingdom almost all the promises and privileges are for Israel. The nations have no expectation worthy of the name. If the Gentiles of this era were to be with them in the kingdom we would soon discover that there was more than one expectation. Our outlook would not compare with that of a Jew, no matter what our spiritual attainments might be.

This gracious truth is being assailed from all sides. It does not seem possible to leave grace unadulterated. Some imagine that our expectation is only for the watchful, when the apostle distinctly declares that it is also for the drowsy (1 Thess.5:10). Others think He comes only for those who look for Him (Heb.9:28), and thus limit it to those who believe in His advent. Hebrews speaks of His coming to Israel, not to us. A few make it a matter of attainment or knowledge. For those who have gone to repose this expectation is necessarily an eclectic, or out-resurrection, for it occurs before the saints of Israel are roused, and leaves them in their tombs. The apostle's desire to conform his experience to it has led to the idea that he hoped to be raised immediately at death, and thus precede other saints into Christ's presence. All such departures deny this unity.

There is one, and only one expectation common to all the saints of this most gracious administration.

ONE LORD

There is one Master, or Lord. How this strikes at the very root of the ecclesiasticism of today! With the Ephesians the contrast would consist in the repeal of the decrees issued from Jerusalem, which were the token of their subjection to the twelve. But now decrees are issued, not only from Jerusalem, but from Rome and Petrograd, from London and Berlin, and from a thousand councils and conferences and synods, and so voluminous as to fill whole books with rules for the discipline of the saints. And at the very same time the inspired exhortations of the prison epistles, which are the real rule of conduct for today, are forgotten or ignored.

The kingdom will be administered by many masters. The whole nation of Israel will be a royal nation with the rest of the world as their subjects. The twelve apostles will sit on twelve thrones, ruling the twelve tribes of Israel. If this were such an administration, we should have Paul and Timothy and all the rest of the apostles, or their successors, ruling over us today. It is well that the Roman pontiff does not claim to be Paul's successor, for Paul himself would refuse to take the place he occupies. Such delegated authority is a necessity in the kingdom. Christ will rule through His representatives, and men must be subject to them, as to under-lords.

But for us there is only one Lord. When men step in and dictate to us what we are to believe, how we are to behave, and assign our tasks, they usurp His place, and deny His headship, and underrate His capacity. Before the present status of the saints had been made known, and the nations were still supposed to be subject to Jerusalem, a convention could be called to make decrees, and James could settle matters by saying "I decide." Not so now. God has not replaced the deposed Circumcision by other lords, taken from among the Gentiles. Those who have risen to reign over the saints have usurped the place of Christ. He needs no earthly vicar, Catholic or Protestant. Nor Jerusalem, nor Rome, nor Council, nor Synod, nor any Diotrephes (3 John 9) has any right to stand between us and our Lord!

There is dire need that the people of God realize the fact that they are not only saints saved by Christ but slaves serving their Lord. There is much religious work today, but how little of it is under His direction! How much will merit His approval? How little effort is being made to discover His will! In most cases some man has made himself a master, and the lordship of Christ is lost.

ONE FAITH

It seems almost ironical to say that there is one faith. Whence, then, are the thousands of divine "faiths" which challenge us with the assurance that they are all taken from the Bible? And many of them can point to proof texts for their doctrines and thus found all, as they fondly believe, "on the Bible." Some go to the law, in spite of the fact that the nations never were under the law. Some refer us to the "gospels," forgetting that Jesus Christ was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Some stake all on John's or Peter's ministries, not heeding their own words that the gospel of the Circumcision was committed to them, but that of the Uncircumcision to Paul.

There is only one true creed today. The many confessions and statements of belief are all fragmentary and faulty. They divide rather than unify. Christendom contains a thousand beliefs. Each is stoutly defended as the only one! They are all buttressed by "the Bible." Have we not discovered the key to this confusion? Once the truth is correctly apportioned, once the last great revelation—the secret administration—is given its due place, then only one belief is possible. All prior revelation is glorified by its transcendent truths. Practically all of the creeds ignore it. Their dogmas are derived from previous administrations. They base their beliefs on passages which have no present application.

We must remember that, before the current administration, there was more than one body of truth. What was true of the Jew was not by any means to be taken of the Gentile. This was especially the case in the transitional period between Pentecost and the present. This is the background for the statement that there is but one faith now. It is not selective, predicating of one class what is not true of another. When those of the Circumcision who were with Paul received a celestial allotment, they had no monopoly of it. It was for the Gentiles also. When a new humanity was created, the superiority of the Circumcision vanished. So long as the churches seek to establish themselves on the shifting scenes of Acts there will be many conflicting faiths.

ONE BAPTISM

The so-called "Great Commission," at the close of Matthew, must have been given but a short time before Pentecost. Yet there is no record that it was obeyed in a single instance during the period covered by the book of Acts. This shows the great confusion into which the truth as to baptism has fallen. While claiming the support of primitive practice, the attempt is made to fulfill the Matthew commission, baptizing in the name of the so-called "trinity," which the disciples never did! The early disciples were right. That commission waits for the day when all earthly power is in the hands of the great King. It is not the one baptism for this era.

Peter, on the day of Pentecost, conditions the reception of the spirit upon baptism in water (Acts 2:38). Conversely, in Cornelius' case, he conditions baptism in water on the reception of the spirit (Acts 10:47,48). The tendency was away from water to spirit, especially in regard to the Gentiles. Under Paul's ministry this is carried much further. Of baptism in water he said: "Christ does not commission me to be baptizing but to be preaching the evangel . . ." (1 Cor. 1:17). Though so vehemently denying the practice of baptizing in water, he insists, in the same epistle, that "in one spirit we all are baptized into one body" (1 Cor.12:13).

Spirit baptism is essential to membership in the body of Christ. Water baptism is not. During our Lord's life water baptism was the only one. During the Pentecostal era spirit baptism was added, so there were two. Now there is a return to one. Either water or spirit baptism is no longer in force. Can anyone hesitate which one to drop! Spirit baptism is vital. Without it we have nothing. We are not cleansed. We are not united into one body. Not so water baptism. Paul had practically dropped it long before. It was nothing but a ceremonial, of no efficacy in itself, a type of spirit baptism. One was the shadow, the other the reality. Spirit baptism is the one baptism for today.

Perhaps some of those who first received this epistle had known two baptisms. Some in Corinth had been dipped in water. Since that time there has been a constant change from the physical to the spiritual. This epistle finally sets aside all fleshly prerogatives. Nothing depends on the physical and everything is based on the spiritual. The very unity of which this is a part is made by spirit. How could such a oneness come from the superficial contact of water with the flesh? In a catalogue of spiritual unities it should be unnecessary to insist that the one baptism is that of God's spirit. All to whom this was written had been baptized in spirit. It is the vital basis of unity.

The popular view of the baptism of the spirit is far astray. Like its type, water baptism, it cleanses and unifies. It does not impart power. That is done by the coming on of the spirit, a manifestation which must not be confused with it. After the Pentecostal era, which paraded the powers of the coming eon, this coming on of the spirit ceased. In its place we have the homing of the spirit. We are not promised power, but weakness such as may be used as a foil for God's strength. The manifestations popularly connected with spirit baptism are usually the work of deceiving spirits, promising powers which have no place in this administration.

ONE GOD

The "proofs" of trinitarianism all flow from false inferences founded on passages which do not deal with the subject. The texts which actually and definitely decide the question are either ignored or "explained," notwithstanding the vehement emphasis put upon the word one and the denial of more than one. The Scriptures plainly teach that there is one God, the Father, but orthodox Christianity upholds a form of apologetic polytheism, in which Satan, as well as the so-called persons of the godhead are invested with the attributes of deity.

Postulating a good and beneficent God, eternal torment is unreasonable and insane. By a reversal of the logical process, it demands a monstrous deity, partial, cruel, vindictive.

The doctrine that good proceeds from God and evil from another source is the basis of an ancient Persian religion, founded by Zoroaster. It was later embraced by the Gnostic philosophy, against which Colossians warns us. It is impossible to teach that evil originated in any being, independent of God, without destroying the basic truth of the Bible, that there is only one God. Monotheism becomes a cloak to disguise the doctrine of dualism. God is defied and Satan deified.

It is this false and pagan philosophy of the genesis of evil which bears fruit in the further falsehood that evil has always existed and always will exist. No one not equally powerful and divine could have introduced evil against the will of God, hence the god of evil must be as great as, or greater than, the god of good. Hence this evil god is a proper deity with divine attributes. He can have neither beginning nor end, and his work is as eternal as himself.

But this is not all. If there is more than one god, and these two are not in accord, then, as an inevitable consequence, there is no real God at all, with any of the theological "attributes." A good god would not allow an evil god either place or power if he could help it. He could not be "omnipotent." He could not endure the presence of his rival, hence could not be "omnipresent." In short, two gods are no God. There is One or none.

THE PANTHEON OF CHRISTENDOM

The Christian pantheon consists of four distinct deities. No being that successfully contests the power of the divine Creator can be denied omnipotence. Such is Satan of Christendom. He occupies practically the same place that Zeus, or Jupiter, did in Greek mythology. Saturn was first supreme, and Zeus succeeded in overcoming him. The same fable is foisted upon us by orthodox theology. God has been overpowered and cannot prevent the evil in the world, or He would. Satan has the upper hand!

A few facts will show how unfounded is the explanation of the "trinity"—three "persons" in one "godhead." These expressions are not found in the Scriptures. Is it not significant that we must go outside God's Word entirely to explain its most important truth? The holy spirit is not a distinct "person" from God Himself. Both are given as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. He was generated by the holy spirit. His Father was God. Surely we have only one "person" here! Christ did not have two fathers! The only spirit is God's spirit, and in no sense a separate personality.

Christ, as the Son of God, is divine as to His spirit and human as to His body. He is the Image of God and the Word of God, by means of which we hear and see the invisible deity. As such He is called God. But His entire work is to manifest Another. He has a will, but prefers His Father's. He has all power, but it is given Him by His Father. He carries out God's purpose, not His own. He rules as God's Executive. And when His work is gloriously finished and He hands over a reconciled universe to God, He Himself becomes subject. None of this is proper to absolute deity. He is the one Lord, not the one God and Father, of this passage.

But the special thought which is called for by the context, has to do with the present grace. Now, as never before, the one God is the one Father also. In preceding eras Israel had almost a monopoly of His covenant care. For them He took a special title. Yahweh was their special deity. He did not belong to the other nations. They were shut out of His temple, and kept at a distance from His habitation. All of this is past. We know Him as our God, in the most intimate and blessed of all His characters. He is our Father.

In this regard we come very close to God's ultimate. We anticipate the time when He will become All in all His creatures. He, as the Father of all who believe, is over all and through all and in all. Toward us He does not assume the role of a distant deity, to be approached only through His appointed people, by means of a forbidding ceremonial. He bids us draw very near to an affectionate Father, Who is involved in all that we do and are. Again, He is this to all, not to a special class. May our hearts be enlightened to appreciate this culminating grace! May its blessedness be ever fresh and may it be enjoyed with an increasing sense of its preciousness!

Perhaps no better test of our interpretation of Ephesians, or of our understanding of the truth for today can be found than this sevenfold spiritual unity. Happy is he who can say with a true heart that he acknowledges but one body, one spirit, one expectation, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God! Who cannot look back to the time when he recognized at least two of each? Christendom, with its trinity, its various baptisms, its multitudinous faiths, its many lords, its hazy expectations, its conflicting spirits, and its organized bodies, presents a spectacle to make angels weep and sadden every saint who gets a glimpse of God's ideal. Man has multiplied every unity God has made.

The point in all that we have been considering lies in the word "one." No one doubts that there is a body, a spirit, an expectation, a lord, a faith, a baptism, a God. It would have conveyed the sense to say that there is one body, spirit, expectation, Lord, faith, baptism, God and Father. But the Author of this epistle was solicitous on this point. So He repeats the word "one" before each item to give it extraordinary emphasis. We have printed it in italics in the first edition of the CV. In view of the prevailing refusal to believe and keep this unity, we feel like printing it in italic capitals, with all the force that type can convey. There is only ONE body, ONE spirit, ONE expectation, ONE Lord, ONE faith, ONE baptism, ONE God and Father!

Of course, there are many gods (1 Cor.8:5), two baptisms and many modes, many faiths, mostly false, many lords, a multitude of mirages beside the one expectation, many spirits, for we are warned against them, and bodies too numerous to mention. But for us there is only ONE of each of these. To acknowledge this is to keep the spirit's unity.

What closer links than these can there be to bind us to one another? We are members of a joint body. The spirit that animates it is undivided. We look forward to the same glorious future. We heed the directions of a single Master. We believe the same truth. We are cleansed by a baptism which fits for a common membership in God's great family, knowing Him as our Father. Even in this earthly scene we know the unifying power of family ties, the clannishness of priests cleansed at the laver, the ecclesiastical bond of a common creed, the community of interests which flows from working under the same master, the ties of mutual expectancy, the fellowship of spiritual affinities, and the marvelous unity of the human frame. There is oneness of life, oneness of spirit, oneness of hope, oneness of work, oneness of faith, oneness of worship, oneness of affection!

We are one in spirit! O that each would do his utmost to preserve this unity! Strife has exploded its manifestation into a million fragments. We beseech you, gracious reader, nay, God beseeches you to guard this precious ideal. The breach between Jew and Gentile no longer cleaves the saints in twain. But in its place we find a thousand factions, all ignoring this great exhortation. But the unity still is there. We need not make it. Let us keep it! When we stand before His dais, may it be our joy, and His, that we have ever striven, by word and deed, to keep the unity of the spirit with the tie of peace!

GEORGE HYDE

We have received a letter from our dear friend, Margaret Hyde, concerning the passing of her husband, George Hyde. She writes: "He died at home on April 21, 2025, at the age of 81. He studied the Word of God for several years using sermons from the Concordant Publishing Concern. We were so thankful that God led us to understand His glorious truth. Thanks to all who helped provide this for us."

THE UNITY OF THE SPIRIT

In the following restating of Ephesians 4:1-4, while the text remains the same, I have added some words in brackets. The careful reader will note that these additions are relevant, and true in the nature of the case; ideally, even self-evident. While they do not change the sense of what Paul says, hopefully the reader will find that they do help to clarify the sense of what is actually stated:

"I am entreating you, then [in consideration of all the foregoing in this epistle], I, the prisoner in the Lord, to walk worthily of the calling with which you were called. [Thus, I declare,] with all humility and meekness, with patience, [be] bearing with one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit with the tie of peace [thus—which is, according to truth, whether recognized or not, that there is but]: one body and one spirit. [This is so, as you are aware, though the infirm in faith may not agree] according as you were called also with one expectation of your calling, [it being true, in fact, even as, again, you are aware, that, for us, there is but] one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, Who is over all and through all and in all."

Thus we see that Paul herein provides us not with a means by which we may justify ourselves in excluding others from our circle of fellowship (or still worse, even from our acknowledged circle of sainthood), but with the one true foundation upon which we may rest, becoming "settled, unmovable" (cf 1 Cor.15:58), growing in maturity ourselves, while bearing with one another in love.

The unity of the spirit which God has made and we, in our practice, are to endeavor to keep, is that God has made it so that there is, in truth and faithfully speaking, but one body and one spirit.

Be the organized church bodies all around us ever so numerous, and the many false spirits abounding among those who are deceiving others, being deceived themselves (cf 2 Tim.3:13), there remains but one body of believers, through which they are enlightened by one spirit, the holy spirit of God (Eph.4:30).

The one body is the ecclesia, which is the "body" of Christ: "the ecclesia which is His body" (Eph.1:23), its members being so closely identified with Him as to be, in a figure, the very members of His body.

In 1 Corinthians 12:11-13, these two intimately related themes of the one body and the one spirit, are brought together in a single passage: "Now all these one and the same spirit is operating, apportioning to each his own, according as He is intending. For even as the body is one and has many members, yet all the members of the one body, being many, are one body, thus also is the Christ. For in one spirit also we all are baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free, and all are made to imbibe one spirit."

Accordingly, ". . . whoever are baptized into Christ, put on Christ, in Whom there is no Jew nor yet Greek, there is no slave nor yet free, there is no male and female, for you all are one in Christ Jesus" (Gal.3:27,28).

It is unnecessary to be very widely acquainted with the many theologies and theological systems of Christendom, whether present or past, to realize that over the course of more than two millennia, "every wind of teaching" (Eph.4:14) has indeed circulated and prevailed among some, whether among only a few or a great many.

Concerning every vital subject as rehearsed here by Paul, concerning which he assures us that there is but "one," the theological world effectively has cried out saying, "No! there are many." Yet this is only to be followed by each one of its representatives, bickering among themselves, wishing to add, "the only true one, however, is mine."

It is vital to note that here in Ephesians 4, Paul's by no means defines the parameters of truth, the truth concerning the one body, the one spirit, the one expectation of our calling, the one Lord, the one faith, the one baptism, the one God and Father of all. That is not his purpose. Instead, his purpose is to assure us that there is indeed but one of each, and that that true one, in every case, may be discovered through an enlightened reading and study of the collective whole of his epistles, complemented to be sure by the rest of the sacred scriptures as well.

Our common quest is, in God's own time, that we should "all attain to the unity of the faith" (Eph.4:13). In the meantime, let us all, "with all humility and meekness, with patience, bearing with one another in love, [be] endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit with the tie of peace" (Eph.4:3).

THE APPRECIATION OF GOD

GOD HAS A GOAL. He intends to become All in all His creatures (1 Cor.15:28). He will accomplish this by way of reconciling all His enemies by the blood of Christ's cross, by justifying, vivifying, and saving all mankind at the consummation (Col.1:20; Rom.5:18; 1 Cor.15:22; 1 Tim2:4; 4:10). But before this there is a long and painful preparatory process, a weary way which leads His creatures to this consummation, much of which is as dark and distressing as the goal is bright and filled with blessing.

Almost all of us are short-sighted. We see a part of the way but we do not see the end. We confuse the going with the goal. Our translations are partly to blame, for they fail to clearly mark the fleeting nature of the process, as it is in the Original. And if an honest attempt is made to carry this across in a concordant version, it clashes with our conventions and our hard hearts. God grant that we may faithfully witness, in our renderings, when God reveals a fact, and when it is only a temporary process, for this He has clearly indicated in the Original.

Judgment is God's strange work. He uses it on the way. Men make it the end. No matter how an unbeliever is dealt with, whether he dies as a result of sin, or by the direct intervention of God, whether he be cast into outer darkness or into Gehenna, this is not his end. All who do not belong to Christ will be roused from the dead and judged before the great white throne. There they are not forgiven, or saved, but judged. But this is not their end.

All these will be cast into the lake of fire, to suffer the second death. Even this is not their end. God does not reach His goal in any of His disciplinary measures. These only prepare His creatures for it. Let us not confuse the going with the goal.

Very little is said to us about God's goal until Paul completes the orbit of God's Word with his later revelations. Hints there have always been by which hearts in tune with God have been filled with high hopes. But it is not until the meridian sun of God's grace has come from behind the clouds of sin and law to reveal the deepest recesses of God's immanent love to the most undeserving of the race; it is not until the truth for the present was made known that God tore aside the veil of the future completely and gave us a clear and unclouded view of His ultimate. Once we revel in this we will never go back to previous revelation on this theme, for like the curtain of the tabernacle, it seems to hide, rather than reveal the full blaze of the Shekinah glory.

The usual way is to view the goal in the darkness of the way. We go back to passages which deal with judgments and allow them to throw their dark shadows across the consummation. We should believe that God will justify all mankind (Rom.5:18,19), and view the previous judgments in the light of this final achievement. We bring up passages which tell of death, to darken God's declaration that it will be abolished. We should believe that God will make death inoperative at the last, and view the previous passages in this glorious light. We turn to texts which prove that unbelievers will be lost or destroyed, and, with these passages, dim the great declaration that God wills the salvation of all. We should illumine them with the later and higher revelation. We find God's enemies in the fiery lake at what seems to be the close of revelation, and misuse this fact to deny God's declaration that all will be reconciled (Col.1:20). We should not take one to destroy the other, but believe both, for reconciliation follows estrangement, and it alone accords with God's final goal.

How perverse and blind have we often been! When God says all, we have said some. When God speaks of a very small fraction of mankind, such as the living nations who stand before Christ to be judged according to their treatment of Israel—a mere handful as compared with all mankind—then we extend their sentence to all! Faith has almost fled from the earth. What calls itself faith is mostly a masquerade, for it refuses God's Word for the traditions of men, yet insists that it is genuine.

Let us allow the light of the latest revelation to illumine the earlier, partial unfolding, and let us not use the earlier to eclipse the latest, the highest, and the only complete unveiling of God's mind and heart.

MULTIFARIOUS WISDOM

The past eons seem to be replete with failures on God's part. Adam sinned and offended, and brought the whole human race into the service of sin and the doom of death. Could not God have prevented this by prudent provision? Thereupon the race that sprang from him became so wicked that they had to be almost wiped out by a deluge. Why did not God foresee this and prevent the evil? Thereafter the nation of Israel was segregated to be a blessing to the balance. But they became worse than the rest and even crucified God's Christ, so seemed to utterly fail to fulfill their function. Failure! Failure! Failure! All that God did seemed to end in futile failure. Both creation and revelation were full of evidences of God's infinite wisdom, yet His dealings with mankind apparently showed the reverse. He seemed to pyramid one failure upon another.

To the human, unanointed eye the present operations of the Deity are the greatest failure of all. In almost every avenue of life the mortals that He made fall short. They excel principally in evil and death-dealing devices. But the greatest of all failures is Christendom, His avowed representative on earth. Notwithstanding its immense privileges, its tremendous advantages over Israel, it has sunk even lower than the favored nation. Only the eye of faith on earth can see the multifarious wisdom of God in these apparent failures, for only those whose hearts have been opened to the secret which He concealed from the eons hitherto, are able to apprehend the vastness of the wisdom therein displayed.

THE REALIZATION OF GOD

The knowledge of God's Word is good, an acquaintance with His ways is better, but a realization of Himself is best. Faith accepts His sayings, confidence acquiesces in His ways, love rests in His essence. Let us believe what He says, and we will not only delight in what He does, but exult in what He is. How few of His saints are found with even the first of these favors! Faith they have, but so scant, so adulterated with credulity, and so faltering, that God's ways are dark and inscrutable, and He Himself is hid behind a thick curtain of ignorance and tradition. Alas! even to His children, He is the great Unknown and Unknowable.

The attitude of scant faith is clearly revealed when its own welfare is at stake. It does not deem it safe to leave the future in God's hands, without some definite promise, some written bond, that will hold Him to His Word. It is this trembling unbelief which changes God's eons into eternities, for it rightly reasons that, if the eons end, there is no certainty of future bliss, unless they leave their fate in the hands of a God Whom they do not fully trust! It is true that God has made no "promises" beyond the eons. As He gives us deathlessness and incorruptibility, why should we be concerned about "eternal" life? Where there is no death, such a "promise" would only reflect upon His character, and our future welfare is far more dependent on His integrity than on His declarations.

It will be seen in the Scriptures that the abundance of promises decreases rapidly once the millennium is past. Not many refer to the new earth and the new heavens. There is hardly a specific engagement on God's part beyond the eonian times. Why should there be? There is no need for many promises when all men are vital with life and where sin has been repudiated, where faith is replaced by sight, and all are subject to God. Where there is no sin there can be no salvation, where there is no enemy there can be no rescue. With God the All of all hearts, the present is bliss and the future felicity, and there can be no concern, no anxiety as to either.

There are saints who would be in despair if the promises in the Bible should suddenly be revoked, and they should be left entirely at the mercy of God, without any recorded document to which they could hold Him. But can they hold Him? If He is not to be trusted without a definite promise, can we be sure that He will stand by His Word? Promises are expedient and gracious, a help to confirm faith, and we would not be without a single one of them. Yet our confidence should not rest in the promises but in Him Who made them. We should be more than willing to trust Him when and where His promises do not reach.

Scant faith is afraid of the consummation. Israel's promises on earth and ours in the heavens come to a conclusion when Christ abdicates the throne. We will no longer reign, for all rule will be abolished. Our eonian mission will be fulfilled, for all will be reconciled. True, there is no death, so we cannot die. Deathlessness indeed is ours, yet we have no written assurance of peace or happiness or glory in that consummation. To the average saint it looks like a leap in the dark, or into an abyss without a bottom. There is nothing on which faith can fasten—except God! And is not this precisely what He wishes? Then He will be All in every one. Faith, promises and all such crutches will be past. They would only mar the perfect and mutual confidence which will exist between God and His creatures. It is not a leap in the dark, but a serene entrance into light and love unlimited.

The overwhelming glory of God's grand ultimate has been utterly wrecked by current unbelief, and the substitution of such a fearful future for God as the annihilation of the bulk of His creatures, or their far more heartless and hideous torment for all eternity. Let us for the time consider these only as they affect God's glory, not human welfare. If He is a real God, then all destiny is the deliberate fruit of His efforts. Even if He is the subordinate deity of Christendom, Who has lost control of His creation and cannot do what He would, these destinies are foreseen and allowed by Him, and He makes no adequate effort to prevent them. Say what you will, they make it impossible for even His saints to trust Him as they should.

If He is such a God, the thought will arise, Could He not save the bulk of His creatures in the past, how can

He preserve His saints in the future? If sin came in and ruined His fair creation against His will, what will hinder a repetition in the eternity to come? Even if we believe His promises, can we rely upon His love and power when they have been fulfilled, and there is no further guarantee? The more closely one considers the false doctrines of annihilation or eternal torment, the more it will be apparent that they make it utterly impossible for God to gain the full confidence of His creatures. The usual result is His dethronement by the doctrines of free will and divine irresponsibility in the past and present, and by the utter eclipse of His ultimate goal in the future. An annihilator and tormentor eternal cannot become All in all, not even if we make the all a tiny residue.

Here we have the secret source which supplied the mistranslations everlasting and eternal. And this shows why saints are so slow to give them up. They cannot trust their God, and must have a public record to bind His actions in the future. He has promised them eonian life. If this is not eternal, they are not sure—in fact, they are afraid—that He will take life from them when it comes to its end. Can we not see how the promise of "eternal" life really defeats its own purpose? It is given that the saints may get to know God, yet, being endless, it implies that they never attain this goal. As it denies the possibility that He shall be All in them, it totally defeats the object for which it is given, of making them so utterly content with Him that they not only are willing but eager to leave themselves in His heart, without a single assurance from His lips. What He is, is enough!

It is the office of faith to transfer us, in spirit, to this consummation, even in the midst of our present career, while everything visible still seems the very reverse of God's ultimate. Perhaps never, in the history of mankind, has there been such marked distrust, between men as well as toward God. Confidence is going or gone. Faith is vanishing. And I, for one, freely confess that, without a knowledge of the consummation, when God will reconcile all and become All in all, I could not have confidence in a deity who allowed the world to work itself into such a mess, and who can do little more for most men than to sweep them into destruction, extinction or torment. I, too, would fear that such a god must be put under bond to perform His oaths, and even then—? But now, how can I distrust Him? Mankind is just where He has brought it. The effect of all the present evil and distress will be salutary. God will get glory out of it, and men will be prepared by it to appreciate the gifts He has in store for them.

Here we have the great contrast between man's miserable self-made destinies and God's grand and gracious goal. Man's not only destroys God's creatures, but undermines His deity and robs Him of the appreciation of His heart's handiwork. God's goal not only upholds His deity but gives His creatures such confidence in Him that all concern as to His love and power disappears. They willingly, yes eagerly, leave themselves in His hands without any assurance whatever on His part as to His intentions. Faith and hope are no longer needed, so they vanish, and only love remains. Knowing Him as God, limitless in power and wisdom, and as essential Love, they prefer to remain in fond anticipation of that which the ear hears not, to which the heart of man cannot ascend, that which God makes ready for those who are loving Him. They rely on His Word, they delight in His ways, and they revel in the appreciation of Himself.

LISTENING TO "LISTEN"

IN the last issue of this magazine I ended my editorial with a call for a testing of the use of the English word "listening" for the Greek words built on the elements UNDER-HEAR. The particular test I had in mind was a list of all the passages using some form of UNDER-HEAR and rendering these with some form of "listen." Since that time I have been working on such a list along with my comments on how such a reading might be understood and be an improvement on the usual use of some form of "obey" as presently understood. The task has been a challenging one to me, and is not finished, but always rewarding. And now I receive a list of all thirty-nine passages done in concordance form, traditional book order, on one sheet of paper with the change of wording I was urging. (Thank you very much Jeff Bohlender!).

The following is his list with some adjustments in wording (the substituting of "disregarding" for "disobedience" is also indicated.)

Testing "listening" for UNDER-HEARing

Ro 1:5	grace and apostleship for listening of faith
Ro 5:19	through the listening of the One
Ro 6:16	presenting yourselves for listening, his slaves you are
Ro 6:16	to whom you are listening
Ro 15:18	effect through me for the listening of the nations
Ro 16:19	your listening reaches out to all
Ro 16:26	made known to all nations for listening of faith
2 C 7:15	having a recollection of the listening of you all
2 C 10:5	every apprehension into the listening of Christ
2 C 10:6	avenge every disregarding, whenever your listening
Phn 21	Having confidence in your listening
Hb 5:8	learns listening from that which He suffers
1 P 1:2	in holiness of spirit, for listening and sprinkling

1 P 1:14 listening children, not configuring to the former desires
1 P 1:22 having purified your souls, by the listening of truth

Testing "listening" for UNDER-HEARD

Ac 7:39 our fathers are not willing to become listening ones
2 C 2:9 that I may know your testedness, if you are listening ones
Ph 2:8 He humbles Himself becoming One listening unto death

Testing "listen" for UNDER-HEAR

Mt 8:27 the winds as well as the sea are listening to Him
Mk 1:27 enjoining the unclean spirits, and they are listening to Him
Mk 4:41 even the wind and the sea are listening to Him
Lk 8:25 the winds as well as the water, and they are listening to Him
Lk 17:6 be planted in the sea, and it would listen to you
Ac 6:7 a vast throng of the priests were listening to the faith
Ac 12:13 a maid approaches to listen, named Rhoda
Ro 6:12 reigning in your mortal body, for you to be listening to its lusts
Ro 6:16 his slaves you are to whom you are listening
Ro 6:17 yet you listen from the heart to the type of teaching
Ro 10:16 But not all listen to the evangel
Ep 6:1 Children, be listening to your parents, in the Lord
Ep 6:5 Slaves, be listening to your masters
Ph 2:12 as you always listen, not as in my presence only
Co 3:20 Children, be listening to your parents, in all things
Co 3:22 Slaves, be listening in all things to your masters
2 Th 1:8 those who are not listening to the evangel of our Lord Jesus Christ
2 Th 3:14 if anyone is not listening to our word
Hb 5:9 the cause of eonian salvation to all who are listening to Him
Hb 11:8 By faith Abraham, being called, listens, coming out
1 P 3:6 to their own husband (as Sarah listens to Abraham)

When the Lord calms the storming winds and sea those human beings with Him who had been in danger of perishing exclaimed, "What manner of Man is this, that the winds as well as the sea are UNDER-HEARING to Him" (Matt.8:24-27). Indeed the winds and the sea did exactly what was instructed to them by way of rebuke. But that is not exactly what the text says. The mariners were greatly impressed by the fact that the winds and the sea heard the words of the Lord's rebuke with such exactitude and submission that they became calm.

The Lord's words were words of instruction. The wind's and the sea's response was immediate, attentive hearing. That is, they listened.

How important is listening? In communication listening is vital. So it is that a teacher will say to an unruly class of students, and a parent to arguing children, and a boss to the workers, "Listen to me!"

God's word, however, is not always one of instruction, but in its highest and final character is one of revelation of goodness and glory. God's Son, Christ Jesus, our Lord, heard words of instruction which He did not want to carry out, but He did not set them aside. Instead He submissively and attentively kept them before Him, saying to His God and Father, "Not as I will, but as You [will]!" (Matt. 26:39). The listening was vital to the desired doing.

The above list of thirty-nine usages of some form of UNDER-HEAR is for testing. I do not feel able to examine every passage here and now accordingly. What follows are a few comments on certain of the passages in Paul's epistles. I urge others to test for themselves the use of "listening" in these passages. It may be (as some others have claimed) that "pay attention" is better (or "attentive hearing," even "attentive listening").

THE LISTENING OF CHRIST

In this matter Romans 5:19 is perhaps the most important text. Together with verse 18, the proposed CV rendering is presently as follows:

18 Consequently, then, as it is through one offense
*iofor all human beings *iofor condemnation,
Thus also it is through one righteous response
*iofor all human beings *iofor life's justifying.

19 For even as through the disregarding of the one human the many are constituted sinners,
Thus also through the listening of the One
the many shall be [l]constituted righteous.

To me this passage stands with Genesis 1:1 and 1 Corinthians 15:28 as the bedrock of my faith. Yet it is so glorious and so astounding as to transcend in value and importance over all other words of scripture. I am not claiming the translation is perfect. But I am claiming that the word "listening" brings out the original meaning much better than "obedient" as presently used.

In the first place what was set before our Lord was not so much what He must do as what He must not do, rather what must be done to Him, contrary to all His previous doings. And all through this ordeal He kept in view what was said to Him, never turning from it, never listening to others who would have Him do what He wanted to do.

You say, "Well that was His obedience in the sense of doing what He was instructed to do." And I agree. But the scripture says it was His listening, His unwavering paying attention to what He heard from His God and Father, that was absolutely necessary for His faithful doing. At any point He refused to let any detail of the instruction slip away from His attention.

OUR LISTENING TO THE TEACHING WE HAVE OBTAINED

Once more let us listen to Romans 6:14-18:

14 For sin shall not be lording it over [=]you,
For [=]you [l]are not under law, but under [JOY]grace.
15 [a]What, then? Should we sin, seeing that we [l]are not under law, but under [JOY]grace?
May it not [b]come[°] to that! 16 Are [=]you not [°]aware that to whom [=]you are presenting yourselves as slaves [io]for listening, his slaves =you |are, to whom =you are listening, whether of sin *iofor death, or of listening *iofor righteousness? 17 *ỵNow *JOYthanks be to ·God that though =you |were slaves of the sin, yet =you listen *ofrom the heart to the type of teaching *ioto which =you are given over. 18 *ỵNow freed from the sin, =you are enslaved to the righteousness.

We have been sadly misled due to faulty translation of this passage. Yet despite that, God has made His evangel concerning His Son known. The passage is filled with the pronouns "you" and "we," and there is no direct reference to Christ such as we find in chapter 5 and 6:1-11. But the evangel concerning Him is the solid foundation of what is said concerning us here. Even more so, Christ is there in the words "grace" and "righteousness" as He listened to His God and Father, Who is operating all.

So it is that Paul opens the path of listening before us, that of enslavement in listening to the message of Jesus Christ's listening. We are not under the message of law which puts the spotlight on the actions of human beings, but under the message of grace and righteousness that puts the spotlight on God's grace and God's righteousness as they are seen in the listening of Christ Jesus unto the death of the cross.

The word "obedience" no longer conveys what Paul says here, as it once did. It needs to be removed from the translation, and "listening" or "paying attention," or "attentive hearing" put in its place.

Furthermore, as to translation, the word "though" should likely be supplied in Romans 6:17, as others have suggested. This accords with the "while" of Romans 5:8. Our giving of joy to God by means of thanksgiving and praise is for the gift of listening from the heart to His message of gratuitous joy which manifests His righteousness in "righteousifying" us through the listening unto the death of His Son.

"The" sin of disregarding God's words which reigns over us all in our flesh is no longer over us in God's reckoning and our position before Him. We have died to it in spirit (though not yet in flesh). Hence Paul's own personal testimony is, "I myself with the mind indeed am slaving for God's law, yet with the flesh for sin's law" (Rom.7:25). By a play on the word "law" Paul speaks of God's rescue through Jesus Christ (which perhaps was originally encompassed in the word "Grace," which immediately fell out of the text due to haplography). God's law is His sending of His Son, in the likeness of sin's flesh for the condemnation of sin in the flesh (Rom.8:3).

Joy (not gratuitous joy, but well deserved joy) be to God for His gratuitous joy to us.

LISTENING IN PHILIPPIANS

In Philippians, as in Romans, Paul speaks of Christ's under-hearing first and then of that of believers. If we understand the act as one of obedience as presently understood it is a matter of doing on the part of both. But if we understand Paul to speak of listening, the point of the two passages is enhanced considerably.

Christ was a listening Christ unto the death of the cross (Phil.2:8). He never let His God and Father's will leave His mind and heart. He never set it aside.

The Philippians as well listened to Paul's teaching even in his absence (Phil.2:12). Whether it was entreaty ("Let this mindset be in you which is in Christ Jesus also") or revelation ("Christ Jesus . . . empties Himself . . . [and] humbles Himself becoming a listening One unto death), they kept on attentively hearing what the apostle had said. With fear and trembling over such a message their salvation became effective in their lives as God operated in them (through their listening) to will as well as to work for the sake of His delight. THE FIGURE OF SALT

THE DISCIPLES ARE THE SALT OF THE LAND

> "You are the salt of the earth. Now, if the salt should be made insipid, with what will it be salted? For nothing does it still avail except to be cast outside, to be trampled by men" (Matt.5:13).

FIGURES of speech, when they are understood, help to add interest when communicating both orally and when writing. The writers of the Old and New Testaments employed them. Jesus especially used them when speaking to the crowds using parables. They evoke imagery and emotion when stating phrases such as, "salt of the earth," "furnace of fire," and "salted with fire," as well as "outer darkness." By their use, richness is added when communicating with others. They make what we say or write much more interesting. Complex ideas are conveyed using figures of speech such as similes, metaphors, personifications, hyperbole, and so on. For instance, writers of the Bible employed anthropomorphisms when trying to convey certain aspects about God. Examples are when God is described as having hands, a heart, and a soul. When plain language is not enough to convey ideas we employ figures of speech.

When explaining to the disciples that they are the salt of the land, Jesus employed the figure of likeness. He spoke of the salt becoming insipid. But what did He intend to convey by "insipid"? It would be helpful to take a trip back two thousand years ago to Israel to see how they procured salt, how it was used, and how it could become insipid. Concerning Matthew 5:13, in Christ's day, in Israel, salt was usually procured from the Dead Sea (Sea of Salt). This salt has bitter impurities such as gypsum and carnallite, and, when dried, is colorless and resembles salt. If these impurities are not removed, the sodium chloride can leach away by water and what still looks like salt would lose its saltiness because the small amount of sodium with gypsum and carnallite would not be very good tasting. Also, what is left over, having lost its salt, would not have very good preserving effects. The disciples can lose their preserving qualities as well as their savor. Such impure salt would be cast out into the street because it was not fit to be put on the land or mixed with manure for crop production.

In the Greek, in verse 13, "insipid" is mōranthê. Moron comes from the Greek word mōron. In the Keyword Concordance, in the back of the CONCORDANT LITERAL NEW TESTAMENT under mōrainō we have, "stupid (make)." According to Webster's Dictionary, a person who is insipid is weak. If we join the dictionary's idea with that in the Keyword Concordance we could come up with "weak minded"—one who is made stupid or moronic. Let us look deeper into this verse and expand on it so it makes more sense.

> You [disciples] are the salt [preserver] of the earth [Greek ge, land]. Now if the salt [disciples] should be made insipid [made stupid, weak], with what will it [the disciples] be salted [preserved]? For nothing is it [it being the disciples] still availing except [for the disciples] to be cast outside, to be trampled by human beings.

Therefore the disciples are the salt (preserver) of the land. If any of the disciples, (the twelve and thousands of other disciples) should be made stupid, or weak, they will lose their preserving qualities. Due to this, the people of the land will rise up and cast out those disciples, and will trample them under foot. In Luke 14:25-33 Jesus was talking about what it takes to be His disciple. Then He ends with this: "Ideal, then, is salt. Yet if even the salt should be made insipid, with what shall it be seasoned? Neither is it fit for the land nor for manure. Outside are they casting it. Who has ears to hear, let him hear!" (Luke 14:34-35). This being the case, if the salt/disciple is made insipid, it is not fit for the land nor even for manure since, if put in with manure, it would kill the plants the manure is put on. This is due to what looks like salt which has lost its saltiness and what is left is gypsum and carnallite. These minerals, when mixed in with manure, are poisonous to the plants. Jesus is telling them they will be cast out into the streets to be trodden upon should they become insipid.

Consequently, Jesus is telling them they need to be vigilant in looking for weakness in themselves, and be preserving the kingdom order so insubordination of the populace is kept in check. They (the twelve and many other disciples) will be preserving the societal structure which they are to be presiding over. Otherwise it will end badly for those disciples as well as the society they are ruling over. The people will rise up and cast them out of their position of rulership and trample them under foot.

In Matthew 25:19-23 it is said of the ones faithful over what "the lord of those slaves" gives them, when he returns, he will be placing them over many. So the twelve preside over the twelve tribes (cp Matt.19:28, Luke 22:30), and there will be many disciples placed over cities and humans. For example, in Luke 19:17, one faithful servant will be placed over ten cities.

Jesus was not made stupid but He was made weak. He wanted to gather Jerusalem's children as a hen gathers her brood but they would not. Instead, they said "we do not want this man to reign over us" (Luke 19:14). They cast Him out and trampled Him under foot. "For even if He was crucified out of weakness, nevertheless He is living by the power of God . . ." (2 Cor.13:4). Had He exhibited power—He could have called twelve legions of messengers (cf Matt.26:53)—they would not have been able to cast Him out to trample Him.

JESUS LEADS BY EXAMPLE AS THE SALT OF THE EARTH

When Jesus returns to reign over Israel and the nations, lawlessness and insubordination will be dealt with swiftly. He will rule with great power and authority. Prior to setting up His millennial reign He must do battle and be victorious over all opposition. We see this in Revelation 19:15: "And out of His mouth a sharp blade is issuing, that with it He should be smiting the nations. And He will be shepherding them with an iron club. And He is treading the wine trough of the fury of the indignation of God, the Almighty." Notice the figures employed in the above verse: "out of His mouth a sharp blade is issuing," and "shepherding," also, "iron club" as well as "treading the wine trough."

> "Yet who will endure the day of His coming? And who will stand when He appears? For He is like a refiner's fire, and like the soap of launderers. And He will sit like a refiner and a cleanser of silver. And He will cleanse the sons of Levi, and purify them like gold and like silver. And they will come to be for Yahweh, bringing close the approach present in righteousness" (Mal.3:2,3).

"Cupellation is a refining process in metallurgy in which ores or alloyed metals are treated under very high temperatures and subjected to controlled operations to separate noble metals, like gold and silver, from base metals, like lead, copper, zinc, arsenic . . ." (WIKIPEDIA).

We are not told exactly how Jesus is going to purify or cupel the sons of Levi like a refiner and cleanser of silver. The end result of the refining or cupelling process is that the Levites will bring the approach present in righteousness. So the cupellation must separate the base things of unrighteousness from the precious substance of righteousness which remains for proper service in the temple. The refiner of silver knows when the refining is completed when he sees his image reflected in the silver.

SALTED WITH FIRE AND SALTED WITH SALT

When explaining to the disciples concerning sins associated with the hands, feet, and eyes, and the consequential threat as to the fires of Gehenna, Jesus stated:

> "And if your hand should ever be snaring you, strike it off. It is ideal for you to be entering into life maimed, rather than, having two hands, to come away into Gehenna, into the unextinguished fire where their worm is not deceasing and the fire is not going out. And if your foot should be snaring you, strike it off. For it is ideal for you to be entering into life maimed or lame, rather than, having two feet, to be cast into Gehenna, into the unextinguished fire, where their worm is not deceasing and the fire is not going out. And if your eye should be snaring you, cast it out. It is ideal for you to be entering into the kingdom of God one-eyed, rather than, having two eyes, to be cast into the Gehenna of fire, where their worm is not deceasing and the fire is not going out" (Mark 9:43-48).

Gehenna, the fire, and worm are literal. The fire and worm, during the millennial reign are useful for dealing with the garbage of the city throughout the time of that future eon. Concerning the fire not going out, why would the inhabitants of Jerusalem even try to extinguish the fire in Gehenna? It serves a useful purpose. Their constant burning of refuse in Gehenna is testimony to the great blessings the inhabitants of Jerusalem will be enjoying. With a largess of blessings comes an unrelenting disposal of waste by fire and worms.

THE FIGURE "SALTED WITH FIRE"

> "For everyone will be salted with fire, and every sacrifice will be salted with salt. Ideal is the salt, yet if the salt should be becoming savorless [UN-SALT], with what will you be seasoning it? Have salt in yourselves and be at peace with one another" (Mark 9:49,50).

> "All of your approach presents shall you salt with salt; and you shall not cause the salt of the covenant of your Elohim to cease on your approach present. On all of your approach presents shall you bring salt near to Yahweh your Elohim" (Lev.2:13).

Notice "one" in everyone" in Mark 9:49 (quoted above) is in lightface in the CONCORDANT VERSION. It is literally "EVERY for IN FIRE-WILL-BE-BEING-SALTED." Could it be every person in Israel who commits these egregious sins listed in Mark 9:42-48 will be salted (preserved in their sinful state)? Prior to Mark 9:49,50 Jesus admonished over and over concerning the worms, the unextinguished fire, and the Gehenna of fire, and which sins will cause an Israelite to receive the death penalty. They will then have their dead body cast into Gehenna rather than receive a decent entombment. Then He used the conjunction "for" to start verse 49. By using this conjunction, the connection is made between Gehenna and every(one) being salted with fire. He is telling the disciples, I am explaining to you disciples concerning the fires of Gehenna, for (or the reason why this is so, is), every (failing of the flesh I recently spoke of) will result in that person being cast into Gehenna and shall be being salted (shall be being preserved) in their sins in fire, in Gehenna. The twelve will need to keep these standards concerning the eyes, hands and feet when they sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes. I wonder how many thousands of Israelites will enter the kingdom of God with one eye and one hand, hobbling along on one foot so as to avoid the Gehenna of fire? Of course, we know Gehenna is not their final, so-called "eternal" preservation or fate as some wrongly claim. We know God eventually will save them as well due to Christ giving Himself a ransom for all per 1 Timothy 2:4-6. Also, He was not explaining this only to the twelve disciples for there were many disciples. (In 1 Corinthians 15:6 Paul says, "He was seen by over five hundred brethren at once.")

THE LITERALNESS OF "SALTED WITH SALT"

Jesus continues His discourse in Mark 9:49: "and every sacrifice will be salted with salt." Sacrifices salted with salt is in the law of Moses, specifically Leviticus 2:13. It is of great interest to note Jesus appending to His explanation related to Gehenna and what it takes to receive such a judgment, "For, . . . every sacrifice will be salted with salt." He is detailing to the disciples that the law of Moses will be stringently followed during His reign. Israel, to a great degree, will be preserved from failures of non-law compliance due to the threat of Gehenna. Also, the sacrificial system will be stringently enforced.

The Greek word pas (used in Mark 9:49) is also translated "entire" in Matthew 3:5, "Then went out to him Jerusalem and entire Judea, and the entire country about the Jordan." Similarly Mark 9:49 could be: "For entire (Israel) in fire will be salted (preserved)," thus showing the preserving effect which the salting with fire of Gehenna will have on holding the majority of Israelites back from committing grave sins recently enumerated.

"Since the kingdom has been rejected, entrance into it is necessarily a path of judgment. Salt is a preservative. During the kingdom era corruption will be stayed. The salt that counteracts the corruption of that day will be fire, a judgment. As already elaborated, nothing that offends can enter that kingdom. It must be judged. If not, it will drag down those who harbor it into Gehenna and its fires" (A. E. Knoch, CONCORDANT COMMENTARY, p.74).

In the above two passages salt is used both literally and figuratively. During the millennial reign, every sacrifice will literally be salted with salt. It is helpful to understand that salt was used to preserve sacrifices prior to bringing them to the temple to be offered up by the Levites. Being salted with fire obviously is a figurative usage of salt since one does not sprinkle fire on a person like one sprinkles salt on a sacrifice of meat.

SALT REPRESENTING SAVOR

After explaining to the disciples the determining factors that result in one being cast into Gehenna, encouragement is given the disciples by using the figure of salt to represent seasoning: "Ideal is the salt, yet if the salt should be becoming savorless, with what will you be seasoning it? Have salt in yourselves and be at peace with one another" (Mark 9:50). Savorless, analon is literally "UN-SALT." One who is savorless is a pungent, bitter person; one who cannot coexist in peace with others. What is remaining when salt loses its savor? The bitter gypsum and carnallite is left. Savor is recognized by scent, taste and a pleasant inner quality. In this usage of salt, Christ is employing it as a figure representing an inner quality rather than preservation. If salt loses its savor, with what can they make it savorable again? If the salt becomes un-salt, what remains is the unusable bitter impurities such as gypsum and carnallite. The disciples are encouraged to not lose their peaceful, sweet demeanor, which results in being at peace with one another.

When the Lord returns to Israel, His disciples will become the salt of the land. As salt, they will be the preservers of the law-based system Christ will set up during His millennial reign. The fires of Gehenna will have a preserving effect on Israel and the disciples' reign with Christ will have a preserving effect on the entire planet.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, THIRD QUARTER 2025
BEING THE THIRD NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED SIXTEEN

EDITORIAL

THIS issue of Unsearchable Riches begins with an emphasis on joy and peace (pages 99-108), and ends with passages of scripture which speak among other matters of lamentation and gnashing of teeth (pages 135-144). In this the need to be correctly cutting the word of truth is certainly called for. To be sure, Christ's millennial reign is certainly "glorious" (as noted at the end of Tony Nungesser's article). But it lacks the glory spoken of in God's evangel concerning His Son.

Yet in order to see more clearly the glory of God's evangel of joy and peace concerning His Son there needs to be an adjustment at several points in our translation, followed by an adjustment in understanding. Even as the transcendent riches of Christ (Eph.2:7) call for an adjustment in the spiritual endowments given to us in the present administration (see A. E. Knoch's article, "Adjusting the Saints," pages 109-123), so the evangel calls for adjustment in our appreciation of God.

An adjustment in translation, such as "God's righteousness" instead of "a righteousness of God" in Romans 3:21, 22, calls for a recognition of God's own attribute of righteousness being manifested here before we go forward with the subject of the justification of the sinner. Then, in the same passage, we are to see that Paul is speaking of the manifestation of God's righteousness in His joyous achievement of justification as coming about through Jesus Christ's own faith rather than the believer's faith, as widely claimed.

Now that at least the critical matter of the faith of Christ

Jesus rather than our faith in Him has been recognized (and indeed done so successfully) by numerous scholars, much adjustment in translation and commentaries as well as preaching is called for. Whether or not this will happen is uncertain. It is certainly resisted.

For instance, I would adjust Millard J. Erickson's discussion of justification in his book, CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY,[1] as follows:

"[Our] justification is something completely undeserved [but it is righteous and reveals God's righteousness]. It is not an achievement [on our part, neither by works of law nor by our faith]. It is an obtainment, not an attainment [on our part, but an achievement on God's part, through the giving up of His Son, and on Christ's part Who gives Himself in fullest and purest of faith]. Even [our] faith is not some good work [while Christ's faith is the greatest of good works] which God must reward with salvation. [Christ's faith is the good work which reveals and manifests God's righteousness in justifying and saving sinners which must be fully brought about in all being constituted righteous.] It [the salvation of the justification of sinners] is God's [righteous] gift [of joy]. It [our faith] is not the cause of our salvation, but the means by which we receive it."

Yet we all need adjustment from time to time in our believing as we listen attentively to God's evangel concerning His Son, and as this message is translated in accord with the way in which it was originally understood (as such is possible). God is operating all things, and is doing so through the Son of His love, Whom He spares not, but gives up for the sake of sinners. This is for all, and it is on all, already reckoned to all who are believing it, to whom the consummations of the eons have attained in spirit.

GOD'S EVANGEL

[32] Surely He Who spares° not His own 'Son, but gives Him up [ov]for us all, how shall He not, together with Him, also be [JOY]graciously° granting us 'all? (Rom.8:32)

GOD'S evangel is set before us in Romans 1-8 and applied to Israel and the nations in chapters 9 through 11, and summed up as it affects our walk now, in the world in which we live, in chapters 12 through 16.

Using two fact verbs, "spares not" and "gives up," followed by a future tense, "shall be graciously granting" (with the "graciously" being taken in the sense of "joyously"), Romans 8:32 condenses God's evangel in plain words, and should ever be kept in view.

CONCERNING GOD'S SON

That which God does, His act of sparing not but giving up concerns His Own Son and what He does. God spares not His Own Son, Who dies. Thus we hear:

[8] yet 'God is commending 'this love of [sf]His [io]to us, seeing that, while we are still being sinners, Christ dies [ov]for our sakes. (Rom.5:8)

We also have come into the picture. God spares not His Own Son, but gives Him up for us all, and Christ dies for our sakes. Consequently:

For even as through the disregarding of the one human the many are constituted sinners, thus also through the listening of the One the many shall be 'constituted righteous. (Rom.5:19)

In these three verses there may be enough to make

God's evangel known. What is said in them is but repeated in one way or another through eight chapters, but with many other important revelations added to enrich our understanding and increase our joy and peace. Therefore, keeping in mind what is said about God, His Son and us in these marvelous passages, we may go forward through all that is said from the beginning.

Without anywhere near covering all that is said (who indeed could do that?) I am proposing here to share some of what I have come to see at least in the opening passages as they first set God's evangel before us.

THE ENSLAVED AND SEVERED APOSTLE

Paul, "a sign in every epistle" (2 Thess.3:17), presents his credentials as an evangelist in three respects: 1. Christ Jesus's slave . . . for God's evangel, 2. a called apostle . . . for God's evangel, and 3. severed for God's evangel.

(The phrases "slave of-Christ Jesus" and "evangel of-God," as expressed in Greek, are anarthrous, that is without "the's." Our minds are taken immediately from the first term to the second, giving it an emphasis that is at least equal to the first term. This seems to be well expressed by the English possessive case: "Christ Jesus's slave" and "God's evangel." (There are numerous other such anarthrous, genitive phrases to be noted as we go along.)

CHRIST JESUS'S SLAVE

It is as Christ Jesus's slave that Paul directs his attention to (literally into) God's evangel. We are apt to think of this slavery only in terms of what Paul does in bringing the evangel, such as the list he presents (quite reluctantly) in 2 Corinthians 11:23-28 and his plans for coming to Rome and then going on to Spain as set forth here in this letter to the saints in Rome. But as Paul writes of slavery in Romans 6:16,17, there is a mental aspect that takes precedence over the physical aspect, and that is described by the Greek word, [h]upakouō (UNDER-HEAR). Here is a matter of attentive listening which has become sadly lost (though originally dominant) in the English word "obedience." It is as Christ's slave that Paul makes known the evangel, "that it is not in accord with a human. For neither do I accept it from a human, nor am I taught it [at the side of a human teacher], but it comes through Jesus Christ's revelation" (Gal.1:10-12). To this revelation he is an attentive slave, enslaving his mind to God's "law," which is God's evangel as distinguished from the law of the God given at Sinai as well as from "sin's law" (Rom.7:21-25).

A CALLED APOSTLE

Although "the least of the apostles" as to competency in record (1 Cor.15:9), Paul knows firsthand the joy of God's grace which he is heralding to irreverent and unrighteous humanity, most distinctly as the apostle to the nations (Rom.11:13). In this his competency in his apostleship is his incompetency in his reputation. He was what he was. "Yet," he exclaims, *"in God's grace [*JOY]and His grace, [JOY], that which is in me, does not come to be for naught, but more exceedingly than all of them [the other apostles] toil I—yet not I, but the grace [JOY] of God which is together with me" (1 Cor.15:10).

SEVERED FOR GOD'S EVANGEL

Paul is severed from all that was gain to him by birth. For ". . . it delights God, Who severs me from my mother's womb and calls me through His grace [JOY], to unveil His Son in me that I may be evangelizing Him among the nations" (Gal.1:15,16). Those things which were gain to him in birth and in relation to the law, those he has deemed a forfeit because of Christ (Phil.3:4-9). Jeremiah was hallowed, that is, set apart, for service as a prophet, even before Yahweh formed him in his mother's belly and he came forth from the womb (Jer.1:5). But Paul is severed for making known God's evangel as an adult as pictured metaphorically by his birth and the cutting of the umbilical cord. It is a very keen and settled separation, so much so that he can rightly call that evangel, "my evangel" (Rom.2:16; 16:25).

GOD'S EVANGEL

Paul is writing to us as Christ Jesus's slave, and as a called apostle, having been severed from all that was gain to him by birth, and all of these positions are being directed into the making known of God's evangel.

God is speaking. And it is well for us to listen. Once again we turn to Romans 6:16; "Are you not aware that to whom you are presenting yourselves as slaves for listening his slaves you are, to whom you are listening . . . ?" If someone has something to say, he or she wants others to listen. God has a message for us that is altogether good. Listen to it.

It is God's evangel (which He promises before through His prophets in holy scripture) concerning His Son . . . .

God's evangel is promised in holy scripture. It gives cohesion to God's Word because it concerns God's Son Who is the central character of Scripture, as it speaks of good. What scripture says about humans and what they are to do tends to take our attention away from what it says about God's Son. Only by giving attention to what it says concerning God's Son can we hear exactly what God is saying in His evangel.

First of all, then, Paul evangelizes God's evangel as it concerns God's Son in dealing with two primal evils afflicting the earth, chaos and vacancy (cf Gen.1:2): God's Son [b]comes° out of David's seed according to the flesh, and He is designated God's Son [i]with power, according to a spirit of holiness, [o]by dead ones' resurrection.

Chaos is put to an end by God's Son coming "out of David's seed" as prophesied in 2 Samuel 7:12. There Yahweh speaks to David through the prophet Nathan, saying, "I will raise up your seed after you that shall come forth from your internal parts; and I will establish his kingdom." Now in Romans 1:3 Paul identifies this seed of David's as God's Son, the central figure of God's evangel. The apostle makes much the same connection again in 2 Timothy 2:8, saying: "Remember Jesus Christ, Who has been roused from among the dead ones, is out of David's seed, according to my evangel . . . ." God's Son will reign as One Who descends according to flesh from David. And this is so as His reign is expanded in 1 Corinthians 15:25-28 (by the holy prophet, Paul): "For He must be reigning [as One Who is in the line of a human king] until He should place all His enemies under His feet . . . (see also Ephesians 1:10 and Philippians 2:10,11 and Colossians 1:16-20.)

Only as He empties and humbles Himself is God's Son exalted above every name with the Name Jesus (Yahweh-Saviour) and all chaos be put away in permanence.

This is one great, future good of God's good message concerning His Son.

But Paul follows it (again, only briefly) with another great, future good: God's Son "is designated God's Son with power, according to a spirit of holiness, by dead ones' resurrection."

This puts an end to the horrible vacancy of death. God's Son is designated God's Son, not by His resurrection from among the dead, as most translations and commentaries indicate (although His own resurrection is critical), but by powerful and distinctively holy spirit which He is given for resurrecting dead ones. It is as Paul puts it in 1 Corinthians 15:21-22, "For since in fact through a human comes death, through a Human also comes the resurrection of the dead ones. For even as, in Adam, all are dying, thus also, in Christ shall all be vivified."

PAUL AND US

Now in Romans 1:5-14 we return to the matter of Paul's distinctive apostleship as Christ Jesus's slave, severed for God's evangel. Now also those being addressed are particularly in view. But all that is said about Paul (and other apostles) and us is viewed as channeled through One only and in view of His place in God's evangel, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

We must not lose sight of that. The "concerning" God's Son has become "through" Jesus Christ our Lord, which is repeated in verse 8 where Paul is thanking God "through Jesus Christ" and in the parenthesis of 2:16b where Paul associates the evangel (as his evangel) with the words: "through Jesus Christ." The same wording comes before us again in Romans 3:22 (God's righteousness has been made manifest "through Jesus Christ's faith") and again in 3:24,25,30, and at such important evangelical points as 5:1,9,10,11,17,19,21. (See also Galatians 2:16 and 3:22 and Ephesians 2:8 where "through faith" must certainly be Christ Jesus's faith, as in Ephesians 3:12, and as in Philippians 3:9 where righteousness sourced in God is "through Christ's faith").[1]

JOY AND PEACE

It is at this point that Paul greets us as he does in all his letters:

JOYGrace to =you and peace from God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Paul first spoke of grace in verse 5 as something of joy

1. In some similar passages, the "through" is replaced by "out."

which he (and other apostles) obtained along with the position of apostleship. In verse 7 he greets God's beloved ones, called by Jesus Christ as saints. They are the "you," but a group of "you" who are among those to whom Paul is commissioned, among all nations, "for listening of faith." Now if we are listening to what Paul is saying and listening with faith (for there is no perceptible proof of what he is saying), we have joined the "you" in Rome and the "you" to whom he was commissioned, among all nations. And we have joined the "you" he greets in verse 7.

GRACE AS JOY

The word "grace" has the essential meaning of JOY as indicated in the CVNT. In both 1:5 and 1:7 it is certainly undeserved joy, and this is so in most occurrences. But it is not so in Romans 6:17, 1 Corinthians 15:57 and 2 Corinthians 9:5 (as well as Romans 7:25 as in the CVNT). The Latin translation as published by the United Bible Societies uses gratia or gratias in all these passages. But the early English translations all used a form of thanks. This was followed by the CV and most other English translations. This situation has led to the suggestion by some scholars that there are two distinct words here in Greek with the very same spelling.

Yet if we understand that JOY is the denotation of this word to be heard whenever it appears, and that the idea of something undeserved is a connotation, applying only in certain usages, the whole problem is solved, and God's word is opened up. Paul greets us with joy and peace. Both are undeserved, but they are what they are, matters of joy and peace.

At this point at least, I do not see that we can discard the word "grace," for in the evangel the joy is gratuitous, bestowed apart from human contribution. But we must always hear that this is a matter of joy.

Thus Paul says to us first of all "Joy to you from God, our Father," and then he says, "Peace to you from God our Father. And then he says, "Joy to you from the Lord Jesus Christ," followed by, "Peace to you from the Lord Jesus Christ."

These are words of evangel, indeed of God's evangel concerning His Son, and they are directed to "you" who are sinners. For "all sin and are wanting of the glory of God, being justified gratuitously in God's joy" (Rom.3: 23,24). And it is that while we are still sinners that Christ dies for our sakes as we read in Romans 5:8. This is joy and peace for sinners who do not deserve such blessings. And this is from God, our Father, Who spares not His own Son but gives Him up for us all. Furthermore this is from the Lord Jesus Christ Who dies for us. And so we say to God, "Joy to You!"[2]

THANKING GOD

It is in view of joy and peace from God, our Father, and [from] the Lord Jesus Christ that Paul now says:

8 First indeed I am thanking [well-joying] my ·God through Jesus Christ [Who dies] concerning all of =you [including us who were not yet born] that =your ·faith [not that "you have faith" but "the faith itself which you have"] is being announced° in the whole world [the system of things as they are].

We may say here that in Romans 6:17 Paul directs joyful appreciation to God for the joy God gives to us in "sending His own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh and concerning sin, He condemns sin in the flesh" (Rom.8:3). That is, we direct joy to God for such an evangel. Now in Romans 1:8 Paul is giving God an even richer, joyful recognition of the joy from Him Who spares not His own Son. And this is the way he puts it "first" of all.

2. And so also God "*re*joices" His Son with a Name that is above every name (Phil.2:9).

God's evangel concerning His Son is the faith of the Roman saints (the message they are believing), both theirs and Paul's (Rom.1:12) and ours today.

PAUL'S PRAYERS

Paul's thanksgiving is thus for the fact that God's evangel concerning His Son is being announced in the whole world. This evangel is our faith to which we are to be listening. It is the evangel of God's Son.

[9] For [Paul adds] ·God |is my Witness, to Whom I am offering divine service in my ·spirit in the evangel of His ·Son, how unintermittingly I am making° mention of =you always om in my ·prayers [10] beseeching° if somehow, sometime at length I shall be |prospered in the will of ·God to come tod* =you. [11] For I am longing to p see =you that I may share q some spiritual gift of JOY grace with =you io for =you ·to be established . . . . (Rom.1:9-11)

We may listen to this beseeching prayer of Paul's which he was praying in all his prayers as one that is still being heard by God as having us in view as it had the saints in Rome in view when this was written so long ago. But now Paul's coming and sharing is by means of what he writes and says in this epistle. It is in this way that God is hearing Paul's prayers as making mentioning of us whom Paul never saw in his flesh as he did the Roman saints. Nevertheless Paul is sharing spiritual joy with us in his presentation of God's evangel concerning His Son. God is seeing to it that Paul is with us in spirit as we listen to what Paul is saying to the Roman believers here in this epistle sent to them, for them to be established.

We are thus brought into the "you" of Paul's prayers.

ADJUSTING THE SAINTS

THE transcendent nature of the present outflow of God's favor corresponds with the exaltation of Christ among the celestials. Because He is "up over all who are of the heavens" (Eph.4:10), we are raised to the heights supreme. It is not, indeed, as the English may suggest, that He is located in space at a point outside of and beyond the universe, for that is a palpable absurdity. As to space, the universe is made up of the earth and the heavens. The more accurate Greek makes it of the heavens, for He is the highest of the celestial hosts, not as to space, but as to dignity and glory. There can be no higher exaltation. He completes the universe (Eph.4:10).

He Who descended into the lower parts of the earth has now ascended to the highest heavens. Just as the celestial aspect of the secret of Christ is the basis of the secret economy, so now also, the completeness of Christ's sweep of all creation is the basis of our maturity. A complete revelation raises us to the plane of adults. Being associated with Christ in His headship of the whole universe the believers now have attained their majority.

The inauguration of the present administration of God's grace brought many changes with it. This called for an adjusting of the saints, in the language of inspiration (Eph. 4:12). It is figuratively presented as the change from minority to manhood (Eph.4:13; 1 Cor.13:10). The new celestial destiny severed the saints from earthly, physical blessing, which they had enjoyed as guests of Israel's covenants. The new status of the nations demanded that their spiritual growth be completed, so that they may truly be the complements of Christ among the celestials.

The spiritual manifestations of so-called "gifts" give us a graphic illustration of the changes involved. The twelfth chapter of first Corinthians shows what the nations had before the secret was revealed. The fourth of Ephesians tells us what gifts are ours today. There are great changes. Most of the early gifts were dropped in this adjustment. They are no longer needed. Two new ones were added. Three are carried over. Of the gifts which enter this administration, apostles, prophets, and teachers were known before. They link us with the past. Evangelists and pastors are unique, for they had not been classed as gifts before.

The accompanying lists of the spiritual endowments given in Paul's ministry will help us to compare and study these "gifts." First we have the nine gifts which were temporary expedients during the transitional era between the pentecostal administration and the present. These are individual manifestations of the spirit. Next we have eight corporate endowments, connected with membership in the body of Christ. These are arranged in the order of their rank. Note particularly that the first three—apostles, prophets, and teachers—are found again in Ephesians.

Then we have a special list of those which were to be discarded by the incoming of maturity. The last column gives us the facts in Ephesians. First we have the list of those given for adjusting the saints. Finally we find that two of these are confined to the foundation. This leaves three spiritual endowments today—evangelists, pastors, and teachers.

It is worth every effort needed to clear up the relation between the gifts in first Corinthians and Ephesians. Two extreme and opposing positions are based on untenable views of this relation. A large number of zealous believers claim that all of the gifts may still be appropriated by faith and that many are in exercise today. As in Corinth, they emphasize the gift of "tongues." Healing is also pressed. On the other hand, some cut off Corinthians entirely, claiming that we have absolutely no connection with them. We are told that the dispensation of the secret is unique, and is neither a blend nor a development of Corinthians, but a newly created thing, far above all. In contrast with both of these positions, the Scriptures, both in Corinthians and Ephesians, illustrate the relation between the two by the figures of minority and maturity. This is the key to the subject.

This figure avoids both extremes. It is in harmony with the fact that some of the gifts were present in the past which are ours today. It agrees with the setting aside of the lesser gifts and the retention of the greater. It accords with the character of the gifts which have been retained and those which have been repudiated. Paul and others were apostles and teachers in Corinthians and remained such in Ephesians. They were not reappointed, as though their previous services were not recognized. The figure of a new creation is not in point here. A man is not recreated when he reaches maturity. Some things remain as they were. Others are dropped because they are suited only to minority.

The believers among the nations had been enjoying some things, as the guests of Israel's promise covenants, which find no appropriate place among the spiritual, celestial blessings which characterize the present grace. Perhaps if such a change should be brought about in these days we would call it a reorganization. If a great business should change the sphere of its operations and the character of its products, some of its machinery would become useless and be discarded. Its system of doing business would be revised to suit the new conditions. So it was when this charter of our faith was first given. Some things were entirely dropped, others merely modified. Physical benefits vanished. Earthly disabilities disappeared. In Paul's preparatory epistles the believers are seen in the period of adolescence. They verge upon manhood. Some of the gifts given them at that time were the relics of childhood. Others were intended to develop them into manhood. The youth learns to talk and to care for his physical frame. These are represented by the gifts of healing and "tongues." The principal task of adolescence is the schooling and training for the duties of life. It is concerned with self-development, not with the care of others or the duties of maturity.

GIFTS FOR EXPEDIENCE

The manifestations of the spirit, given to the Corinthians, were expedients (1 Cor.12:7). Let us not miss this inspired characterization, which assures us that they were not ideal, permanent endowments, but only temporary measures to fill a lack which has since been supplied. "Now to each one is being given the manifestation of the spirit, with a view to expedience." The Authorized Version rendering, "profit" is misleading, though of course it is not untrue. Expedients are resorted to because they are profitable or helpful for a time. This word, sumpherō, they translate profit seven times, and seven times expedient. Another word, oninêmi, means profit. The loss of an eye or a hand can hardly be called profitable, though it may be expedient (Matt.5:29,30). It was expedient for the Lord to go away (John 16:7). Absence is not His permanent condition. All is allowed us, but not all is expedient (1 Cor.6:12). In every occurrence there is but a transient advantage gained by expedience.

This is confirmed by the fact that none of these endowments are reaffirmed in Ephesians. They are suited to the times of transition which introduced the present grace. It is put beyond all question by the further fact that all three of the gifts which are definitely discarded are found in this list of expedient spiritual endowments (1 Cor.12:7-10). These are prophecy, languages, and knowledge (13:8). They were necessary at that time, but such expedients are no longer needed since the present administration has been fully established. Instead of giving a few individuals supernatural fragments of information, God has completed the whole circle of knowledge in His latest revelation. This is open to all. Now each believer has access to all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in Christ.

The more we know of the transitional era which accompanied Paul's early ministries, the more we see the necessity of temporary spiritual manifestations to tide the believers over into the present grace. Although we now have a record of this period in Paul's earlier epistles, as well as the full revelation which closed it, how few of the believers are really clear about it! Since early times the church has found this period prolific in confusion, for few understood that it was not a permanent part of the present. If this is so, how difficult must it have been for those who lived in those changing times to keep step with God's operations! There was no finally formulated system of truth, as we now have it in Ephesians. God was still occupied with Israel. If we lived in an era in which God was winding up one system of truth while He was unfolding another, there would be more excuse for confusion than there is. They needed temporary help to tide them over the time of transition.

The expedients are of two different kinds. Some linked them on to the kingdom and the powers of the coming eon. These were powerful deeds, healing, languages and translation. These will find their fullest fulfillment in the millennium. Humanly speaking, if Israel had not rejected the Messiah in Acts, these gifts would have flourished more and more, yet they would be exercised only in subordination to Israel. They had nothing to do with Israel being set aside. The other gifts linked them to the approaching change, when Israel should be rejected. Without knowing what was in store for them, they would naturally fall into folly and ignorance. Hence some were specially endowed with knowledge and wisdom. Their faith would fail, as did that of so many in Israel, as the kingdom receded. There was need of the gift of prophecy, to receive direct word from God. Spirits must be discriminated, lest they be led contrary to God's intention. All of these gifts are displayed in Paul's epistles to them. All of the other group were found exemplified in the narrative of Acts, which begins with a special exhibition of "tongues" and ends with a notable example of healing (28:8).

But do we not need all of these things today? As our blessings are spiritual, among the celestials, we cannot claim the physical endowments of the coming eon. Instead of healing we are given grace for our infirmities. Instead of power we are promised weakness (2 Cor.12:9). Languages are directly denied to an era of maturity (1 Cor.13:8). Wisdom and knowledge, faith, and prophecy, and the discrimination of spirits may be greatly needed today, but they are no longer individual gifts. All the wisdom and knowledge we need is found in the secret now revealed. That is God's final word to us. No gift of prophecy is needed (1 Cor. 13:8). And by this completed revelation we may test all spirits. The dispensation in which we now live abrogates all of the spiritual manifestations which the apostle so carefully labeled expedients.

We are not aware that this point has been pressed before. Hence we wish to urge it upon all who believe God. Many lines of reasoning may be developed to show that these gifts are no longer with us, but none should appeal to the man of God as the word here used by the holy spirit. Before we are even told that these gifts existed, their temporary character is asserted. This will be enough for everyone who wishes to believe God. We do not doubt that there are spiritual manifestations today which seem to correspond to the lesser gifts. Such there were even in those days. A special gift was needed to discriminate the spirits. If this endowment existed today it would unhesitatingly class all of these as the work of deceiving spirits. It is an effort to engross the believers with the things of minority in order to keep them from attaining majority, which is the primary object of the real gifts we have today.

Let us note carefully the opposite effect, the direct contrast, between the modern "gifts"—healing and tongues—and those given us by God. The former drag us back to childhood; the latter bring us to manhood. Pastors, evangelists, and teachers are given "toward the adjusting of the saints for the work of dispensing, for the upbuilding of the body of Christ, unto the end that we should all attain to the unity of the faith and of the realization of the son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature of Christ's complement, that we may by no means still be minors, surging hither and thither and being carried about by every wind of teaching . . ." (Eph.4:12-14). Languages are listed by God as the least of all the gifts of minority. True pastors, evangelists, and teachers lead in the contrary direction, toward maturity. That is their special function if they are faithful.

There are many methods of testing God's servants today which are without warrant in the Word. Success sometimes signifies failure in God's sight. Here, however, we have God's standard. Here He tells us what He expects. The test we should apply is found in this passage. Do they dispense that which edifies the body of Christ, so that all have one faith and realize their sonship and maturity in Christ? Alas! the very idea of maturity is unknown to many and their ministry is more calculated to make infants out of full-grown believers than to make mature saints out of minors. Let us note that the prime object of the gifts we now possess is to lead the saints beyond the lesser gifts which characterized minority. We are mature in Christ! Let us not relapse into infancy!

The eight spiritual endowments placed in the ecclesia by God are not introduced as expedients, hence we find that three of them enter the present administration. The notable point is that these three are expressly put at the head of the list and numbered, lest they should be misplaced. "First, apostles, second, prophets, third, teachers, thereupon . . ." (1 Cor.12:28). Furthermore, the other gifts are discounted by the exhortation, "Be zealous for the greater graces." This is followed by a statement which practically repudiates the lesser gifts. In confirmation of this we read that the last and least—languages—is to cease (1 Cor.13:8). The five unnumbered gifts, powers, healing, supports, pilotage, languages, are not suited to the present era of transcendence (1 Cor.12:31).

ABROGATED BY MATURITY

Prophecies, languages, knowledge are the gifts which are expressly discarded in the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians. All three are found in the first series which are expedient, and one—languages—is also the last of the second group, which is arranged according to rank. The gift of "tongues," therefore, is the least of all the gifts. But the path of transcendence which we now tread does not merely discard the signs of the coming eon, as languages and powers and healing, but also abrogates prophecies and the gift of knowledge. The reason given is that these were but installments and, in the impending era (in which we now dwell), such fragmentary revelations will be unnecessary because God will have given a full-orbed prophecy embracing all knowledge. Such we have in this Ephesian epistle.

The fact that the gift of prophecy has been abrogated is evident from the many modern attempts to supplement God's revelation. All who have sought to add to God's Word have only manifested their ignorance of what He has already revealed. I would advise those who imagine that they have a direct message from God to get a grasp of the Ephesian letter. They will find His Word final and complete. It is sufficient for every present need. The gift of prophecy, or the power to speak as the mouthpiece of God, has been abrogated. The only prophets in this administration are in the foundation, and all that they might reveal is already spread out before us in the epistles of Paul, the greatest prophet of them all.

A distinction should be maintained between the gift of prophecy, as one of the spirit's manifestations, which was given for individual exercise in the ecclesia, and the office of prophet, as given to the ecclesia to complete the Word of God. Paul was the great apostle and prophet through whom the truth was given in permanent form and incorporated in the Scriptures. The fragmentary prophecies were temporary expedients, but the gift of prophecy remains with us, in spiritual form, in the sacred scrolls. The prophet is found in the foundation. His prophecies, unlike those earlier manifestations of which we have no record, are written for all to read.

In the Corinthian letter we notice that some gifts are discounted, though not forbidden. The gift of languages, or "tongues," together with interpretation is last on the lists, and is discouraged. The apostle declares he would rather speak five words with his mind, to instruct others, than ten thousand in a language which they could not understand (1 Cor.14:19). He gives notice that it is only a temporary endowment, for it would cease (1 Cor.13:8). It is not included in the latest list, given in Ephesians (Eph.4:11). It is beyond question that the "gift of tongues" is the least adapted to maturity.

The testimony of the Scriptures is sufficient, and I am not adding what follows to confirm it. It may, however, be helpful to those who do not clearly see that this gift has ceased, and who appeal to its presence as a fact. I have lived for about a score of years at the very center of the tongues movement and have had ample opportunity to hear it exercised. I have listened most carefully, each time I have heard, in order to determine if the utterance had the characteristics of language. It never has. There is usually a tell-tale repetition of sounds, such as one who is imitating a foreign tongue would use, after a slight acquaintance with it. No one who has a knowledge of a variety of languages has any reason to suppose that the "gift of tongues" today is a real language at all.

We do not need to turn to Ephesians to prove that most of the gifts were temporary and unsuited to the present administration. That is the burden of first Corinthians. Not only does the thirteenth chapter definitely name some which were to be abrogated, or cease, but the twelfth chapter, in which they are cataloged, just as definitely labels them as expedients, or turns us from some of them to a path suited to transcendence (1 Cor.12:31). Is it not remarkable that these two warnings, one before and one immediately following the lists of the gifts, should have been so insistently ignored or obliterated by mistranslation and misinterpretation, that the object of God's spiritual endowments has been actually reversed? Almost everywhere the believers are enticed back to babyhood instead of being built up into Christ.

It is commonly supposed that the thirteenth of first Corinthians contrasts our present experience with our future glory in resurrection. Now we are supposed to see in a glass darkly, but then face to face (1 Cor.13:12). Then we shall know as we are known. This popular and erroneous interpretation has practically robbed us of the true teaching of the chapter. The apostle is not comparing our experience in this life with that in the next. He is comparing the dispensation before it with that of the present. That was minority. This is maturity. Then matters were dimly seen which now are clear and plain. Now knowledge is not being doled out in installments. We have a full revelation since the secret has been revealed.

The fourth of Ephesians gives us the gifts for the present. The mere fact that most of the endowments listed in Corinthians are not repeated here does not prove that they are abrogated. That would not be sufficient ground for discarding them. We must intelligently consider what is said about them in Corinthians. We must recognize the fact that the time of maturity has come. Then we will see why it is that the lesser gifts cannot enter this era of transcendence. Then we will exult in their disappearance. We will thankfully take our place as mature men, and refuse even the appearance of immaturity.

APOSTLES AND PROPHETS

Of the five gifts which belong to this administration, three have continued and two are in the foundation. Apostles and prophets were imperative needs for its inauguration. God's mind must be made known by His spokesmen, and it must be accompanied with all the authority of God's commissioner. Since Paul, the greatest of all the prophets and apostles of this administration, has made a permanent record of the new revelation in his epistles, these have served the purpose of prophets and apostles. They remain with us, in spirit, in these writings. The evidence for their absence among us is not merely the lack of accredited men, but the statement that these gifts are confined to the foundation (Eph.2:20). A prophet who could not add to Paul's epistles would be useless. All who have tried it have proven to be false.

EVANGELISTS, PASTORS, TEACHERS

God's gifts today are three in number: the evangelist to preach to the world, the pastor to care for the saints, and the teacher to edify the body of Christ. The great weakness in Christendom today lies in the attempt to combine all three in a single cleric, who must entertain and shepherd saint and sinner alike, who seldom is gifted in more than one way, and often in none. With a rising tide of spirituality there has usually followed a separation of these ministries. Evangelists leave all else for their message to the unbeliever, and teachers arise and conventions are held for the one purpose of edifying the saints. In seasons of spiritual refreshing these divine manifestations come to the front.

In these last days the special need is for teachers who are themselves mature and who can establish the saints by dispensing the grace which has come to them by the revelation of the secret. Alas! most of those who are giving religious instruction today are bringing their hearers into the bondage of law and ceremony, or occupying them with the affairs of minority, and are thus dragging the believers down when they should be building them up. Here we have the divine test of the true teacher. Does he correspond to Ephesians 4:12-14? Is he adjusting, dispensing, upbuilding, unifying, giving the realization of sonship, maturity, and adultness? These are the seven signs of the ideal teacher.

Most of the believers today need adjusting quite as much as those to whom Ephesians was addressed. Their doctrine and experience is limited to the teaching of our Lord while on earth, or his apostles in the book of Acts. Under the false impression that "the church began at Pentecost," they seek to utilize the varying presentations which follow it to determine their creed and practice. Others go further and seek to include some of the teachings of Paul's earlier epistles, notwithstanding the grave differences between the two. How few go to Paul's final presentations and modify even his previous ministries to accord with these transcendent truths! This is the task of the true teacher today. He must, first of all, be an adjuster.

He must also be a dispenser. Much of the teaching we hear fails to emphasize the grace of God and the gratuitous character of His gifts. He is not running a bargain counter or a commercial enterprise, but a free dispensary. Very few believers even know what He has for them. It is the duty of the teacher to put them into possession of their riches in Christ Jesus.

He must edify, or build up, the body of Christ. This is a vastly different matter from entertaining the members of a church or the adherents of a denomination. The teacher who merely recognizes the fact that there is a spiritual organism to which all believers belong, irrespective of creed or affiliation, is edifying or building up the body of Christ. The teacher who ignores it or displaces it by human organizations is demolishing the one body. He who discounts human associations, and presses upon the believers their place in that marvelous organism of which Christ alone is Head, is a God-given gift, fulfilling the work of building up the body.

Many are the attempts which have been made to unite the saints. The true basis of such a unity is the one faith which we have today, which is set forth in this epistle. The cause of the divisions is the multiplicity of beliefs resulting from ignorance of this consummating revelation. If it were God's intention to make us all one before Christ comes again, He would probably call for teachers to make known the truths of this administration. This is a test of the ideal teacher. Does his message lead to the unity of all in Christ? Or does it divide the believers into classes? Especially, does it form a special, superior clique of all who heed his teaching? Let us remember that, if we all believed God we would be one in fact as we are in truth.

Sonship is a much higher thought than that conveyed by the figure of the new birth. Indeed, Paul leaves that illustration to the kingdom proclamation. He makes us a new creation, rather than a regeneration. Sonship is not necessarily based on birth. It may be obtained by adoption. It does not figure mere relationship, but the honors granted only to the heir when he comes of age, and is invested with the highest dignities which his father can bestow. It is vastly more to be a son of God than a child. A teacher in this administration should press this point, so that the saints may realize their sonship (Eph.4:13).

The crowning result of true teaching today has already been elaborated. It brings the believers to mature manhood, to the adult stature of Christ's complement (Eph. 4:13). This can be accomplished only by showing them the immature character of previous economies, and the fulless which is theirs in Christ in this transcendent administration. It is only as they realize that they have outgrown much that God once gave, and that, in Christ, they have attained their full stature, that they are fitted to stand steadfast in the midst of the turmoil in which they find themselves. False teaching carries them about (Eph.4:14), the true establishes them in grace.

The phrase "systematizing of the deception" (Eph.4:14) is a most apt description of modern methods of maintaining error. Isolated departures from truth are difficult to promulgate. They must be worked up into a philosophic system in order to become popular. The great theologies are systematized to agree with their main position, which may be a half-truth. Many of the movements of the day which appeal to the Bible for support, have so systematized their deceptions that they appear to rest on divine revelation. They seem to have enough contacts in the Scriptures to give them the appearance of truth. However, the mature believer will not be deceived by them.

The path of transcendence is the way of love, as the apostle shows in the thirteenth of first Corinthians. So it is in Ephesians (4:15,16). It is further figured by the human frame, all parts of which are in loving sympathy with all the rest, through the head. Christ is Head of the body now, and the believers are its members. There is a vital union, which makes us one with Him and with every other member. All real growth and service in the church today has this for its basis. Its motive is love. Its impulse is from the Head. Its end is the upbuilding of the body.

In this meditation we have found that the revelation of the Ephesian secret was accompanied by the incoming of maturity. Minority prevailed before, even among the Pauline ecclesias. Hence many of the gifts are discarded and only a few enter this administration. Teachers are specially given to lead the believers into a realization of the fact that they have outgrown the immaturities of past eras, and are now mature in Christ. It is our privilege to tread the path of transcendence. May God grant that many who read these lines will enter that path in conscious appreciation of the privileges of their majority.

THE NEW HUMANITY

THE saints of this secret economy are related in three different directions: Godward, Christward, and manward. If these are kept distinct it will add much to the clarity of our comprehension of this administration. We are now about to resume the consideration of these three aspects, but in the reverse order. A glance at the framework[1] of the Ephesian epistle will show that we have dealt with the three items of the mystery: first, our allotment in heaven, next, the body of Christ, then our participation with other believers. Following these there was a parenthetic interlude, consisting of two summaries and two petitions. Now we are about to take up the three aspects of the mystery again: first, "The New Humanity," or non-participation with unbelievers, then "The Body in the Lord," and lastly "The Heavenly Warfare." As will be seen in the framework, we reverse the subjects of the first part of the epistle.

As this letter is the highest revelation in Holy Writ, the most difficult for our dull intellects to grasp, we should welcome every aid to its understanding. Next to a concordant rendering, the literary structure is calculated to keep us from the confusion so common among expositors. Some inject the thought of the one body everywhere, whereas it is confined to two corresponding sections (Eph.1:20–2:10 and 5:21–6:9). It is especially bewildering when forced into the section dealing with the new humanity. Many utterly confuse the figures, and take "the new man" as merely another name for the body of Christ, to their great loss. It makes the language quite unintelligible, for the body cannot be put on or taken off, as is the case with the two humanities. It robs Christ of one of His dignities, for He is not only the Head of the body, but He is also the Head of a new race, and displaces Adam in the new creation.

We implore our readers to note carefully the distinctions in these figures. To begin with, each dominates two entirely separate sections of this epistle. They are not mixed. The body is in those sections which deal with our relationship to Christ (1:20-2:10 and 5:21-6:9). The new humanity is found only in those sections which discuss our relationship to mankind, to saints (2:11-22) and to unbelievers (4:17-5:20). In one we are likened to the members of the human body. In the other we are compared to the individuals of a race. A human body and the human race are very different symbols. There is an old, as well as a new, and a young humanity. There is no old body, or new body, or young body. These thoughts are quite confusing, when thus misapplied. The Greek word anthrōpos, in the singular, may mean a human being of either sex, or it may denote mankind as a whole. Such is the case here.

In a previous chapter on the era preceding the present, we dealt with this subject from the doctrinal standpoint (Eph.2:11-22). We found that the physical distinctions of the old humanity, especially circumcision, have no place in this new era. We who once were far off are become near by the blood of Christ. The barrier which kept us out of God's presence, typified by the "soreg," or "middle wall of partition," the central wall of the temple enclosure, has been razed. The decrees formulated by the Jerusalem council, in which the Circumcision laid down the law for the Uncircumcision, are now abrogated. Jew and Gentile believers are now created into one new humanity. This does away with the previous enmity between them. Christ is our Peace. Through Him we both have access, in one spirit, to the Father. This is the basis of the section now before us. The conduct which becomes this new race is our theme.

THE OLD HUMANITY

The old humanity has become so decayed that we are warned against wearing it any longer. This is the divine thought with regard to these two divisions of mankind. They are like two suits of clothes which may be donned at will. The "old humanity" is so worn out, disreputable, and filthy, that we are exhorted to put it off, and to put on the new (Eph.4:22,24). The only way of getting rid of the "old man" is to strip off every item of conduct which characterizes it. In Christ we are created a new humanity. In the Lord we are exhorted to conduct ourselves accordingly. The rejuvenation is in the spirit of our minds.

The old humanity is described for us in order that we may not conform to it in our conduct. We are told that the nations are walking in the vanity of their mind, their comprehension being darkened, having been estranged from the life of God because of the ignorance which is in them, because of the callousness of their hearts, leading to wantonness and uncleanness (Eph.4:17-19). It is the old story, more fully set forth in the opening chapters of the Roman epistle. Mankind did not want to retain God in their knowledge, and the inevitable result is that its heart is darkened, men become vain in their reasonings and they sink into dishonorable and destructive sins.

The first charge is that their mind becomes vain. Many may rise to challenge this in the pride of present human scientific achievement. But if we judge human mental progress by actual results, we will confess that it has accomplished nothing satisfactory. It has utterly failed to solve the great elementary questions of human existence. It is surrounded by impenetrable veils. Not a single unbeliever, no matter how learned, can answer the simple question of his own being. He does not know why he is or whither he is bound. He reasons in a circle, unable to find any goal. With all his intellectual brilliance he gets nowhere. All mentality that is not God-centered is useless and degrading in essence, no matter how fine its phraseology or how profound its philosophy.

Being ignorant of God, they are estranged from the life of God. There is a vital Power in the universe which can give men eternal youth and fulfill all the aspirations which stir their breasts. They are continually groping in this direction. How hard they try to suck satisfaction out of the husks they have! How vainly they seek to make the world, and the present life, a thing worth while! But they will not brook the interference of the Deity. They are alienated and at war with every force that emanates directly from Him. They are ignorant of His plans and of His purpose, and are seeking to carry out their own, which run counter to His. There is no ignorance so fatal as ignorance of God, no life so vain as that which is out of harmony with His heart.

As a man thinks in his heart, so is he. The mind is the key to conduct. It is not the direct suggestions of Satan which lead men into injurious excesses and debauchery. It is due rather to his indirect influence in leading them away from God. Out of the human heart, alienated from God, arise the ill-smelling and foul vapors of a decaying race.

HOW TO PUT ON THE NEW MAN

How are we to array ourselves in the new humanity? It will not do to make the exhortation of Ephesians (4:17-5:20) another law. We cannot work ourselves into a new humanity. The power lies in the gracious fact that we have been created anew. This must vitalize the spirit of our mind, before it can affect the conduct of our members. The power to strip off the old humanity and to don the new depends on our apprehension of the truth that Adam's offense and the physical divisions and disabilities which our relationship to him entailed are gone in Christ. Adam is no longer the head of our race. His place has been taken by the last Adam, our Lord Jesus Christ.

Let us then be renewed in the spirit of our minds. We are not called upon to conform to the earlier ethical standard of the law. It is far beneath this new sphere of conduct and in a lower key. Anger usually leads to sin. Yet there are times when it would be wrong not to be indignant. Such occasions call for especial care, for righteous indignation easily degenerates into wrongful anger and smouldering resentment, which would shatter the new humanity into antagonistic fragments like the old (Eph.4:26,27). There should be no grudges, no prolonged feuds, no continued vexation, no extended slander. Let no flare of indignation start a conflagration which must burn itself out.

Restitution, single, double, fourfold, or five-fold, is the righteous requirement of Sinai (Ex.22:1-15). This is far more just than the laws of the nations, for they lay almost all stress on the punishment of the thief, and very little on righting the wrong done to the victim. But grace goes far beyond justice or restoration. It is not enough for a thief to stop stealing and restore what he has stolen. That is merely corrective. In this new humanity sin is to be prevented. Those in need are to be provided for so that they will not steal. How ideal to have the erstwhile thief charged with the duty of sharing the fruits of his labor with the destitute! He who once stole now forestalls stealing.

Some day we may be able to trace the corruption of humanity in the degeneration of human language. Words, like their users, tend to descend the moral scale. It seems unreasonable to suppose that there would be tainted speech apart from the presence of sin. Here, again, we are not merely exhorted to shun the bad, but to cultivate the good.

No tainted word should issue from our mouths but there should be gracious words of edification (Eph.4:29).

The power that produces this fruit in the new humanity is the spirit of God. It is quite possible for us to fail to put on the new man, and do that which is displeasing to God. We may cause God to sorrow, by His spirit. This will react in us and cause doubt and distress. The question will arise, "Has His holy spirit left me?" The answer is supplied by comparing the spirit to a seal (Eph.4:30). It is a permanent pledge of final deliverance. Its presence is a practical guarantee that we will not be comfortable in the old humanity. It is an absolute assurance that we will be done with it forever in the future day of deliverance.

The old humanity bears bitter fruit. Its solidarity is shattered by antagonisms in all its divisions. Between nations and peoples this is most evident in time of war. What insane bitterness and fury and anger and clamor and calumny and malice is stirred in the hearts of belligerents! All this is absent in the new humanity. These destructive vices are replaced by constructive graces. Tender compassion, gracious dealing, should characterize our deportment in the new humanity. God's treatment of us, in Christ, is the standard set before us (Eph.4:32).

God Himself is the Example for our imitation (Eph.5:1). When we were sinners He gave Christ for us. When we were enemies He conciliated us to Himself through the death of His Son. As a pet child copies the ways of its father so should we imitate the loving acts of our God, in our contact with others. How much higher is this than the law! How far beyond the mere struggle for our own salvation! Nor is it only concerned with the happiness of others. It introduces us to the normal sphere of the highest of God's creatures, who should delight in Him and be His delight, who should manifest and magnify the depths of His affection.

The sacrifice of Christ has many aspects. The opening chapters of Leviticus deal with five of these. They fall into two classes, those concerned with sin and those which deal with nobler sides of His sacrificial work. The latter is of three kinds, the ascending offering, also called the "burnt offering," the present, or approach offering, also called the "meat offering" (Lev.2:1), and the peace offering (Lev.3:1). All of these are "oblations," which express the worship and homage of God's creatures even when sin does not sever them from Him. Christ was made sin for us on Golgotha. As such He suffered God's wrath. But He was also an odor of rest, a sweet smell, a delicious satisfaction. He gave Himself, not only for our sins, but as an Oblation, to win God's favor and delight (Eph.5:2).

Perhaps there is no more powerful deterrent from sin than a knowledge of this aspect of Christ's sacrifice. As the Sin and Trespass Offering He suffered for our sins, thus satisfying the demands of justice. But we are not mere neutrals, saved from indignation. He was our Approach Offering, or Present, which gives us access to the divine Presence. He was our Oblation, which secures to us God's favor when sin no longer bars our entrance. Let no one suppose that righteousness alone is sufficient to give access to God's presence. As with an earthly potentate, we must pave our way with costly gifts. Christ, as our Oblation, did this for us. Hence our walk should not merely lack sin, but should be fragrant with acts which transcend righteousness.

The gratification of the flesh, the filth of the flesh, and selfishness stand in marked antithesis to the exalted service and adoration offered to God by Christ in His sacrifice. Our conduct is not an imitation of His behavior during the years of His ministry to Israel. The Circumcision are exhorted to follow in His footsteps. We are to imitate God's grace in our dealing with others, and walk in love. The highest example of a course pleasing to God is that aspect of Christ's sacrifice which was typified by the "burnt offering," or ascending offering. It was wholly for God, apart from all benefits to His creatures. In this day, this is deemed utterly useless. All work for God must be, first of all, philanthropic. It must benefit man. Such was not the first aim of our Lord. The act which brings the greatest good to humanity was, primarily, for God alone.

No consideration can convince me that there are any limits to God's grace. Sin is not its superior. Where sin increases grace superexceeds. But I deplore the perversity which makes this an excuse for sin. Grace is not a theological theory. It is a vital power. It is not in word only, but in deed. Let no one delude himself into the belief that it gives license to sin. It imparts power to overcome sin. I cannot acknowledge anyone to be His who talks of grace and lives in sin; however, God knows those who are His. God's indignation has been revealed against those who persist in offending Him. With grace comes light. We once were darkness, and could not keep from stumbling. Now we are light, and need not miss the way. Without in the least tarnishing the glory of grace we must insist that it bear fruit according to its kind, or it will degenerate into sentimental lenience.

God is Light as well as Love. We are the offspring of Light. In the natural realm there can be no fruit without light. In regions where daylight is lacking for half of the year, vegetation ceases to grow, and there is little life of any kind. In regions where the sun is always overhead there are luxuriant plants, dense jungles, and an abundance of animals. Darkness bears no fruit. It breeds disease. It hides evil. It decrees death. We belong to the realm of day; why, then, walk in the shade of night?

RECLAIMING THE ERA

It is evident to all that this is an era of futility. An apparent gain in one direction is balanced by a loss in another. Men are riding a merry-go-round. They get nowhere. The same mirage looms up before them as in all previous eras, but it moves onward when it is approached. Some are not certain but that mankind is moving backward. We know that they are riding to a fall. The era of God's indignation is impending. Shall we participate in this futility? That would be most unwise. We are exhorted to reclaim it (Eph.5:16). God's purpose is being carried out in this era as in all others. Our wisdom is to fall in line with His plans, and avoid vain human devices for man's amelioration apart from God. The days are wicked. We cannot alter that. They will become more so, until Christ comes. But this very condition is fruitful soil for God's gracious activities. Business depression may cause spiritual prosperity. Human extremity is our opportunity.

UNDERSTANDING THE WILL OF THE LORD

The will of the Lord is the key to conduct. If we were to anticipate the bema of Christ, and investigate the lack of real efficiency in so-called Christian service, we would be astonished to find how little of it is in accord with the will of the Lord. A vast proportion of the efforts of God's servants is based on ignorance of His intention, and utter disregard of His administrations. Let no one imagine that such service will receive His approval, or that it will count in that day. The motive underneath it may be recognized and rewarded, but it is better to slave one hour in accord with His orders than to minister a whole lifetime disregarding His [commands]. Ignorant as we are of the process by which God's goal is to be gained, it is the utmost imprudence to ignore His mind in seeking to serve Him.

This section, concerned with our contacts with mankind, and the failure of humanity, closes with a glimpse of Utopia. The saints sing to themselves, give thanks to God for all through Christ, and are subject to one another. What more would be needed for an ideal existence? We should be overflowing with happiness, glorifying God, and serving our fellows. If all men did this the problems of this era would be settled. But, alas, only the Spirit of God can occasion such a condition. Therefore, let us be filled with that Spirit, through God's Word, and, in some measure at least, we will realize the ideal of which men dream.

Some have supposed that instrumental music is not spiritual or scriptural. Some even go so far as to prefer discord to harmony. But that is not in accord with this passage. Psalms are not prose. Hymns are the highest expression of formal poetry. Songs must be measured and metered, or they are not sing-able. Misery may demand discord, but happiness must have harmony. If the instruments God has given us are unqualified or untrained, we may increase our satisfaction by artificial aid. Only, it must be from the heart. Well may we object to the abuse of instrumental music. When mind and heart are cold, it is futile to substitute a mere machine. God will not listen to it. But let us not insist on inflicting our dissonance on our fellow saints. That, alas, would quench the Spirit. Let us strive to utter our heartfelt happiness in words and notes harmonious to the sense and sound.

The operation of the Spirit in filling the believer may be most clearly traced when God graciously grants fresh light from His Word, such as is unfolded in these meditations. The heart overflows with joy and seeks expression for its new-found pleasure. The old songs fail to fully satisfy. New wine must have fresh wineskins. A theme suggests itself, which gives utterance to some phase of the truth. It develops into verse, and arranges itself into rhymes. But it should be sung! It must be music! So some notes are adapted to the thought, a movement emerges, the melody is made, and soon a song is sent forth to aid others to express their sentiments, and the surge of the spirit within them. Some of the numbers in "Scriptural Songs" have been the fruit of this investigation of Ephesians.

GIVING THANKS FOR ALL

The unbeliever gives thanks for nothing. The infant saint is grateful for good. The mature man of God gives thanks for all things, bad as well as good, for he realizes that all is of God, and is destined to contribute to His beneficent end, however unfortunate its present aspect may seem. A conviction of God's deity, of His power to attain the goal He has set before Him, of His ability to use the evil as well as the good in His designs, of the great truth that He is operating the universe in accord with the counsel of His will (Eph.1:11), is of the utmost value in determining conduct and in harboring happiness. The saint who cannot take the ills of life from God's hand with thankfulness has hardly begun the life of faith. Job had attained to this even before he was tested by his sufferings. No one who understands that the present grace is the result of the greatest misfortune this world has ever had—the rejection of Messiah by His people Israel—will fail to find in every failure another occasion for thanksgiving and for praise.

ELWOOD WINTER

Elwood Winter found repose in the Lord on September 20, 2025 at the age of 94. On March 27, 1954 he married the former Pauline R. Schultz, and together they celebrated 70 years of marriage until her passing in January.

We first made our aquaintance with Elwood and his wife, at the Bible conferences held in different states. They were always so happy and rejoicing over the truth of the evangel. Elwood would often call the office with words of encouragment. We will surely miss him and Pauline but we have the wonderful expectation of meeting them in the air when our Lord returns.

DARNEL, FIRE, FURNACE, OUTER DARKNESS

OUTER DARKNESS, FURNACE OF FIRE

> "Now I am saying to you that many from the east and the west shall be arriving and reclining with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of the heavens, yet the sons of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness. There shall be lamentation and gnashing of teeth" (Matt.8:11,12).
>
> "He also will be declaring: I am saying to you, I am not acquainted with you! Whence are you? Withdraw from me, all workers of unrighteousness! There will be lamentation and gnashing of teeth, whenever you should see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, yet you cast outside. And they will be arriving from east and west and from north and south and will be made to recline in the kingdom of God" (Luke 13:27-29).

IN Matthew 8:11, Jesus says that individuals will come from the east and west to recline with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, highlighting the remarkable faith of the Roman Gentile centurion. In contrast to "east and west," Luke 13:27-29 adds "north and south" and "all the prophets" when Jesus addresses the Israelite workers of unrighteousness as shown in the above quoted passage.

Luke, writing to the Gentile leader Theophilus (Luke 1:3, Acts 1:1), presents a slightly different narrative than Matthew's account due to his audience. In Luke's account, the scope broadens to include those arriving from the four corners of the earth to be seated with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets. However, the fate of the sons of the kingdom remains the same in both accounts: they will be cast out into outer darkness, a realm of severe hardship.

"Outer darkness" is a figure of speech. The kingdom of the heavens, which Christ will set up in Israel will be the antithesis of the realm of outer darkness. The workers of unrighteousness are to be cast out of Israel to live among the kid nations (cf Matt.25:32). Such nations are to experience divine discipline of "the fire made ready for the adversary class and its messengers" (cf Matt.25:41), also known as eonian chastening (Matt.25:46). Jesus stated in Matthew 8:12, "the sons of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness."

IS "OUTER DARKNESS" "ETERNAL SPIRITUAL SEPARATION FROM GOD"?

Many theological works explore the concept of "outer darkness." Such works do not normally interpret this phrase to be concerned with countries or regions, but rather an "eternal spiritual separation from God." However, Jesus is speaking concerning those in Israel, who are lawless, who are to be culled out of the kingdom of Israel, which kingdom is Christ's: "The Son of Humanity shall be dispatching His messengers, and they shall be culling out of His kingdom all the snares and those doing lawlessness" (Matt. 13:41). When Christ cast out demons, He did not leave the demons inside the person and somehow spiritually separate the demon from the spiritual side of the individual. When Christ cast out of the temple all those selling and buying (Matt.21:12), He did not let them remain inside the temple by merely spiritually separating them from the others in the temple. This being the pattern, Christ, upon culling the lawless out of His kingdom, would not allow them to remain in the kingdom in some sort of sequestered living condition. Rather, they are expelled by force out of Israel into countries figuratively called "a furnace of fire," which is also, "outer darkness." The outer darkness represents the countries of the kid nations which are, of course, outside of Christ's kingdom. These lawless ones surely would not be deported to the sheep nations who receive life pertaining to the eon which will be emanating from Christ's kingdom. Any residency in Israel is disallowed them.

WHAT IS MEANT BY "SNARES"?

What are the snares Jesus alluded to in Matthew 13:41 which His messengers must cull out of Israel upon His arrival? A good usage of "snare" is to be found in the dialogue between Peter and the Lord: "And taking Him to him, Peter begins to be rebuking Him, saying, 'Propitious be it to You, Lord! By no means shall this be for You!' Now being turned, He says to Peter, 'Go away behind Me, satan! A snare are you to Me, for you are not setting your mind on that which is of God, but that which is of humans'" (Matt. 16:22,23). Peter unwittingly was tying to snare Jesus. The Greek word for "snare" is skandalon. In the KEYWORD CONCORDANCE snare is defined as "a means of tripping or a cause of falling." Peter was trying to cause Jesus to fall away from the goal He was listening to which His Father had given Him to do. The snaring ones whom the messengers will cull out of Israel are the ones who, if they remain in Israel, will cause Israelites to stumble or fall from what Christ will achieve while He is ruling in Israel.

> "Even as the darnel, then, are being culled and burned up with fire, thus shall it be in the conclusion of the eon. The Son of Humanity shall be dispatching His messengers, and they shall be culling out of His kingdom all the snares and those doing lawlessness, and they shall be casting them into a furnace of fire. There shall be lamentation and gnashing of teeth" (Matt.13:40-42).
> "And they shall be casting them into a furnace of fire. There shall be lamentation and gnashing of teeth" (Matt.13:50).

THREATENINGS DO NOT CHANGE THEIR INCALCITRANT HEARTS

The evil hearts of these lawless ones make them impervious to the threatenings Jesus levels against them. Those threatenings such as: "furnace of fire," or being "cast into outer darkness," or "lamentation and gnashing of teeth," could not change their hearts. Most likely these intransigent evil ones mocked and jeered Him when threatened. Why? Because their origin is not "ideal seed" (Matt.13:24), sown by the Son of Mankind (Matt.13:37). Rather, their origin was that of "the enemy . . . the Adversary" who sowed them as figurative darnel (v.25). Jesus told them their father was the Adversary: "Wherefore do you not know My speech? Seeing that you can not hear My word. You are of your father, the Adversary, and the desires of your father you are wanting to do. He was a human-killer from the beginning, and does not stand in the truth, for truth is not in him. Whenever he may be speaking a lie, he is speaking of his own, for he is a liar, and the father of it. Yet I—seeing that I am speaking the truth, you are not believing Me. Who of you is exposing Me concerning sin? If I am telling the truth, wherefore are you not believing Me? He who is of God is hearing God's declarations. Therefore you are not hearing, seeing that you are not of God" (John 8:43-47). They were the seed planted by the Adversary. It is impossible for darnel to produce good fruit. Likewise, these ones sown by the enemy, the Adversary, imitate the character of the Adversary who sows them. Such ones must be culled and figuratively burned in a furnace of fire. They must be driven away to what is termed "outer darkness" in order to keep the righteous seed pure within Israel.

In the above parable of the darnel, we have fire used literally as well as figuratively. The farmers in Israel would cull the darnel and then destroy it with literal fire. The figure "furnace of fire" into which these lawless ones are to be cast represents a literal condition of living under hardship meted out by the iron club of Jesus.

DARNEL, SEED OF THE WICKED ONE
GRAIN, THE IDEAL SEED

The darnel plant in Israel resembles wheat[1] in its early stages prior to its fruiting stage. Distinguishing the difference in the early plant growth of the two plants is difficult. Darnel is considered a weed. It is poisonous to humans and livestock. Jesus rightly uses a toxic plant, such as darnel, to describe the seed (unrighteous ones) planted by the Adversary. Once both the grain (wheat), which represents the righteous ones of the kingdom and the darnel, which represents the sons of the wicked one, mature, it is then that the reapers can tell the difference in order to cull the darnel and then dispose of it properly by fire. This is why Jesus said: "Now, when the blade germinates and produces fruit, then appears also the darnel" (Matt.13:26). Therefore, once the wheat and darnel produce fruit, the difference of the fruited grain between the two plants is distinctively different and it is then seen for what it is and the darnel can be properly culled.

Just as the two plants are indistinguishable until their fruit appears, thus also the "sons of the wicked one" in Israel will be indistinguishable from the "ideal seed," i.e., the righteous ones, until they both begin bearing fruit—the one group bears unrighteous fruit (the snares and doing lawlessness) and the other group produces righteous fruit. It is then that the harvest occurs. This understanding enables the messengers to distinguish between the two groups in order to harvest them. The darnel group is figuratively cast into a furnace of fire which is literally eonian chastening. In other words, to reiterate, they are cast out of Israel to live among the kid nations who are under duress by the chastening eonian during the thousand years. This culling ensues at the conclusion of our current wicked eon (Matt.13:39).

1. It is taken for granted that "wheat" is the grain Jesus spoke of when He used the word siton (grain), in Matthew 13:29 since darnel is so similar to wheat prior to bearing fruit.

Lawless ones who were formerly in Israel will exist in the figurative fire prepared for the adversary class and its messengers. The furnace and fire, though figurative, are representative of something very literal. Such ones will undergo harsh living conditions during the thousand years.

THE FURNACE OF FIRE

> "The Son of Humanity shall be dispatching His messengers, and they shall be culling out of His kingdom all the snares and those doing lawlessness, and they shall be casting them into a furnace of fire. There shall be lamentation and gnashing of teeth" (Matt.13:41-42).

The phrase "culling out of His kingdom" tells us the snaring ones and lawless ones are rounded up inside Israel which is "in his own field" and then cast out of Israel into a figurative furnace of fire. Just as Egypt was once an iron furnace when the Israelites were held captive there four-hundred some years, now, once again, these people must enter the furnace to be tried as if by fire for one thousand years. These lawless ones will not be cast into the sheep nations. If that were the case, they would receive all the blessings of eonian life of those nations. Being cast out of Israel, the only place they can live is among the kid nations who are under a curse of eonian chastening. This is the figurative fire prepared for them and their emissaries. There they will lament and gnash their teeth.

EGYPT WAS AN IRON CRUCIBLE OR FURNACE

According to some theologians, the furnace of fire spoken of in Matthew is "Hell" and is eternal. What about Egypt being an iron furnace[2] ("crucible" in CVOT)? Was Egypt "Hell" and were the figurative fires in that iron furnace eternal? Surely, the throngs Christ spoke to would know what He meant when He used the term, "iron furnace." Unless one was a Pharisee or an ardent learner of their traditions, the phrase surely did not, in their minds, conjure up some sort of Dantean Hell with eternal torment in fire.

"for they are Your people and Your allotment whom You brought forth from Egypt, from the midst of the iron crucible[2]" (1 Kings 8:51).

". . . In the day I brought them forth from the land of Egypt, from the iron crucible[2], . . ." (Jer.11:4).

Yahweh put the sons of Israel, small in number, in the iron crucible and later brought them out, great in number to be His people. Was the entire land of Egypt literally an iron furnace? Was all of Egypt literally on fire? No. The iron furnace is representative of the slavery and hardships Israel endured while in Egypt.

In the future, at the return of Jesus, all of the representatives of the nations are brought before Him to be judged as to how they treated His brethren during their great tribulation. They are divided into two groups, the kid nations and the sheep nations. Just as Egypt was a figurative iron furnace which held Israel, the kid nations will enter the figurative furnace of fire. This will make more sense as we go along. The kid nations in that future judgment are separated from the sheep nations due to how they treated Jesus's brethren which caused His brethren's great tribulation. In our day all member nations meet at the building in

2. iron furnace: for "furnace" Matthew 13:42 has Greek: kaminos. LXX has kaminos for Deut.4:20; 1 Kings 8:51: Jer.11:4 and Ezk. 22:20. Hebrew has kûr H3564, pot or furnace. Strong's Hebrew and Greek Dictionaries.

New York called The United Nations Headquarters. Representatives there of each member nation attend to represent their nation. In the judgment of the kid and sheep nations, every nation will send representatives and Jesus will stand them on His left and right. Just as the kids and sheep are figurative, thus also is "the fire" the cursed kid nations must endure.

Then shall He be declaring to 'those also °at His left: ¦Go° from Me, you ·°cursed°, into the fire ·eonian, 'made °ready° for the adversary class and its messengers[3] (Matt. 25:41, revised CVNT).

If this fire the nations enter into is the fire prepared for "the devil and his angels" as so many translations wrongly state, or even "the Adversary and his messengers," which likewise makes one think it is Satan and his messengers or angels, then these nations must go into the lake of fire at the beginning of the thousand years in which they will enter unconscious death rather than chastening eonian. This is so if the lake of fire and sulphur really was prepared solely for the Adversary, i.e., Satan and his demons. Why does it not say "the fire prepared for the wild beast and false prophet"? Or why does Matthew 25:41 not say "the fire prepared for all those not found written in the scroll of life"? There is not one verse in all the Bible informing us "the devil and his angels will be cast into fire." We are told the Adversary will be cast into the lake of fire and sulphur a thousand years after this judgment. However, no mention is made of "his angels" being cast in with him. This is the only fire the devil, a.k.a. "Satan," i,e., "the Adversary," goes into after being released from his jail

3. "Editor's note: Although the present CV uses 'Adversary' with a capital 'A' in Matthew 25:41, A. E. Knoch's suggestion that the passage refers to the 'adversary class of nations' and its messengers has much merit and should be considered in future editions of the Version" (Dean Hough, footnote, vol.89, p.153).

of the abyss (cf Rev.20:7), at the ending of the thousand year eon. A. E. Knoch, in past Unsearchable Riches magazines, has stated the judgment for humans at the Great White Throne Judgment occurs one thousand years after this judgment of these nations. The fire of the lake of fire burning with sulphur is a literal fire. However, the fire the nations enter into is a figurative fire which represents a literal chastening eonian (Matt.25:46). Being a figurative fire, it is representative of the very harsh living conditions the kid nations will endure during Christ's thousand-year reign. For humans, the lake of fire is death. This being the case, if these nations enter into death, how is it possible for them to enter eonian chastening which is chastening for one thousand years? Also, how does a nation, such as Iran or the United States, enter the second death? Is it possible for an entire nation to not be written in the Lamb's scroll of life? Of course anything is possible. But improbable for a nation to be cast therein.

This judgment of Matthew 25:31-46, which occurs at the beginning of Christ's thousand-year reign, cannot be the great white throne judgment, nor are the kid nations cast into the lake of fire at the beginning of the thousand years. If that were the case, such nations would cease to exist and Christ would not rule over them with a rod of iron (cp Rev.2:27) for a thousand years. For humans the great white throne judgment takes place when the thousand years are finishing (not fully finished). Only the beast and false prophet are cast into the lake of fire and sulphur prior to Christ's millennial reign. The Adversary is bound and locked up in the abyss (not the lake of fire) for a thousand years. It is only as the thousand years are in the process of finishing that he is loosed out of the abyss to deceive the nations (cf Rev.20:7), and then, prior to the final eon, he is cast into the lake of fire and sulphur. This Adversary is not the adversary nation spoken of in Matthew 25:41.

The adversary nation is not locked up in the abyss at the beginning of Christ's thousand-year reign.

Another important point to make is this: If the "furnace of fire" the nations are to endure and the unrighteous and snares of Israel are to enter is the lake of fire, this would result in the death of those nations. In such a case who would be left of the kid nations for Satan, when loosed from his jail, to deceive of the nations in order to come against the holy citadel according to Revelation 20:9? Fire from God will, in that future day descend to devour them. Is Satan somehow going to resurrect these nations out of the second death in order to lead the revolt? If so, the inhabitants of the second death would have to be vivified beyond the reach of death and so the fire descending from God would have no effect upon them.

When Jesus tells the kid nations to "go from Me," He means those nations are to leave the realm of His blessings within Israel and enter the realm of the curse of chastening outside Israel. Rather than be ruled by Christ with the protective Shepherd's staff or crook, they will be ruled by with a club of iron.

> "Ask of Me, and I shall give the nations as Your allotment, and as Your holding, the limits of the earth. You shall smash them with a club of iron; like a vessel of a potter, You shall shatter them" (Psa.2:8-9).

The sheep nations, who most likely suffered greatly for resisting the demands of the man of lawlessness, beast and false prophet, and resisting the demands of the adversarial kid nation(s) who sent out couriers with letters to persecute Christ's brethren, will now enter into the realm of life emanating from Christ's glorious millennial reign. They will be guided and protected with His staff. He will repay their sufferings with great blessings.

The Problem of Evil
and
the Judgments of God

How can we explain the presence of evil? Is there a purpose for evil, and will it come to an end? Can there be two independent opposing forces in the universe? If God alone is supreme, what is the purpose of judgment? Surely there are answers to these troubling questions in the Word of God.

This book traces the divine function of evil (whatever is harmful or destructive) from its inception to its consummation, by presenting scriptural solutions to the various long-debated questions concerning God and His sovereignty.

As one of its subjects, it probes and takes issue with the commonly accepted explanation that Satan, and not God, is responsible for evil. To quote the book's author: "Almost all of us are shortsighted. We see the judgments, but fail to recognize that they are only part of God's way with mankind, that they are definitely not an end. We confuse the going with the goal. Judgment is God's strange work. He uses it as a preparation toward a glorious consummation."

The message in this book is especially valuable to us in these days of doubt and distress, to lead men to rely on and rest in God alone.

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES, FOURTH QUARTER 2025
BEING THE FOURTH NUMBER OF VOLUME ONE HUNDRED SIXTEEN

EDITORIAL

In the August 1916 issue of Unsearchable Riches (vol.7, pages 266-268) A. E. Knoch writes: "The faith of Christ is brought before us in the otherwise enigmatical statement 'from faith into faith.' There are two faiths in view. The latter is our faith; the former is Christ's. Justification is founded on His faith; it is conferred on our faith. Abraham was [reckoned][1] righteous for his faith; Christ makes all men righteous because of His faith. Hence we find the statement (which is so often referred to us who believe) 'the Just One shall live by His faith,' . . . His faith is the foundation upon which God will finally justify all mankind (Rom.5:18)."

Forty-two years later A. E. Knoch wrote in the November 1958 issue of this magazine (vol.49, p.252): ". . . we may look beyond the picture presented by Abraham and Isaac, to the Inaugurator and Perfecter of faith, Who, for the joy lying before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now seated at the right hand of God (Heb.12:2). Isaac was only a type, a dim shadow of the One Whose faith led Him to descend from the highest heights of glory to the lowest depths of shame, and has called us to share the fruits of His faith, by blessing us with every spiritual blessing among the celestials (Eph.1:3)."

There is a grand harmony between these two meditations and the translations suggested. Of course I am prejudiced, for I was taught from my youth that all blessing are based on the faith of Jesus Christ. So many of my teachers made it clear to me, that in A. E. Knoch's words, "[Christ] believed God even when He smote Him for our sins. It is out of His faith for our faith (Rom.1:17)."[2]

1. A.E.K used the verb "constituted" here, but Romans 4:3, citing Genesis 15:6, uses the verb "reckoned" ("counted" in the AV). The verb "constituted" is fitting in Romans 5:19 where, not only Abraham, but all humans are in view.

Yet especially in his earlier writings, A.E.K. seems to have backed away from his comments of 1916 concerning Christ's faith by taking Romans 1:17 as a reference to our faith only, as apparently taught by Martin Luther. This was a loss, which very much needs to be corrected. It is important, accordingly, that the "out of faith" in Romans 1:17 be seen as referring to the Righteous One's ("Just One's") faith in the revised Concordant Version. So also in Galatians 3:11 and Hebrews 10:38, the faith of the Righteous One is in view as the Inaugurater and Perfecter of faith.

In the meantime it is important whenever we read or hear the words "justified by faith" that we mentally take it to speak of Jesus Christ's faith, as it does in the CV of Romans 3:22.

The same is true of the term obedience, which has practically lost its sense of submissive hearing. Christ listened fully and exactly to the instruction He heard from His God and Father, so that what He did was in perfect accord with what He heard. We need to listen to the revelation of what Christ's listening achieves, despite our desire to have some credit in this achievement of Christ's. Accordingly, in a few cases, we have changed the words built on the verb obey to words built on the verb listen in the first article in this issue.

A. E. Knoch's final articles in his early studies on Ephesians follow, one on our celestial conflict and the other on Paul's imprisonment in this period of God's conciliation. My own thoughts on the opening chapters of Romans are then repeated.

We close with Tony Nungesser's timely reminder that God's blessings do not come out of judgments, but rather out of the cross of Christ.

2. Concordant Commentary on Romans 3:22, p.233.

THE JOINT BODY—IN THE LORD

We are now to consider the more intimate relationships of life, husband and wife, parent and child, master and slave. The figure of a new humanity is not an adequate basis for conduct in these contacts. If the "church" were the "bride of Christ" today, as is sometimes supposed, then this would furnish an excellent ground of exhortation for the marriage bond. But, as Christ, in His official capacity, our Lord has no bride or wife, and the bride of the Lambkin is Israel, the Circumcision. Therefore, nothing could be more fitting than that the close communion of these relationships should be governed by that most intimate and precious of all spiritual ties, the joint body of Christ. Membership in that body is the clue to conduct toward those near to us and dear to us (Eph.5:21-6:9).

"In Christ" there are no physical relationships. "In the Lord" these are recognized and controlled. In Christ the master and the slave, the mature and the minor, the male and the female, disappear. The master is subject to the Lord, the slave is free in spirit. The aged father is in his prime and the youth is fully matured. Sex is not recognized. None of these physical distinctions disturb the absolute equality of every participant in the spiritual unity. But let us not abuse this precious truth by applying it outside the spiritual sphere.[1] Let us not infer that when a slave believed, he became a freeman. That would have caused untold trouble. A believing child is not freed from the authority of its parents. On the contrary, it is more obliged to listen. The act of faith does not make a female masculine, and give her the place of a man and a husband. She is still to be subject. Our place in Christ does not set aside subjection in the Lord.[2]

These simple facts are of surpassing importance in a day when all subjection is derided and when faith in God's actual utterance is largely superseded by inference from His words on a different subject. Both socially and theologically the tendency is away from the wholesome [entreaties] which are given us for our guidance in Paul's latest epistles. Independence, rather than subjection, is set before us as the ideal. As a result we see insubordination everywhere. The employee seeks to control the employer's affairs, and business is obstructed. The child scoffs at parental monitions, [disregards] without a qualm, and reaps a harvest of dissipation and crime. Marriage is no longer a bond, but an experiment, and brings the blight of divorce and parentless children, and moral corruption. This one sentence would solve most of our social evils: Be subject.

We are not only "in Christ," but "in the Lord." We are not capable of reasoning out the conduct which befits a saint from our position in Christ. This is done for us by relating us to Him as our Lord, and by giving us specific guidance to suit each sphere in which we may be found. Let us note that we are not referred to the law, which was given to govern the flesh before. Our physical affairs are not to be regulated in accord with that administration. They are to accord with the transcendent truths of our spiritual state. The prime ingredients of that revelation—love, grace, spirit—are to be mingled with our conduct toward our relatives, and should control the mutual attitude of master and slave. Let us acknowledge the lordship of Christ. It will be especially pleasing in these days when subjection is derided as a weakness, and despised as if it were a crime.

2. Nor does our subjection in the Lord set aside our place in Christ. D.H.H.

As Christ is our Lord, or Master, there is a clear parallel to enforce obedience to masters in the flesh. Since slavery scarcely exists, these exhortations may be appropriated, in measure at least, by those who serve though not bound. In fact, much as we may abhor slavery, the ownership of one human being by another, there is not so great a gulf between it and other forms of service. Now our employers buy our time, our effort. They pay for a fraction of our life. It is a form of limited bondage, which absolutely [entreats] subjection, no less than slavery. Hence we are to conform the quality of this subjection to that which we render our spiritual Lord. "Fear and trembling . . . singleness of heart . . . not with eye-slavery, as man-pleasers . . . with good humor . . ." (Eph.6:5-8). How gladly will employers accept such service! How well it would be if servants would give it! There would be no loss of self-respect, as men vainly imagine.

He who is in service must serve. Not merely to hold his position or to increase his pay, but because of his similar relationship to Christ, he should obey, with fear and trembling. That is the normal, the appropriate posture of the creature. God is the only One Who should not obey. Christ obeys Him. We obey our Lord. Our obedience to masters in the flesh is only a miniature of these higher relationships, and is intended to teach us the absolute sovereignty of the Deity. It is no disgrace. Let us always remember that we serve the Lord Christ, in serving others, and the quality of our service will rise to the heights that no mortal man can inspire. Let us wear His livery, and the most menial task will assume a robe of royal dignity.

In these democratic days we work for wages and measure our hire by the amount of material for which we are able to exchange it. Few feel that they are properly requited. How many would refuse a raise in salary? Happy are those who can look beyond their paychecks to the Lord they serve, with the confident expectation that their good will be requited! They may not be appreciated now. They will probably serve better than their wages require. Let them rest in perfect assurance that all they do will receive its just compensation, not necessarily from their earthly master in this era, but from their heavenly Lord, when He reviews the lives of all His slaves and awards to each his just deserts. Then shall all have praise from God, for all of His, in some measure, will merit His approval.

Masters also must make their heavenly Master a pattern of their part. Though they seem to have a high place, they are themselves but underlings. The subjection which they demand from those beneath them is due to Him Who is their Lord. Let them not imagine for a moment that they are supreme. Let them not abuse the power placed in their hands. Let them be gracious as they themselves desire the favor of their Overlord. One thing especially is debarred, and that is threatening. It is utterly at variance with the spirit of this economy. God prays and pleads, but He does not threaten. This is the resort of the weakling who is not fit to be trusted with power. Our Lord does not threaten us. There is a requital for the good slave, but no threat for a bad one (Eph.6:9).

It is sometimes supposed that these last days are the only ones in which children do not mind their parents. There is no doubt that it has gone to extremes never known before, but the mere fact that the Spirit of God found it necessary to pen an exhortation to this effect shows the universality of the sin. Apart altogether from the spiritual appeal which the apostle makes, it is evident that the place of immature offspring is subjection. Age should teach wisdom, and experience understanding. These are sorely needed in a world so full of pitfalls and of walking in darkness. Yet the greatest lesson they should learn, the most important that parents should impart, is that obedience is in the Lord. The father has a right to demand it because he has authority from the Lord. If he is not himself obedient to his Master, that authority is weakened and invalidated.

The law was full of prohibitions. A welcome contrast is the promise to the fifth precept (Ex.20:12). The first to the third are negative. Thou shalt not have other gods before Me. Thou shalt not make any graven image. Thou shalt not take the name of Yahweh thy God in vain. The fourth is positive as well as negative. Remember the sabbath day . . . Six days shalt thou labor . . . but the seventh is the sabbath . . . thou shalt not do any work . . . . The fifth is the first and only one without a prohibition and with a promise attached: Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. Thou shalt not . . . Thou shalt not . . . Thou shalt not . . . Thou shalt not . . . . Thou shalt not . . . .

We are not under law, but under grace. Does this mean that we are free to murder? By no means![3] Does it mean that the benefits accruing from obedience to its precepts will be withheld from us? Far from it! Those under law were in a state of minority and tutelage, corresponding very closely to the condition of our children according to the flesh. The rules and regulations for such a state are given in the law, and cannot be improved upon. If obedience to parents obtained a physical reward under the law, it will operate just as well under grace. Indeed, this precept comes nearer the administration of grace than any other, as indeed, it ought to do. If the present tide of disobedience could be stemmed, there is no more potent power to effect it than this simple word: "Honor your father and mother, that it may be well with you!"

3. See the endnote, p.156.

This may seem a selfish appeal. But what stronger motive exists in the breasts of the immature? Now selfishness finds an outlet in a feverish pursuit for present pleasure or insane seeking for sordid gain.

Again, as with the masters, fathers are enjoined from taking undue advantage of the position which is theirs from the Lord. A little brief authority is a temptation to most men. To use power with moderation, to temper it with kindness, is the mark of true nobility. Parental authority should always be just, never manifestly high-handed, never vexatious, never the result of capricious tyranny rather than wise lenience. In this passage the father's true place is indicated. The discipline and admonition of his children is in his hands. God will hold him accountable, even if he shirks his duty.

THE SUBJECTION OF WIVES

The fact that God's Spirit has indited two precepts for the regulation of the wedded state of His saints is sufficient to give us the key to the present deplorable condition. The family seems to be dying out. The whole social structure seems doomed to destruction. The crusade for women's rights seems to have caused a crop of women's wrongs. Men and women are hunting for happiness along illicit lines. They boldly refuse to use a marriage ceremony which embodies God's declarations of the relations of husband and wife. Women will not obey their husbands. To merely mention such a thing is deemed an insult to the sex. The story of Eden is said to be a myth; no intelligent person dares to accept it today. But the fact remains that the law is graven deep in the human constitution, and its infringement has wrought havoc. The emancipation of woman has made her a miserable slave. Her true happiness lies in subjection, not merely to her husband, but to God, Who has given her this place, not in anger, but in wisdom and love.

In Eden's garden Eve took the initiative, and without according Adam a place in her counsels, took of the forbidden fruit and gave to him. In the judgment scene that follows every sentence is in exact accord with the nature of the sin. She had been insubordinate. She had scorned the command of God, "You shall not eat" (Gen.2:17). She had been lured by the evil one, and she had involved Adam in her offense. He did not transgress of himself. He was not deluded. His love for Eve alone involved him in the trespass. Hence the sentence: "He shall dominate over you" (Gen.3:16). Eve's daughters may do as Eve did, and listen to the lure of evil, and refuse to serve the sentence God has imposed. But, like all of God's laws, its infringement is fraught with inescapable retribution.

Every condition has its compensations. Many an emancipated slave has wished for the good old days when he had no cares, no responsibilities. His food and shelter were secure. The future did not worry him. His master did his worrying. Subjection is not an unmitigated evil. Ideally, it provides a safe, sheltered existence, which relieves him of many of the austerities of life. As a matter of fact subjection is the normal sphere of the creature. If he is not intelligently obedient to the Creator he must be subordinate to his environment, the physical elements or the social institutions. Lawlessness is always foolish and hurtful. There can be no comfort or happiness without subjection of some sort. God's laws are immutable. He has decreed that subjection shall be one side of the marriage bond. And who shall question the wisdom and the benefit of His arrangement?

In this connection we are given a hint which clears away much confusion. It is common to connect the headship of Christ to the figure of the one body. We are asked to believe that none of the saints, as members of this body, are in the head, for that is reserved for Christ. The functions figured by the eyes, the ears, and the nose belong alone to Him. Since these are distinctly attributed to the members by the apostle in writing to the Corinthians, it is supposed that Christ has two bodies, notwithstanding the emphatic assertion to the contrary. That Christ is not a separate member of the body, even the head, ought to be evident, for the whole is His body. His headship is a distinct figure. It is over the whole body, including the head. All is clear when we read that "the husband is the head of the wife even as Christ is Head of the ecclesia." The wife, though subject, is not without a head of her own. The husband's is not her physical head. There is only one body of Christ in which some of the members are in the head and some in the feet, but now, in the joint body, all are of equal rank.

Love is the greatest thing in the universe, and it should find its fullest expression in the affection of a husband for his wife. A man is not charged to be her head, but to exercise his heart on her behalf (Eph.5:25-31), "Husbands, be loving your wives, according as Christ also loves the ecclesia . . . ." How tempting, here, to introduce the figure of the bride! How simple it would be! Yahweh does love Israel as a bridegroom his bride, and were we members of that nation, such an exhortation would be most apt. But we are not the wife of Yahweh or the bride of the Lambkin. We are the body of Christ. A man's own body is the figure of this relationship. Therefore, the apostle interjects the argument that husband and wife are one flesh. "Husbands ought to be loving their own wives as their own bodies. He who is loving his own wife is loving himself. For no one at any time hates his own flesh, but is nourishing and cherishing it, according as Christ also the ecclesia, for we are members of His body" (Eph.5:28-30).

THE SECRET OF MARRIAGE

If we were "the bride of Christ" there would be no necessity for bringing in the secret of marriage, in order to prove that the two are one flesh, and so, in a sense the wife is the husband's own body, thus forming a parallel with the relation of Christ to the ecclesia. All the members of His body are one spirit in Christ. The husband and the wife are one flesh. As Christ loves the ecclesia, His own body, so should the husband love his wife, not as such, but as his own flesh. This is based on the facts of creation, as recorded in the opening chapters of Genesis. Adam and Eve actually were one flesh at first.

"Male and female He creates them" (Gen.1:27) is the brief statement of the first record of man's creation. In the fuller account that follows we find that Adam was created bisexual. God did not build Eve out of a "rib." Out of more than forty occurrences tzlo is never rendered rib elsewhere. It is called a beam, a board, a chamber, a corner, a leaf, a plank, a side, and a side chamber. When we see that the leading idea is a vault, or cell, the creation of Eve may be intelligently understood. The female "angular [organ]" (Gen.2:22) was taken from him, as the basis for another individual. Man lacks no ribs, but he does lack the female functions which were incorporated into the body of Adam before the separation of Eve. It now takes two individuals to make a complete human being, as God created him. Hence in marriage, each is but part of a human, as to flesh, and, together, they are but one. This is the secret on which Paul bases his exhortation.

We may, with delightful delectation, dwell upon the fact that no man ever hated his own flesh. No exhortation is needed there. It is instinctive, inevitable. So is Christ's love for us. We are joined by bonds unbreakable. In loving us, He loves Himself. We need not implore Him to favor us, nor must we merit His affection. Within our own breasts we have a continual reminder of the love of God's Anointed for the members of His body. We do not ask our members to earn our regard. Indeed, if an arm is hurt, we give it added concern. If a foot is lame, we do not discard it, but favor it all the more. So is the love of Christ. Let us not imagine that our weakness, our unworthiness, will make Him weary of us. That can never be. A man may weary of his wife, a woman of the child she bears, but Christ will never cease to love the most unworthy member of that celestial company who come to Him in the day of His rejection, before the time of His return.

A. E. Knoch

ENDNOTE

I believe Brother Knoch would have commented on the last three chapters of Ephesians in his later years quite differently at certain points than he does in these early meditations. He would not use the verbs "demand" or "command" where Paul uses the verb "entreat," and he would not suggest a separation of what we are "in Christ" from our present position "in the Lord," where Paul connects them by the conjunction "then" (Eph.4:1) which indicates a conclusion to what is said in the first three chapters. Here on page 151 where he brings in Romans 6:14 (quite appropriately) he would not refer to the sin of murder in terms of law, but would instead direct attention to our conduct in our human relationships in terms of grace, as grace is presented to us in Ephesians chapters 1-3.

Perhaps most relevant to Ephesians chapters 4-6 is the grace brought forward in Ephesians 2:4-8, first the transcendent riches of God's grace and then the grace of our salvation which is through Christ Jesus's faith.

Although there is no evidence that Brother Knoch saw the "through faith" in 2:8 as "through Christ's faith," as in the CV of Romans 3:22 ("through Jesus Christ's faith"), his testimony in the November 1958 issue of Unsearchable Riches, as cited in my editorial, concerning Christ's faith points us in that direction. The bottom line is: What did Paul say on the matter of grace and its authority over us in our conduct? Is not grace an authority of God's power far more vibrant than law (cf Rom.1:16)?

THE CELESTIAL CONFLICT

STAND! This is the thrice repeated watchword for those who occupy the celestial allotment which is ours in Christ Jesus (Eph.6:10-17; 1:3-14). In case of attack by the cohorts of the heavenly hosts, withstand! (Eph.6:13). God has granted us an allotment among the celestials. It is only as we tenant the tract entrusted to us that we have a place to stand. It is only when we hold this ground that the enemy will seek to dislodge us. Then alone will there be warfare. This is not the rest we have at God's right hand, neither is it a war of aggression. Those who find the faith of Ephesians will have to fight to hold the ground they have gained. There are unseen strategists who will seek to dispossess them. There are powers of darkness who will assault their position and drive them from it.

When Israel was in the wilderness, Forward! was their watchword. The wilderness warfare, however, was, in a sense unnecessary. It was the result of their refusal to hearken to Yahweh. Once the land had been conquered, after they had taken possession, their aggressive warfare was at an end. Then it was their duty to stand upon it and withstand the onslaughts of all who sought to drive them from it. When faith was low and valor scarce, the people fled, and left their allotment to their enemies. On occasions such as these the mighty men of David gained their fame by defending their fields against the Philistines. We have no earthly allotment to hold, but we have a heavenly inheritance. No forward move is necessary now, for the fields are ours by faith. But there is need abundant to stand firm on the ground we have gained and withstand every effort to dislodge us from our allotment.

To those who confuse contexts, God's Word is full of contradictions. One of the great truths of a previous portion of Ephesians is that we are seated together among the celestials (Eph.2:6). There is relaxation and rest. Now this seems to be denied for we are exhorted to stand, clad with all the accouterments of conflict. There is vigilance and warfare. Both are true, in their contexts. Both are false out of their contexts. As related to Christ Jesus, as members of His body, we have no work to do, for He has completed it all Himself. But, as related to God, as enjoying an allotment among the celestials, we need to be invigorated with God's mighty strength, and to stand in His protective panoply. The allotment is ours. We shall enter upon its tenancy in fact when we are called above. But now we need to hold it by faith. There is where the danger lies. There failure may be found. There the saints have practically forfeited the enjoyment of their celestial blessings.

This warfare is almost unknown in Christendom today for the simple reason that few have even heard of the territory on which they are supposed to stand. The Adversary's stratagems have been so successful, the sovereignties and authorities, the world mights of this darkness, the spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials have so outmaneuvered the saints that they are running around in circles on ground that does not belong to them, rather than standing firm on their own patrimony. Our enemies scarcely need to fight. They have outwitted us. How many saints are enjoying their celestial allotment? How many have appropriated the territory by faith which is theirs in this administration? One of the great Christian bodies has territorial sovereignty on earth. Most of them are possessed of plots of land down here. But few indeed are standing on celestial soil and defending it from spiritual foes.

We talk of apostate Israel, but, in all their apostasy, they have not utterly lost their bearings. They know where their allotment is. True, they are foolish to fight for land that Yahweh will give them in due time, but their folly shows that they know His mind concerning them in a minute measure. They are ready to meet every effort which opposes their claim. Woe to the nation which will not concede it! O that the joint allottees of the celestial realms had a tithe of their intelligence and a fraction of their fervor. They would not come into conflict with the Arabs, as the Jews in Palestine, but with far craftier foes in the celestial sphere.

Israel's warfare is with blood and flesh. Their allotment is the land. Our holdings are in heaven. Our strife is with wicked spirits. One of the hardest lessons for us to learn is the fact that we do not fight with our fellows. There must be no close conflict, no grappling with men, no wrestling with those within our reach. This negative injunction has never been heartily heeded. Even Protestant princes have not hesitated to use the arm of flesh in forwarding the fight of faith. Saints have seldom worn the sandals of the evangel of peace, in their earthly contacts. The great truth of the conciliation of mankind was not recovered at the Reformation. There was only a blurred vision of Romans three and four, and a refusal to enter the fifth chapter.

Neither is the fight with our own flesh. It is a fatal mistake to seek to subdue the flesh. It is futile to strive against our physical propensities. The disposition of the flesh is death, so let us put it in the place of death. It cannot be subject, so let us cease to expect anything from it, or seek to improve it. The flesh lusts against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh. The only successful solution is to starve the flesh, to put it in the place of death, to nail it to the cross. Those who are of Christ crucify the flesh with its passions and lusts. The flesh is not on a par with the spirit. We have power and authority over the flesh, so that we should never condescend to strive as equals. We must condemn it to the ignominious stake.

Much the same is true of the old humanity, which we receive from Adam. If we realize the great truth that we are a new humanity in Christ, and that the old was crucified with Him, we will not disgrace ourselves by entering the lists against the decaying and decrepit humanity to which our bodies still belong but which we should put off, by the power of the spirit, just as we discard garments too worn and filthy for further use. Let there be no conflict with the old humanity. With men we are at peace, even as God is conciliated toward them now. For them our feet are sandaled with the readiness of the evangel of peace, for our feet alone are in contact with the earth. Our very panoply provides for a truce with mankind (Eph.6:15). Only as we mount, by faith, to our celestial allotment, will we wage war.

OUR CELESTIAL STRIFE

As soon as we seek to enjoy our allotment among the celestials by faith we enter a scene of unceasing strife, carried on with skillful strategy and spiritual force. If the marvelous revelations of the previous portion of this epistle have been apprehended, two matters of much moment have emerged. On earth we have no interests which conflict with any man. We have no allotment here to form the basis of a quarrel. Palestine is not for us, hence we have no clashes with the Arabs who claim it. But, just as the dispossessed Palestinian Arabs resent and resist the presence of the Jews, to whom God has promised the land of Palestine, so the celestial powers oppose our appearance on their possessions. Moreover, no world power has been given a mandate over the celestial territory to help us retain our rights. Each one must hold his own ground, and defend the plot which is allotted to him single-handed and alone.

In the coming administration of God's indignation, the Adversary will come down to earth to be a roaring lion to the remnant of Israel. Why does he single them out for his prey? Because he is well aware that earth's sovereignty, which he has held for more than seven millenniums, has been given to God's Anointed, and that His people Israel will administer His government when He ascends the throne. The same motive impels now the spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials in their opposition to the ecclesia which, some day, will displace them in their celestial sovereignty. They know far better than the saints what our presence implies. It is a plain intimation that their sovereignty is succumbing to the assaults of Christ. It heralds the hour when their hold on the heavens will cease. They will do their utmost to keep us from the enjoyment of our allotment.

How well they seem to have succeeded! Few, indeed, of the saints even know that they have a celestial allotment to defend. They are like a Jew who has never heard of Palestine. Some deny our title to any celestial allotment. They are like those Jews who prefer the Argentine or some other place to the patrimony of their fathers. A few, very few, in spirit, hold celestial property. Even these are not well equipped, and suffer for lack of armor suited to the conflict. It is to these that we address ourselves. If, by faith, they have acquired the celestial homestead which is presented in the first chapter of this epistle (verses 3-19), then they have also come into the possession of a feud which will cost them many a defeat if they are not prepared for its defense. Do not let the stratagems of the Adversary shift your stand to earth. Do not allow his fiery darts to slip past the shield of faith. Remember, though you have been saved from your sins, and are being saved from sin, you still need salvation in the celestial spheres.

THE ADVERSARY

mation as to his enemy. It is wise that we should be well acquainted with our foes. It is essential that we should recognize our chief adversary. In the future, on the earth, he will resemble a roaring lion. He will openly attack the saints. No one will mistake him then. Not so now. To all appearances he is "an angel of light." His ministers are transfigured as dispensers of righteousness. Let us suppose that some radiant, angelic messenger graced the earth with his presence, teaching men to forsake the wrong and cleave to the right, disclosing marvelous secrets of science for the betterment of mankind, adding to our store of knowledge, harnessing the forces of nature for our use, the patron of education, philanthropy and religion. Suppose he consummated a movement for the federation of mankind, a congress of the nations, the brotherhood of man. Suppose he was able to suppress those vices which mar men's schemes, and bring them to fruition. Let him be their guardian angel, their guiding star. Let him ask no pay for his pains except the appreciation and the worship which his work inspires. On the surface he seems to have no fault but this, the acceptance of divine worship, which belongs to God alone, or to His Anointed. This is a true picture of Satan, the Adversary, the adversary of God and His Christ, and all who worship Him. He it is who seeks to cure humanity's mortal wound apart from the presence of Messiah.

Today he is the great deceiver. He employs a satyr with horns and hoofs, who delights in torturing men and dragging them down into the gutter, to mask his real occupation. Most men imagine that he is the monarch of an imaginary underworld, that he is enthroned in "hell." But from God's Word we know that he never was, nor is, nor shall be there. When death and "hell" are cast into the lake of fire he is already in that dreadful place, not its monarch, but its most miserable victim. In that day Christ alone will rule throughout the universe. But in this era Satan holds sway in secret on the earth.

It is only by stealth and deception that he holds fast the homage of humanity. If men knew that the serpent of Eden had been transformed into a messenger of light in order to better carry on his early work of weaning men's hearts away from God, if they knew that the angelic glory hid the serpent's heart, would they so blindly do his bidding? Our adversary is the god of this eon. He is worshiped in Christendom as well as among the heathen. Everywhere is found his worship, except among the feeble few who to Christ are true. He it is who blinds the minds of unbelievers, so that the illumination of the evangel of the glory of Christ, Who is the Image of the invisible God, does not irradiate them (2 Cor.4:4).

THE ADVERSARY'S STRATAGEMS

Satan could never blind men to the evangel by torturing them with miseries. That would drive them to Christ as a Refuge from his hands. He has learned far better than that. He can lead them on by filling their vision with a promise of prosperity. He does not gain their allegiance by siding with wrong. By propaganda for justice and peace he finds multitudes to applaud his measures and support his pretensions.

Such is his course with the unbelievers, especially with the self-righteous, church-going religionist. How does he behave toward the saints? Here also the danger lies in his strategy. The heart fails as we see multitudes of Christ's members become Satan's eager instruments for the reformation and moral uplift of mankind. Not only are they involved in sanitary politics and fleshly philanthropies, but the very "gospel" which is preached glides over the blood of Christ to a promise of bread and butter, better clothes, a cleaner and more prosperous career, and a respectable standing in the community, all of which Satan will gladly give to those who will worship him. Christ's gospel bears no promise of temporal advantage in the world today. Instead, it may mean nakedness and poverty and ignominy. It brought all of these to the great apostle who is the example of its power.

But still more subtle are Satan's schemes to deceive the saints. With ingenious art he misplaces truth and presses the most precious portions of Scripture beyond their proper sphere. This passage will afford a good example. All saints acknowledge the power of the blood of Christ. In God's presence the blood is everything. But has it a place in this conflict? Does it avail in the sight of the Adversary? Is the blood our shelter from his arrows, our deliverance from his devices? For our protection in this warfare God has given us a spiritual armor. It consists of truth, righteousness, peace, faith. This is not the place for the blood. If these are lacking, the deepest appreciation of the potency of Christ's sacrificial death will not deliver us from the assaults of the powers of darkness.

This illustration will help to explain why some, who seem to give the blood a place we do not accord it now, fall in line with the Adversary's program and are deceived by his consummate imitations of physical and spiritual endowments. These are all latent in the sacrifice of Christ, but the time for their realization has not yet arrived. These graces are connected with an earthly allotment, not with the celestial holdings which belong to us. They are the Adversary's stratagem, intended to lure the saints from their celestial allotment.

OUR DEFENSIVE ARMOR

To correspond with our weakness, our panoply is composed of five pieces, truth, righteousness, peace, faith, and salvation. These are figured by a girdle, a cuirass, sandals, a shield, and a helmet. Let us remember that all of this is "in the Lord," not "in Christ." Our destiny is not at stake. It is altogether a matter of conduct and the present life. We have all of the spiritual graces which make up this armor in Christ. In Him we are righteous and justified. In Him we have peace with God. But this is not in view here. To win in this defense we must know the truth, we must act justly, we must practice peace with our fellow men, we must exercise faith, and then we will enjoy a present salvation from the assaults of the powers of darkness.

GIRDED WITH TRUTH

We need to know but little truth to be saved from sin. We need a thorough realization of God's revelation to be saved from Satan during our present life. Truth is first in this warfare. In these days truth is not only ignored but belittled. Satan's ministers are transfigured as dispensers of righteousness, but they oppose the truth. Without a certain measure of truth we will not even know of our celestial allotment. A mature grasp of God's present plans will give strength and readiness for action. It will give us assurance and steadfastness. Only this will keep us from being pushed from our position. It is the lack of truth which has left the heavenly allotment almost deserted. The saints are thieving Israel's physical and spiritual belongings instead of defending their own. Hence they lack the helmet of salvation.

THE CUIRASS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

Righteousness in word and deed is our chief protection from the assaults of the spiritual forces of wickedness. It is figured by a complete covering for the thorax, not only a breastplate, but a backplate as well, so that the vital organs are well encased in a coat of mail. Wrong doing not only incurs the condemnation of men, but the accusation of the spirit world, not to speak of the loss at the dais of Christ. The heavenly allotment cannot be enjoyed by those who act unjustly, and thus leave off this cuirass, and leave themselves open to the attacks of their malignant spirit enemies. It is only as we don this cuirass that we may receive the helmet of salvation from their attacks.

THE SANDALS OF PEACE

This is the most remarkable part of our panoply. Peace is not usually a part of conflict. Sandals are not armor. Yet, even among men, many a war was decided by peace. In World War I the outcome was largely influenced by the fact that Germany did not remain at peace with the United States. A country which is already fully engaged in battle is not fit to fight another enemy. If we engage in strife with mankind we will be unfitted for the fight with our real enemies. Sandals figure our contact with the earth, with humankind. To be saved in this warfare it is of the utmost value to know the truth of the conciliation, and to imitate God in His attitude toward the race.

The sandals of the readiness of the evangel of peace give us the positive side of the apostle's warning that it is not ours to wrestle with blood and flesh. It is a most difficult lesson to learn. There is so much friction with our fellow men; they are so blatant in their enmity to God, that it is difficult to maintain His attitude toward them, and refuse to antagonize the unbeliever. Yet this is essential to our celestial warfare. When this economy ends and the next begins the scenes will all be shifted. Then our celestial foes will be dislodged, and God will change His dealings with men. Peace will be replaced by indignation. Until then, let us not jeopardize our warfare by antagonizing those with whom He is at peace.

THE SHIELD OF FAITH

In ancient warfare two kinds of shields were used. A small buckler parried the blows in a hand-to-hand conflict. A large shield, called a "door," fended the flying missiles of the enemy. Such a shield is ours, to protect us from the arrows of our enemies. One of the devices of ancient warfare was the use of elephants to dismay the enemy by their onslaught. For this a counter measure was invented. Arrows were fitted with combustibles, lit, and shot into the thick hide of the animals, who became so terror stricken by the blazing darts and maddened by the burning wounds that they stampeded, doing more damage to their own side than to the enemy. Our spirit foes use such fiery arrows to wound and torture us. Only faith can fend us from them. Those engaged in this warfare for long will find their shields studded with the charred stumps of arrows which would have rankled in their flesh if faith had not caught their force and quenched their fire.

To sight and sense men seem to be our enemies, who cause us untold suffering and agony of spirit. It is not so. Faith insists that men are merely the instruments of unseen spirit forces which impel them, of which they are not aware. Faith refuses to fight with men because it believes and receives the conciliation. No part of our faith is more helpful in defeating the fiery shafts of our foes than this great truth.

We have insisted, and rightly so, that this passage does not affect our position in Christ, but deals with our conduct in the Lord. Our behavior, however, is always dependent on what is ours by faith. If we had no celestial allotment we would have no heavenly conflict. With the large shield of faith we take refuge behind that which is ours in Christ, apart from our own doings. One blazing arrow may be the certainty that our sins and offenses are such that we have no right or title to any allotment on earth or in the heavens. Only faith in God's declarations can quench this rankling insinuation.

RECEIVING THE HELMET OF SALVATION

Do not take the helmet of salvation! We should take the panoply and the shield, but it is only after we have taken the rest that we may wear the helmet. The girdle and the cuirass must be put on. The shield must be held aloft. Only then, and not till then, may we receive the helmet, which is salvation. It is God's award to those who are girded with truth and protected by righteousness, and shod with peace, and sheltered by faith. Without these, our heads must be bared to the assaults of our adversaries. With them we wear the helmet which proclaims us invulnerable.

This helmet is not salvation from our sins or ourselves, but from the spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials. If all this were needed to save us from sin, would anyone be saved? This salvation is confined to our contacts with unseen spirit forces. It is limited to the defense of our celestial allotment. It is deliverance from the mighty powers of darkness which seek to rob us of the enjoyment of our allotment among the celestials. Let us remember that this is the Godward aspect of the secret. It does not deal with our relationship to Christ as members of His body, or our place in the new humanity. Those are the Christward and manward aspects of the secret. Here we have a special salvation from the malignant world of celestial spirits.

OUR OFFENSIVE WEAPON

Only as thus accoutered are we ready to wage offensive warfare. The sword, like the helmet, is to be received, not taken. Only those should handle it who are measurably qualified. With God's declarations we can rout all our foes who trespass on our allotment. Israel, even under Solomon, never conquered all the land God gave to Abraham. The saints today hold hardly any of the ground which is theirs according to God's Word. There is no other means of regaining our lost heritage. The first chapter of Ephesians is the unbroken sword which will clear our allotment of all intruders.

This sword is not for saints or sinners, but for spirits. Let us not use it to cut and slash our fellow believers. Let us not wage war against our fellow men. Our enemies gain a great victory when they introduce sedition into the citadel of the saints. They acquire a vast advantage when we turn its edge against our fellow men. It is utterly devastating to take the phrase "the sword of the spirit" away from its context and use God's Word as a blade to destroy all and sundry. Its cutting and killing power is only for those whom God accounts His enemies.

THE CELESTIAL WARFARE

To sum up, our warfare is not with blood and flesh, but with the sovereignties, with the authorities, with the world-mights of this darkness, with the spiritual forces of wickedness among the celestials (Eph.6:12). The celestial allotment (Eph.1:3,11) which characterizes the present secret administration is still in the hands of opposing spiritual forces, who will not be finally dislodged until the day of deliverance. These enemies of ours are active in opposing every effort of faith to grasp its patrimony and maintain its heavenly stand. Conduct conforming to this truth, any measure of attaining to the out-resurrection, as the apostle puts it in Philippians, will meet sore opposition from sinister spirit forces. To withstand them we are provided with the panoply, the shield and the sword. So may we stand.

Our conduct toward these dark spirit powers should be the opposite to that of our behavior toward our fellow men. There is a sword for the former, an olive branch for the latter. Men may be used by these spirit forces to antagonize us, but let us always look beyond the human agents. The sword is not for them. If we wish to be saved from these foes let us furnish our armory with the girdle of truth, the cuirass of righteousness, the sandals of peace, and God will furnish the helmet of salvation and the sword of the spirit. Let us then stand, like Shammah (2 Sam.23:11,12) one of David's mighties, with all our armor on, with shield and sword in hand, and defend our celestial fields from the dark spirit powers which seek to rob us of the enjoyment of our heavenly lot.

2 Corinthians 10:4-6

4 For the weapons of our warfare are not fleshly, but powerful to God toward the pulling down of bulwarks; 5 pulling down reckonings and every height elevating itself against the knowledge of God, and leading into captivity every apprehension [MIND-effect] into the listening of Christ, 6 and having all in readiness to avenge every disregarding, whenever your listening may be completed.

In accord with Romans 5:19 and Philippians 2:8 "the listening of Christ" is His listening unto the death of the cross. It is "the evangel of the glory of Christ" (2 Cor.4:4). We are to be listening to His listening and as we complete our listening, we are made ready to avenge every disregarding of Christ's listening, that is, of every disregarding of "our evangel" (2 Cor.4:3).

Let us, then, be listening to the listening of Christ in His suffering and death and to what it accomplishes. Such bulwarks as the teaching of a "limited atonement" and the idea of an "eternal hell" are pulled down by the evangel of Christ's love, "judging this, that if One dies for the sake of all [in His listening to the instructions of His God and Father unto the death of the cross], consequently all die [as to what they are in Adam]" (2 Cor.5:14; Rom.5:12-19). "For even as, in Adam, all are dying, thus also, in Christ, shall all be vivified" (1 Cor.15:22). D.H.H.

A CHAINED AMBASSADOR

WHAT a change from the mailed and weaponed warrior of the preceding passage is this chained ambassador at Rome, the capital of much of the world! At one stroke of His graphic brush God gives us a picture of the conciliation. Following so closely on the celestial conflict, it displays the startling contrast between our strife with spirits and our truce with men. At the same time that Paul stands, armored and armed, ready to repulse any encroachment on his celestial allotment, he also allows the Roman power to load his limbs with chains, although no act could be more defiant and provocative of war than such degradation heaped upon God's representative.

Paul was an ambassador from the high court of heaven. The treatment accorded him is an index of the attitude of men toward the government of God. Rome, the political center of their controlled empire gives God's plenipotentiary a chain. Any earthly power would have declared war. All the resources of a government are pledged to protect its officials in a foreign land. The very first announcement of hostilities demands that the ambassador be safely withdrawn. Any indignities to his person are an affront to the court from which he came. Paul's chain is an outrage, a challenge, a gauntlet thrown down to the God of heaven to provoke Him to hostilities. Will He not declare war? Will He not at least deliver His ambassador from his fetters?

He is for peace! All their maltreatment of His ambassador does not shake Him from this resolve. Nothing that they can do to Him or to the saints can alter God's settled attitude toward all mankind so long as the present administration is in effect. They are His enemies, and they neglect no occasion to express their enmity. The peace is not mutual, except in those who have received the evangel. All that men can do to show their defiance of God only serves to emphasize His unalterable attitude. No provocation can rouse His wrath. No insult can wake His anger. His Son has died, and He is conciliated whether men respond or reject. His chained ambassador is the graphic illustration of this secret evangel.

The secret of the evangel is not the special subject of this epistle, but, like much of Paul's previous ministry, it is recognized and incorporated into this secret administration by brief allusions. In the previous paragraph it is specifically described as "the evangel of peace" (Eph.6:15). Here it is called "the secret of the evangel." One phrase connects it with the fifth of Romans, where it is fully set forth, and the other refers to the last paragraph of that epistle, in which its secret character is emphasized. Here Paul is merely mentioning it as the subject of their prayers for him, since he still continued to make it known. He does not need to explain it to those who had been under his ministry. Nor do we need to elaborate upon this marvelous evangel, as it is fully treated in the book, The Mystery of the Gospel.

In presenting the secret economy in this epistle, Paul is seen in a variety of characters. In general, the revelation is made by an apostle of Christ in the first three chapters, and the exhortations come from a prisoner of the Lord in the last three. He dispenses the secret as a steward (3:2) who makes the necessary arrangements for the household of faith. In the previous economy, while the nations were still at a distance from God, he was a priest in order to bring them nigh (Rom.15:16). Now they are so near they need no mediation. It is only in relation to the secret of the evangel, that he is called an ambassador. And such are we also, who pray men to be conciliated to God.

This title indicates the change in the apostle's attitude toward the world. At first he went forth as a herald, to proclaim the evangel of the kingdom. This demanded freedom to fare forth among all nations. Now that he is bound, such a message is impossible even if the Kingdom had not been rejected. Now that he is a bound ambassador, all that is left is prayer. This is the essence of the evangel today. We are to pray men to be conciliated to God. And the apostle beseeches the saints to pray for him. In the corresponding section of this epistle we have Paul's prayer for them (1:15-19). Now he desires their prayers in his apparently hopeless dilemma. His body is bound. That should not be changed. But the evangel must not be fettered. It must be free.

PAUL'S PRAYER ANSWERED

It soon became apparent that chains were no hindrance to the spread of the evangel. The petitions which arose at Paul's request were speedily answered. In writing to the Philippians, not long afterward, he said, "Now I am intending you to know, brethren, that my affairs have rather come to be for the progress of the evangel, so that my bonds in Christ become apparent in the whole Pretorium and to all the rest, and the majority of the brethren, having confidence in the Lord as to my bonds, are more exceedingly daring to speak the Word of God fearlessly" (Phil.1:12-14). His own audience came to him, and his example spurred on the preaching of others.

No other part of the Scriptures is so suffused with prayer as Ephesians. While the opening strain may not be an actual prayer, it is a lengthened benediction: "Blessed be the God and Father . . . Who . . . ." Then Paul gives thanks and prays (1:15-17). When does he cease? There seems to be no definite stop until, in chapter three, he begins again! He resumes his direct petition in the fourteenth verse (3:14). In chapter four he beseeches the saints. This continues until these concluding paragraphs where he pleads that they pray for him. In no other epistle is the spirit of petition more prevalent. It is heartening, therefore, to know that this prayer was answered. Is it not prophetic of the time when all of these petitions will be fulfilled?

Now that the great apostle has poured out his life, the prayer for him is no longer needed. Yet the necessity for such a petition is much more urgent today than when it was first dictated by the spirit. The secret of the evangel is practically unknown. It certainly is not preached. It is shackled with the chains of ignorance and tradition and unbelief. The darkness is dense. Let the reader quietly consider the basis on which present day evangelism is carried on by the more enlightened and faithful preachers. The commissions of Matthew, Mark, and Luke are given as their marching orders. Even the twelve apostles never followed Matthew's commission, for they knew that it awaits the day when the King is on His throne. Mark's commission is definitely said to be fulfilled. Luke's was continued in the Pentecostal period, and is set aside along with the ministries of Acts.

It was the rejection of the Lucan ministry by the nation of Israel, as detailed in the Acts account, which opened up the opportunity for the new and distinct revelation, hitherto hidden. It is subversive of all sense to go back to the previous commissions or to inject them into the later unfolding. Once this is acknowledged, and the secret is grasped, its distinctness from all previous evangels is so pronounced that it seems impossible we should have mixed them all together. We cannot help following Paul's example, and implore the saints to persevere in prayer and supplication that expression may be given to the secret evangel which God has specially given to reveal His grace in this secret administration. It is only because He is dealing in pure grace that anyone is saved.

TYCHICUS' COMMISSION

Tychicus' name is apt, for it is formed from the root HAPPEN. He it is who observes the things that happen to Paul, and who is sent to inform the saints of Paul's affairs in order to keep up the bond of affection which bound them to him. In Christ he was a "brother beloved." In the Lord he was a "faithful servant." What higher praise could be accorded him? It is a rare combination. Many a brother is loving, but lacking in faithfulness. Others are faithful, but lacking in love. But Tychicus was balanced, a splendid specimen, such as Ephesians should produce when it is apprehended by the heart and practiced in the life.

THE CLOSING BENEDICTION

What a balm this benediction brings! To float calmly on life's troubled sea needs anchorage well grounded in God and in His Christ. The Father's affection and provision for His family can only be appreciated by the faith which luxuriates in His love. All saints of all time have known a measure of God's beneficence. It remained for us, who deserved it least, to reach the pinnacle of His grace, and so discover the zenith of His love. Let us revel in it, so that this benediction may find a satisfying fulfillment in our experience.

Love is the keynote of this epistle, and on this it closes. Grace and love. Grace is for those who love. Some have thought that God's special favor rests on those who know, and surely God greatly values intelligence and will give it due reward. But knowing is not an end. It is a means. It leads to love. The realization of the surpassing love of Christ cannot fail to kindle a kindred emotion in our breasts. Those who have followed the unfoldings of this epistle to this point should be lavish in their love for Him. The deeper we explore His fathomless affection the more our love becomes like His.

Have we drunk so deeply of His grace that we can echo the apostle's closing words? Some saints may have slandered us. Some may have done us serious wrong. Most of them would refuse our fellowship. What is our response? If they love our Lord in incorruption, may grace be theirs in unstinted measure! It is not the attitude of His beloved saints to us that counts, but their heart for Him. This is the supreme test. Let a man love Christ and I am for him, no matter what he thinks of me! Love incorruptible is the precious fruit of God's primeval purpose, the end and object of all creation, the crown of redemption and the very aura of God's glory.

CONCLUSION

The secret administration which is revealed to our hearts in Ephesians is dominated by one controlling thought, which is expressed in the Greek by the prefix sun, and in English by the term joint. The elect among the nations are associated with a chosen remnant of Israel for equal, ineffable, celestial glory. This is presented from three standpoints, according as it expresses our relationship to God, to Christ and to the saints. God, in His absolute deity, selected some out of the apostate nation for a celestial allotment, giving them the earnest of His spirit. The believers among the nations receive the same pledge, and are therefore joint allottees.

Christ forms this Israelitish remnant into His spiritual body, for the administration of His universal empire. The spirit had already incorporated believers among the nation and individual Israelites into that body, but now all physical distinctions are further emphasized as joint members from the beginning of Paul's calling.

A new humanity is begun in Christ, in which the saints among the nations are made fellow citizens, members of God's family, and a part of the temple in which He dwells. In these we become joint partakers.

Each of these three aspects touches another "mystery" from which we must carefully distinguish it. The celestial allotment flows from the full revelation of the mystery of Christ. His earthly sovereignty had been revealed. His heavenly headship gives Him a universal throne. "As it is now further revealed," Christ's celestial domains are our allotment.

Faith has already seated the members of Christ's body on their heavenly throne. But His vivification, ascension, and rest shall yet be our portion in fact as well as in faith. Our present bodies are not fit for that celestial scene. They must undergo the change which the secret of the resurrection sets forth. They will be changed from miserable, mortal, soulish, soilish bodies to imperishable, glorious, spiritual, celestial bodies like His.

Following Israel's defection Paul proclaims the conciliation, the secret of the evangel, by which all mankind is conciliated to God and the priestly supremacy of Israel is set aside. In Ephesians this is not only true for the world, but it applies to the saints as well. We who do not belong to the favored nation are fellow partakers with all the saints.

To fully enjoy the message of Ephesians and revel in the grace which it reveals, we should apprehend these previous secrets. The exaltation of Christ to universal dominion, in the heavens as well as on the earth, is essential to a realization of our celestial destiny and high heavenly honors. This is equally true of the change wrought by vivification as set forth in the secret of the resurrection. If Christ were not exalted to the highest heaven we would not care to make it our abode. If our bodies were not changed, we could not share it with Him. These secrets should be our delight before we enter the portals of Ephesians.

Love underlies it all. All was created in the Son of His love. The eons will not cease to unfold until all shall respond and satisfy the longings of His heart. To display His love and create a response in the breasts of His creatures is the purpose of the eons. Does not this explain the pain, the sorrow, the despair, and the death which seem to have blighted all His efforts? These are but the background, the contrast so essential for the revelation of their opposites. They are the bitter ingredients without which we cannot know the balm, the joy, the ecstasy, the ineffable delight which God has prepared for us. Adam would never have known good if he had not eaten of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. We can never know grace unless we first experience sin.

In Ephesians we see man at his worst and God at His best. There is the deepest degradation and the greatest grace. It is an epistle of superlatives. The last become first, the lowest highest. The dregs of earth become the elect of heaven. We are His achievement, a special and permanent display to exhibit to an admiring universe the multifarious wisdom and the immense wealth of grace there is in Him. He has made us an essential feature of His glory. He needs our worthlessness to reveal His wonders to the whole creation.

The infinite wisdom, the excessive power, the fathomless love which this secret administration displays will forever set God's name at the very pinnacle of fame, not only in the coming eon and the eon of the eons, but in the ceaseless cycles which follow the consummation, not only for the sons of Adam, for all their generations, but in the spirit world as well, with its myriads upon myriads, from the meanest messenger to the mightiest monarch, throughout the stellar universe. Such glorious grace, such boundless favor, appalls, prostrates, and overawes. Silence and adoration can only whisper:

Blessed, blessed, blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Who has blessed us so.
AND THERE WILL BE NO END A. E. KNOCH

PEACE AND GRACE

As noted above, Ephesians ends as it began on the high note of God's blessedness. As this blessedness was built first on grace and peace from God, our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, so it points at the close to peace (joined by love with faith) from God, the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, with a final salutation of grace to those who are loving our Lord Jesus Christ. Thus God's blessedness begins and ends with grace, which is JOY.

This is wholly appropriate for an epistle so filled with grace. Passing by 1:6-8 for the present let us listen attentively again to 2:4-10 as translated in the proposed CV revision as follows:

4 Yet ˙God, being rich in mercy
Because of His vast ˙love with which He loves us
5 (we also being ⁼dead to the offenses and the lusts),

THE EVANGEL OF WHICH PAUL IS NOT ASHAMED

> "For not being ashamed am I of the evangel: For it is being God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it—to the Jew first, and to the Greek as well. For in it God's righteousness is being revealed out of faith, for faith, according as it is written: Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living" (Romans 1:16,17).

In Romans 1:16,17, Paul is evangelizing God's evangel concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, as it presently applies to us who are believing it. But he does not begin with this evangel itself. Rather he jumps immediately into its present happy ending. The evangel is continually being God's power for salvation to us.

Note that this happy ending does not relate to everyone, but only to those who are presently believing it. Paul will relate it to everyone soon enough and make it clear that the happy ending is for all, but right now he has only those to whom he is writing (and that includes us) in view—only those who are believing it while living in the present administration of God's conciliation. Consequently the happy ending here in Romans 1:16 is not the full happy ending. Still, this salvation anticipates that glorious ending of salvation which embraces all humans and brings everything to real and lasting good.

(I have to admit I like to read fiction which has a happy ending and generally look at the end before starting to read the story. I do not care to read those accounts which reflect present reality of outcomes because there is enough of that without reading about it for relaxation. But God's evangel is not fiction, and it has a happy ending in every respect, in truth and glory.)

NOT BEING ASHAMED

The apostle Paul, who is severed from all that was gain to him at birth, severed for God's evangel, is well aware that he has his critics. To make matters worse, these were his former friends, who see things as he himself formerly saw things. They were telling him that he ought to be ashamed of bringing such a message as he was bringing. This is clearly brought out in Romans 6:1 and 6:15 where we hear the gist of the criticism which was that what Paul was saying encourages sin.

APART FROM LAW

The foundation of this supposed criticism, of course, is that the evangel Paul was bringing is "apart from law" (Rom.3:21; 6:14). Law was seen as necessary for dealing with sin. Hence Moses says to Israel in presenting the words of law to them:

> "Do not fear, for in order to probe you the One, Elohim has come, and in order that the fear of Him should come over your faces, that you may not sin" (Exodus 20:20).

But no one was able to stop sinning. Paul himself testifies: "For we are aware that the law is being spiritual, yet I am being fleshly, having been disposed of under sin. For what I am effecting I am not knowing, for not what I am willing, this I am putting into practice, but what I am hating, this I am doing. Now if what I am not willing, this I am doing, I am conceding that the law is ideal. Yet now it is no longer I who am effecting it, but sin making its home in me" (Rom.7:14-17).

Yet here the critic might point to Jeremiah 30:31-34 concerning "a new covenant" in which Yahweh promises for Israel: "I will put My law within them, and I will write it on their heart . . . . And I shall not remember their sin any longer." So also the critic might remind him (quite unnecessarily) of the Lord's words in Ezekiel 36:27, "I will make it that you shall walk in My statutes and observe My ordinances, and you will do them." But this lasts only for a thousand years because human works of law are an important factor in their salvation.

However, the evangel Paul is evangelizing is apart from law. For indeed it reveals God's righteousness in all He does including making it so that sinful Israel will not sin for a thousand years by giving them what He did not give Adam or other people. That certainly does not reveal God's righteousness and needs itself to be justified. The only way it can be justified is by God not sparing His Son but giving Him up for the sinner's sake, and that entirely apart from the sinner's doing, and wholly through the rescue of that gratuitous joy which comes through Jesus Christ, our Lord (Rom.7:24,25).

THREE EVANGELICAL POINTS

Paul is not ashamed of this evangel which is apart from law, and with intense passion he lists three reasons for this:

1. "It is being God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it—to the Jew first and to the Greek as well" (Rom.1:16).

2. "In it God's righteousness is being revealed out of [the Righteous One's] faith, for [the believing ones'] faith" (Rom.1:17).

3. "God's indignation is being revealed from heaven on all the irreverence and unrighteousness of humans . . . not one [of whom] is being righteous—not even one . . . [so that] because out of works of law no flesh at all shall be justified in [God's] sight" (Rom.1:18-3:20).

Paul presents these points in reverse order to their development. The first is the present happy ending. The second is the glorious solution to the problem. And the third is the problem. (This is the order in which I like to read fictional stories. But God's evangel concerning His Son is not fiction.)

There are at least two points of relief within the long account of the very disturbing problem presented in Romans 1:18-3:20. The first is that parenthetical outburst of Romans 2:16b, and the second is the declaration that despite the unfaithfulness of "some" Jews God will remain faithful to (keep faith with) His covenanted promises to that nation (Rom.3:3,4). The first employs the only usage of the word "evangel" and only reference to Jesus Christ in this long presentation of the problem, and the second brings up the question, "How can God do this righteously?"

In an attempt to translate as much as possible in accord with Paul's intended meaning as understood by those who received this letter, the CVNT makes 2:16b a parenthesis, and (while keeping 3:3,4 as in most other translations) we may take these verses as a puzzle that will be solved in 3:21-28.

In Romans chapter 2, Paul intensifies the problem of human irreverence and unrighteousness because of which in His indignation, God gives them over to the lusts and dishonorable passions and a disqualified mind, by bringing in the matter of God's righteous judgment. How does God judge the situation? He must judge righteously which means He must respond to it righteously in accord with their acts and grant eonian life to anyone who endures in good acts, and He must express His indignation and fury in continued ways against those who are being persuaded to unrighteousness. And already when he reaches 2:16, where Paul notes that even the hidden acts of humans are to be taken into account, it is made evident that no one can be judged as enduring in good acts. No flesh at all shall be justified in God's sight by doing works of law because no one endures in such acts, for not one is righteous—not even one. In 2:16 Paul has not finished this account of the problem but intends to show indisputably that the Jew is included in it. But at this point he interrupts his argument by shouting out the solution. According to Paul's evangel, which is God's evangel concerning His Son for which Paul is severed, God's righteousness is not revealed through God's righteous judgment but through the faith of Jesus Christ, that is, through His listening to His Father's instruction unto the death of the cross. God's righteousness is manifested through Jesus Christ! And that results in the happy ending of all humans being constituted righteous (Rom.5:19). Paul could not wait until he gets back to the evangel and tells us of this solution and happy ending for all. But still he must make it clear that the problem is one that involves everyone including the Jew. And so he continues with Romans 2:17-3:20.

In this, however, he claims that God remains faithful to all His promises despite that fact that not one (Jew included) is righteous. How can God do that righteously? It seems unrighteous. Thus we are led to the solution of this entire problem starting with Romans 3:21 where Paul begins all over again with what he said in 1:17, but with an addition: In Romans 3:21,22 the solution is "for all." It still is a revelation (manifestation) of God's righteousness by means of the Righteous One's (that is, Jesus Christ's) faith, and it still is for (that is "on" but not yet "in") all believers. But, it is on us because it is for all. For all sin and are wanting of the glory of God.

With the problem of 1:18-3:20 and its solution of 3:21-28 in view we may now return to 1:16,17 where the solution and happy ending as it relates to believers at present is presented.

A NEW WAY OF SEEING THINGS

Whether or not the "out of faith" in Romans 1:17a refers to Christ's faith, (the Righteous One's faith of 1:17b), or to the believer's faith in Him, makes a great deal of difference.

Furthermore, whether the "for [into] faith" refers to the believer's faith focused on the Righteous One's faith, or it is meant to emphasize the "out of faith" (with both prepositional phrases referring to the believer's faith in Christ) is of utmost importance. Either Paul is evangelizing justification as God's achievement through His Son's death on the cross, or as our achievement by our believing in Christ. It is one or the other, not partly one and partly the other (no matter how little our part may be). Either justification reveals God's righteousness in making all humanity right by not sparing His own Son but giving Him up for the sake of all humanity (both sinners who presently listen and sinners who do not yet believe) or there is no evangel whatsoever.

There is Adam ["human"] and there is Christ Jesus ["Anointed Yahweh-Saviour"], and there is the God and Father of Christ Jesus and of us all. He speaks to us with a message that says "It is well." All is well because God, Who is altogether good, is operating all, and One Who sends His own Son in the likeness of sin's flesh and does so concerning sin so that He condemns sin in the flesh (Rom.8:3) to a death that puts it entirely out of existence. Yet also sin itself is found to have been beneficial to the glory of God the Father in that it makes His righteousness and love known.

This is God's evangel ["well-message"] concerning His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. It is apart from law placed over us, and it is in every respect a message of joy.

Now joy be to God for it all.

Paul brings us this evangel in the first eight chapters of Romans. It is being God's power for salvation to everyone who is believing it, day by day and hour by hour, in every circumstance, for in it God's righteousness is being revealed day by day and hour by hour and minute by minute and second by second in every circumstance. This revelation of God's righteousness comes out of the Righteous One's faith unto the death of the cross, and it is for our faith. That is why Paul is not ashamed of it.

For if the revelation of God's righteousness were sourced in our faith, the message would be nonsense, and there would be no solution to death and sin, and no joy for us or to God.

Let us, then, not insert ourselves into the revelation of God's righteousness where Jesus Christ, our Lord, belongs. Let us listen with faith to what God is saying in His well-message concerning His Son. "Are you not aware that to whom you are presenting yourselves [day by day and minute by minute] as slaves for listening, his slaves you are being, to whom you are listening . . . ?" (Rom.6:16).

GOD'S POWER FOR SALVATION

To Paul's critic and to Paul as Saul of Tarsus, and to Israel and those of the nations associated with them, and to most reasonable and wise and noble ones among humanity, what is required for a measure of order and a good life and peace is law. That seems the best that can be expected under present conditions.

But Paul says that the evangel he is bringing is apart from law, and those who obtain its joy and peace are not under law. For its joy and peace are gratuitous. Instead of law, the evangel itself is God's power for present salvation from wretchedness and meaninglessness and ignorance of what is going on in God's operation of all. What God says to Moses is presently replaced by what He says in His evangel concerning His Son.

What Paul says in Romans 1:16 he repeats in 1 Corinthians 1:18, as follows:

> For the word of the cross is being stupidity indeed > to those who are perishing,
> Yet to us who are being saved
> it is being God's power.

And again in 1 Corinthians 15:1,2, our apostle says:

[y]Now I am making known to [=]you, brethren, the evangel which I evangelize[°] to [=]you, which also [=]you accept, in which also [=]you [˚]stand, [2] through which also [=]you are being saved[°], if [=]you are retaining the word [a]which I evangelize[°] to [=]you, outside and except [=]you believe feignedly.

To be believing and retaining the evangel, listening with faith to it, brings a continual spiritual power (God's power) for present salvation to us. This is a tremendous change from God's message of law and its demands imposed on Israel and those associated with that chosen nation—a change that seems dangerous and powerless to anyone who is acquainted with "human nature."

THE EVANGEL ITSELF

Nevertheless, Paul is not ashamed of the evangel he is evangelizing. And as with Romans 1:17, so with 1 Corinthians 15:3,4, this evangel leaves out demands on the human and places all on Christ:

For I give over to [=]you among the first things what also I accept, that Christ dies for the sake of our [˙]sins in accord with the scriptures . . . . [4] and that He is entombed, and that He has been roused[°] the third [˙]day in accord with the scriptures . . . .

Concerning what Christ does the apostle uses two fact verbs (one active, and the other passive) and a final verb which tells of a completed state: Christ dies. Christ is entombed. And Christ has been roused.

It is not misleading to read the fact verbs as past facts (Christ "died," and He "was entombed"), but that does not bring out the simple force of the act unencumbered by any inflection. The "when" of the act is not expressed by the verb, but only the shocking truth that Christ, the Anointed One of God, dies. This is God's evangel concerning His Son. It is a fact infused with divine power for those who are retaining it and believing it, and listening to it over and over again.

That is Romans 1:16. It is the believer's special blessing. The believer is perceiving that God is working all together for good. But He is doing so by means of the faith of the Righteous One, Who dies for the sake of the sinner.

We are thus led to Romans 1:17, which needs all the listening we can give it.

THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF ONE

Paul is not ashamed of the evangel: "for in it God's righteousness is being revealed . . . ." In this evangel, which is a message of God's power for present ongoing salvation to those who are believing it, is a revelation. Here we come to the solution to the third evil of Genesis 1:2, that of darkness. Darkness is replaced by light. Yet more than that: Darkness is put to an end by the revealing light of God's righteousness.

This is not righteousness from God, but rather the righteousness of One, and that One is God.

God's righteousness is not revealed in God's righteous judgments, for they are based on law, and no flesh at all can be justified by works of law. If no flesh at all shall be justified by works of law, then by human works of law God's righteousness cannot be brought to light. And darkness remains.

For the evangel to be God's power in the lives of the believers it must reveal God's righteousness. Paul speaks here of what the theologian calls "theodicy." But we do not need a Greek word. What we need is to know that Paul speaks of God's own righteousness in all that He does.

So after bringing out the inability of law works to justify ("make righteous") irreverent and unrighteous humans (Rom.1:18-3:20), Paul says "Yet now, apart from law, God's righteousness has been made manifest" (Rom.3:21).

Again, Paul is not speaking of righteousness from God given to us, but of "righteousness of God" being brought to light in the evangel. Let us not jump ahead and prematurely relate this righteousness to our justification. We will get to that when Paul brings us to that. But now we are concerned with God's righteousness and His justification. And that is revealed in the evangel.

At this point we must listen very carefully and undistractedly to what is written. What does the evangel say that brings God's righteousness to light?

God's righteousness is being revealed "out of faith, into [in the sense of "for"] faith."

If we take Paul as speaking here only of our faith (as he does in verse 5 and 12, and also in verse 16 where he uses the participle form of the verb form of "faith," that is, "faithing") we have already lost our way. Paul immediately cites Habakkuk 2:4 from the Septuagint: "Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living." To repeat what needs often to be repeated, the faith here is the Righteous One's faith. God's evangel concerning His Son concerns His Son's faith, for God's Son is the Righteous One, and it is His faith that is the source of the revelation of God's righteousness.

FOR FAITH

We come, then, to our faith. The believer's faith is focused on the Righteous One's faith—or rather, as Paul presents it, the Righteous One's faith is directed into our faith. We are believing that the Righteous One, Jesus Christ, our Lord, listened in flawless faith unto the death of the cross. While we are still sinners He dies for our sakes. We are believing that we are spiritually baptized into His death (Rom.6:4), so that in that He was given up because of our offenses He was roused because of our justifying which was secured in His death (Rom.4:25).

Now, as brought out in Romans 1:17 (where Paul expounds a matter he has tremendous eagerness to bring), we are believing that God's righteousness is being revealed "out of" the Righteous One's faith. This is a priority in our faith.

God, Who is operating all, is righteous in all that He does, and this is revealed by means of the death of His Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord.

That is my understanding of this passage, but the test is in the scriptural text itself as translated as closely as possible to its original meaning. Here, then, is such an attempt:

ROMANS 1:13-17

13 [y]Now I am not wanting [=]you to be being ignorant, brethren, that often I purpose[°] to come to[d] [=]you (and am prevented ˙hitherto) that I should have [a]some fruit among [=]you also, according as [+] among the rest of the nations.

14 To both Greeks and barbarians, to both wise and foolish, a debtor am I being. 15 Thus ˙this eagerness [ac]of mine to bring the evangel[°] to [=]you also, ˙who are in Rome.

16 For not being ashamed[°] am I of the evangel:

For it is being God's power [io]for salvation to everyone ˙who is believing it—to the Jew first, and to the Greek as well. 17 For in it God's righteousness is being revealed[°] out of faith, [io]for faith, according as it is [°]written[°]: [y]Now the Righteous One, out of faith shall He be living[°].

THE METAPHOR OF GOD BEING A CONSUMING FIRE

Hebrews 12:25-29 addresses Hebrew believers who entered into a covenant with God emphasizing the gravity of adhering to this covenant. God's response to lawbreakers is likened to a consuming fire, symbolizing His jealousy and judgment. Note the similarities in the Deuteronomy passage below. Note also that God, being a consuming fire, is not concerned with purifying sinners. Rather, that consuming fire is adversative judgment on lawbreakers. God being a consuming fire is an echo of this passage:

"Guard yourselves lest you forget the covenant of Yahweh your Elohim that He contracted with you, . . . for Yahweh your Elohim, He is a devouring fire, a jealous El" (Deut.4:23-24).

"Beware! You should not refuse Him Who is speaking! For if those escape not, refusing the One apprizing on earth, much rather we, who are turning from the One from the heavens, Whose voice then shakes the earth . . . we may be offering divine service in a way well pleasing to God, with piety and dread, for our God is also a consuming fire" (Heb.12:25-29).

Over the years, quite a number of Universalists have written articles on the internet message boards concerning, "Our God also is a consuming fire." From this statement they contend that God is the lake of fire. They rework the idea of God being a consuming fire into stating that God is purifying all the sinners in the lake of fire to make them presentable to Himself. Such a theological concept detracts from the outcome of what Christ accomplished for all mankind in His one act of listening to what God had Him do (Romans 5:18,19). Christ's one act guarantees the justifying of every human's life and guarantees that every human will be made righteous! fire excluded. Not only that, but, Christ giving Himself a ransom for all humans per 1 Timothy 2:6, is the basis of God saving all humans (1 Tim.2:4), fire excluded. Not to mention that all in the heavens and on earth will be reconciled to God, by the blood of Christ's cross (Col.1:20), not by fire. We must never detract from what Christ has accomplished for all mankind and the entire universe.
